Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1889.

No. 1.

Sacramento city has been called the "graveyard of newspapers;" possibly deservedly. It has, however, always supported able journals, and its press has ranked equal with that of the metropolis of California.

This journal is not a venture, and will not be a contribution to the list of our local newspaper failures. The plan upon which it will be conducted is: That WINFIELD J. DAVIS, W. A. ANDERSON and GEORGE A. BLANCHARD will be the editors, and A. J. JOHNSTON & Co. the printers and publishers. The editorial expression will be reviewed by all of the editors before publication. The paper will be literary in its character, and literary gentlemen and ladies, of Sacramento particularly, and of the State generally, will be invited to contribute to its columns.

An impartial review of social happenings and carefully prepared criticisms of musical and dramatic events will be published.

The paper will be conducted on principles of fairness. Its publishers and editors have lived in this community the greater portion of their lives; they have enjoyed the respect and confidence of their fellow citizens; they will aim, in the exercise of the delicate, yet important, power which they secure in the control of a public journal, to still further entitle them to public respect and confidence. They will present to this people a clean paper, which shall contain no matter unfit to be read in the parlor of any citizen, in the presence of his wife and children.

No man connected with the paper depends upon it for support or remuneration, and is not in a position that he will permit that to be published which will inflict a life lasting pang to any innocent man, woman or child. We are not in the business of publishing scandal and filth, that may cater to the depraved, that we may profit from the sale of a few papers.

This journal will be strictly personal in this: Any person who feels that injustice has been done by any publication which we shall make, can come to the office, and will not be told that the paper is responsible, but will be referred to the particular individual who wrote the article, and if we are wrong, satisfactory retraction will be made. If any person in this community feels that he has been publicly unjustly attacked, he is at liberty to come to this office and have a fair and judicial hearing; if his complaint is meritorious, he will be permitted an opportunity of being set right before his fellow citizens, without having to pay a quarter of a dollar. We will pursue the policy of defending our people, rather than unnecessarily attacking individuals, but when occasions arise where the conduct of an individual must be criticized, and it is a matter of public interest that exposure should be made, justice will be done to the subject of the criticism and to the people.

We believe that there is ample room in a city of forty thousand inhabitants—a city populated by a refined and educated people, among whom are many of literary ability—for a paper such as we will publish. Its editors and publishers will never assume that because they have the control of a journal their opinions are of more weight or value than those of their fellow citizens, and will endeavor to use the power which they control, if the support of their neighbors and friends will be given to this journal, with discretion, and for the benefit of the people of Sacramento county. We will publish this paper to build up and benefit our community, and as we have indicated, no mother will open it tremblingly, anticipating that it will carry to the world the history of the indiscretion of her child, when such publication can benefit no one, can interest only the depraved, and will inflict a sting on the innocent which death alone will eradicate.

The events of the world, and, particularly, those occurring in the county of Sacramento on Saturday and Sunday morning, will be published in full.

Such criticisms as we will make of other journals will be directed solely to their editorial expression, and no reference will be made in that connection to any gentleman connected with our contemporaries. We will criticize contemporary literature in a dignified manner, and will expect the same consideration from other gentlemen engaged in the business of journalism.

The people are not interested in the internal business or personal affairs of newspapers, and the publication of such matters is an unjustified wastage of ink and paper.

We will assure the publication among us of a carefully edited literary Sunday morning paper, which will be the avenue of expression of the literary talent of this community; for, as we have indicated, we will solicit and expect to receive contributions to our columns from educated gentlemen and ladies.

THEMIS is our name. It is classical, yet expressive of our purpose. It means Justice; Law. When the world became so bad, and crime burst upon it like a flood, modesty, truth and honor fled. Astræa, the mother of Themis was the last to go. Jupiter, seeing this fearful state of affairs was angered, and summoned the gods to council. They obeyed, and the result of this council was the destruction of the world, and the gods and goddesses took up their abode in the heavens. It was a favorite idea of old poets that these goddesses would one day return to earth and bring back the Golden Age. Themis is the mother of the Fates—Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos, whose office is to spin the thread of human destiny, and they are armed with shears, with which they cut it off at their pleasure. Themis occupied her seat on the right of Jove by his throne to give him council.

Our THEMIS is to give council to our people, and do our part in bringing back the Golden Age; and, in the language of Pope's Messiah:

All crimes shall cease, and ancient fraud shall fail,
Returning Justice lift aloft her scale,
Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white-robed Innocence from heaven descend.

—Our system of government is of extreme liberty to the citizen. Every man is a sovereign, and, unrestrained by reason or responsibility, may assist in making laws to govern the people. Often the more ignorant, stupid or imbecile, the more likely he is to be selected to manage the great financial concerns of our cities, counties, or states, either as legislator, trustee or supervisor.

The extremely liberal right of suffrage has in the past, and will in the future, serve to fasten great burdens upon the people. The history of municipal affairs of all large cities—and Sacramento is no exception—discloses that at periods of their existence there were officers—sometimes fools, sometimes knaves, often both—who contracted debts, sanctioned obligations in such a form, without the shadow of foundation, and as "baseless as the fabric of a vision," as to fasten them upon posterity beyond the power of courts to grant relief. Our tax-ridden people have felt the dire influence of that system, which has recognized the fact that imbeciles and knaves in the light of sovereigns have been intrusted with that great power over the fiscal affairs of local self-government.

It is such government, born of extravagance and fraud, that has laden our people with burdens most grievous to be borne. Even of late years it has been difficult to secure men in our public offices who are able to grapple with these financial questions, or to relieve us from these early iniquities. Just now we need level heads; men versed in the science of government and competent to meet the exigencies of the occasion, to relieve this city, at least in part, from her burdens.

Among the immediate remedies for our unfortunate situation, is the adoption of a new and more compact form of municipal government, abrogating the various side governments, consisting of commissions, which were intended to be done away with by the new constitution; and the amendment or revision of our present charter. It seems at present impossible to secure the former, and there has been heretofore legal and constitutional objections to the latter, based upon the inhibition of the new constitution to special legislation. The judiciary committees of the several sessions of the legislature have invariably held that no city charter can be amended.

This question has never been presented to our Supreme Court for judicial determination, but other states, having the same inhibitory clause in their constitutions, have held that a city charter in force prior to the adoption of the constitution, can be amended and it will not be unconstitutional.

In Brown vs. City of Denver (2 West Coast Reporter, 620), this identical question was presented, and the amendment to the charter sustained. The State ex rel. Henderson vs. Boone Co. (50 Mo. 317), the State ex rel. Robbins vs. New Madrid (51 Mo. 83), and Hall vs. Bray (51 Mo. 288), hold the same doctrine. In the states of Kansas and Indiana, where there are the same provisions in their constitutions, similar views are held, as will be observed by consulting, the State of Kansas ex rel. Johnson vs. Hitchcock (1 Kansas, 178), and Gentile vs. the State of Indiana.

At the time this question was first presented to our state legislature, that eminent counselor, Geo. Cadwalader, expressed the opinion that amendments could be made to our charter without antagonizing the constitution. Hon. Grove L. Johnson was a member of the Senate judiciary committee, and was the only member who concurred in this view. In the light of the above adjudication it must appear that amendments can be made, and which will not be an infraction of the constitution.

Now, if this can be done, why are not some measures, tending to relieve us of much of our embarrassment, taken by the members from this county? Much is needed. When this is determined upon we will endeavor to assist the good work by pointing out some radical changes.

One radical change necessary, is that pertaining to our system of selecting school directors. There should be some standard of qualification for those who are to govern our schools, and supervise the education of our youth, other than the caprice of a committee or whim of a convention. Men selected for such positions should be competent to pass upon the qualifications of teachers, and well enough informed to examine a class in the ordinary rudiments of learning. While the highest order of education may not be practicable, still, at least, some degree of knowledge should be exacted before any one is placed in such a position of honor, power and trust. We merely call attention at this time to this matter, intending hereafter to give at length our views upon this very vital question of local self-government.

It is remarkable to note what changes in the character of our inhabitants within the past few years have occurred. Go to a theater, party, public gathering of any kind, and the old citizen who has spent his life in our midst, will fail to recognize one half of the faces he meets. This discloses that people from different quarters of the earth have come amongst us, and are fast installing their peculiar habits and customs over ours. The newcomers are of a different turn of mind, and our old, generous, prodigal, reckless custom is fast being supplanted by the more economic and matter of business system of our stranger citizens. It is only among the "old timers" that the old-fashioned "come up, boys, and take something," exists. The newcomer either abstains from all these luxuries, or else quietly goes up to the bar, calls for his beer, drinks it alone, and departs.

In other business matters, it is particularly noticed that the same free and easy manner does not obtain, but the newcomer carefully examines all the facts, surroundings, and only deals with you after the most circumspect deliberation. The lesson that these facts should teach our pioneer citizens, who have grown into prodigal habits, is, that they should improve by the experience and bring themselves to realize that the "days of old, the days of gold" are fast departing, and that it is now time to prepare for a cloudy day.

The announcement of the death of Belle Boyd, who, it is said, was murdered, recalls a chapter in her life, where the scene was laid in Sacramento, and which has never been published. In 1870 or '71, Belle Boyd came here with her husband, Col. Hammond. They had with them one child, a daughter, called Gracie, aged about seven years, and the daughter of a former husband. While here they occupied rooms in the Mansion House, where the writer of this sketch was at the time a roomer.

Flaming posters appeared on the bill-boards that Belle Boyd, the rebel spy, would give Shakespearean readings at the Metropolitan theater. When the night announced arrived, there was but a very small audience and the enterprise was an absolute financial failure. Belle Boyd was taken suddenly ill, and to make matters worse the couple was entirely without means—destitute. Belle Boyd became dangerously ill; in fact, perfectly insane, and the writer called in Dr. F. W. Hatch to attend her. After recovering sufficiently to be able to converse, it was deemed best to provide for her little girl, Gracie, and it was determined that she should be placed in the hands of Father Scanlan, to take to the Sisters at San Francisco, where she was taken by Father Scanlan. Meantime the wife of the writer, and a number of ladies made the case one of charity, and raised a purse of several hundred dollars. While here another child was born, a girl, and who is now known as Pearl Younger, having married in Texas. Pearl is now 19 years old. Gracie, if living, is about 26 years.

Belle Boyd, as far as can be learned, never came back for Gracie, and if she is alive, her whereabouts can only be ascertained through the Sisters of Mercy at San Francisco. We doubt the story of Belle Boyd's identity with Belle Storr, and think the genuine Belle Boyd lives in Florida.

Would not a bill of fare like the following be much more in accord with our democratic ideas, than the unintelligible "menu" we find at our leading hotels:

A mild-mannered feast to Gov. Billy Bunn, in which oysters, a bit of broth, a fish, a saddle of mutton, a touch of terrapin and a royal canvas-back duck do not play an important part, and which may be washed down with some of the tawny juice of the Tuscan grape.

Why not permit this style to supersede the formal menu usually presented in pigeon French?

It now seems that coal can be and is used for creating ice. We have always been taught to realize that coal is bottled sunlight. Now it appears the very opposite to heat and light, namely, extreme cold can be produced from this wonderful commodity. Here is a practical illustration of a case where extremes meet.

There is a mistaken idea among some of our people that the "Monroe Doctrine" applies to the Samoan affair. In the diplomatic message of Monroe, relating to the Russian and English governments, and their possessions on this continent, he said:

"The occasion has been judged proper for asserting, as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power," and "we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety."

Thus, it is apparent, that this doctrine does not include any of the isles in the distant part of the Pacific.

The news from Hayti indicates that the natives have relapsed into their natural practices of voodooism; that their revolting cannibalistic propensities have again seized upon them.

An account of the rite practiced by Hippolyte and his army, where a young girl was roasted alive, and her palpitating flesh divided among the soldiers, is most revolting. A number of years ago a traveler among the Pacific isles, gave an instance of a young chief ordering his beautiful young wife to prepare a wood pyre, after which he compelled her to arrange and light the fire, then he killed, roasted and ate her. This is a practical illustration of a man loving his wife enough to eat her. It seems that there is some hidden power in their composition that renders this desire for human flesh as food an absolute religious frenzy.

The position taken by Senator Dray in relation to the bill to appropriate money for an exhibit of California products in the city of London is correct, and is sustained by the thinking people of this community. We must assume that English merchants are advanced; that they acquaint themselves with the merchantable products of the world; and that if they find merchandise in California which they can handle with advantage they will not be slow to seek our market. Our houses of exportation have direct communication with firms in the metropolis of England, and with those of other consuming countries. Precisely why this State should be called upon to expend a quarter of a million of dollars to maintain an apple stand in the city of London is not for us to explain. Of course it will be of benefit to the gentlemen who will be employed to polish the apples and rub the fuzz from the peaches. Our commercial relations with the British have always been amicable. As early as December, 1773, England invited trade with us. It wanted to sell us tea. It sent a ship load to Boston harbor. The Americans took all of it. There followed a large immigration from England, by direction of the king, and the newcomers were dressed in gaudy red coats, that they might attract the attention of our people. They attracted. The people of America received them with processions, marshaled by distinguished men—George Washington was the grand marshal—and cannons were fired. Many of these early immigrants became attached to our soil; they repose in it, and will until the blast of the last trump. If there is a surplus of $250,000 in the state treasury it can be spent to better advantage among our own people—on the soil of this continent.

We suspect that this London exhibit matter had its inception with the gentlemen who have volunteered to do the thinking for this people—the gentlemen who a few years ago drove out the Chinese—on paper; and who afterward erected the monument to the memory of General Grant. We have no criticism of the monument except that instead of being in honor of Grant, it commemorates the unpardonable folly of its projectors. We do not of course desire to question the good intentions of these gentlemen, who neglect their private concerns and wear out their brains for the benefit of the people of Sacramento. That they have accomplished nothing practical will of course be admitted; that so far they have done no harm, will not be questioned. We, however, have a future. Their periodical outbreaks in the past have only resulted in volleys of wind and the spilling of printing ink. If these wind storms are to be continued, will we be in a position to say that the northern and central citrus belt of California is exempt from tornadoes and blizzards? We believe in practical, local and state improvement—all of our people do. We are not, however, willing to fall in with the ideas of those who may find a following, believing that banana plantations can be successfully conducted in the upper Sierras, and that their products will supplant the imported fruits.

Sacramento city seems now to be infested with bold criminals. If the accounts published are to be relied upon, a citizen is not safe out of doors after nightfall, and in doubtful security in his castle. That we have many bad characters in the city must be admitted; that the condition of affairs is as represented must be denied. A bill has been agreed upon by the Police Commissioners to increase the number of officers. So far, so good. We suggest that the term of chief of police be lengthened, and that he be permitted to select his force. As it is now, the chief and the other commissioners are practically at the mercy of the unscrupulous small politicians. Under the threat of "knifing," they are forced to make their selections. What has been the result; where can improvement come under the present system? Is it not remarkable that the people of Sacramento have not been able to select a competent chief of police? Our recollection goes back to the time when Karcher was first in that office; he was not re-elected. Stevens, who succeeded him, was shelved. Afterward Karcher was deposed from his office; Jackson driven to his grave; Dillman adjudged incompetent; and now Lee is found wanting. The fault has not been with the men, but with the system. If either of the gentlemen named had been permitted to run his office, its conduct would have been satisfactory to the people. In every daily newspaper office the foreman of the printing department has the absolute control in the matter of the employment and displacement of his men. The owner of the establishment never voices. The result is that the composing room is equipped with competent men; the work is gotten out without hitch. No private employer would permit his help to be selected by those not in direct authority, and particularly would he demur to having an army of ward politicians dictate who should do his responsible work. We have seen too much of public life not to be insensible of the helpless position in which our officials are placed. A man elected to office is forced, under the penalty of political retribution, to appoint men to positions of responsibility who are absolutely incompetent to perform their duties, and who have to be directed on all matters except that of their salaries. We do not wish to be understood as joining in the journalistic denunciation of the police force that has been progressing in this city for the past twenty years; nor do we desire to be understood as holding the force up for the ridicule of the world, for we personally know that it comprises many excellent officers. We say, however, that improvement can be made. If a system can be devised that will place the chief of police beyond the reach of the oppression and threats of the toughs and the gentlemen who claim to have political influence, all will be well. We believe that an amendment to the police law, lengthening his term and permitting him to select his subordinates, will accomplish the desired result.

We have casually glanced over the history of the United States "compiled under the direction of the State Board of Education," and one of the California state series of text books. It contains errors that cannot be excused. On page 288, Wm. P. King is recorded as having been a vice-president of the United States. On page 303, it appears that Edwin P. Stanton was Lincoln's secretary. On page 353, William L. Evarts seems to have had control of the state portfolio under Hayes. Coming down to the history of California, we learn, for the first time, that John W. Marshall discovered gold at Coloma; that David C. Broderick was born in Massachusetts; and that in 1852, our electoral vote was cast for Pierce and Graham. We have not examined the work critically. It certainly is disparaging to the State Board of Education, and if the balance of their works can be judged by this, it would be economy for the state to discharge the members of the board and fill their places with intelligent school children. The time that has been consumed in the preparation of these works, and the money that has been expended upon them by the state, justifies competent men in producing at least creditable publications. There is no reason in the world why these compilations should not have been compiled long ago, and why they should not be about perfect. We know that, from some quarters, there has been a disposition to cripple the project of the State publishing school books for her children. From the manifested disposition of the people, it is a very dangerous proposition to fool with. It strikes us that the state board should evince some signs of vitality, and that it should exercise sufficient care, that its works will not be punctuated with absurd and inexcusable errors.

The proposition of placing horse cars on the electric road for the time being should be encouraged. The gentlemen who projected the system, and whose money is now tied up in it, have acted in good faith. We opine that no careful business man would invest very much capital pro bono publico in electric cars at the present time. That cars can be propelled by electric power has been demonstrated; that profit can be realized at present by a road so operated is very questionable. Improvements are constantly being made, and perfection nearer arrived at in the application of electric power. Time will soon come reasonably when steam will become a thing of the past, and electricity will move the wheels. At this time, and in view of what can reasonably be expected in the way of invention and application in the near future, we believe that the owners of the central road act wisely when they conclude to bide a short time; determine not to purchase very expensive motors, which will become obsolete perhaps in a year, and hold themselves in readiness to take advantage of the perfection of improvement. The people encouraged them to engage in this enterprise; they have put up their coin; they have had no returns. If their project is successful, the advantage will be greater to the people generally than to the owners of the road. Let the horse cars run, and we venture that within a year, with the invention of more economic production of electric power, the horses will be relegated to the plow and wagon.

Book Chat.

"The Despot of Broomsedge Cove." By Charles Egbert Craddock (Mary N. Murfree). Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers. For sale by C. S. Houghton, Sacramento.

The story is one of life among the mountaineers of the Great Smoky Mountains, and is excellent in its descriptions, although somewhat prolix in detail and dialogue. The many superstitions of the uneducated people of the mountains have a place. Such, for illustration, as the burning of an elm log upon a fireplace being the sign of death in the family; the chair upon which a coffin has rested will always squeak thereafter, and whoever sits upon it and produces any rickety noise will suddenly die.

The author has given a picture of the effect of a religious fervor upon an illiterate mind. And the peculiar dialect of the people of that "deestric," is true to life. There is a satire upon jury trials. The plot embodies variety, and discloses how a poor victim who is innocent of the crime of murder—although the whole community believes him guilty—but through the accusations is actually led to commit the counterpart of the crime charged.

"Hermia Suydam," Mrs. Atherton's last novel, has been advertised as immoral, and of course the desire to read it is great. The rumor of the publishers' refusal to publish it for that reason was a pure fiction, and the idea was borrowed from scenes laid in the book itself, where among the guests of Hermia the young authors make a jest over the great virtue, from a financial point of view, of giving out the statement that their work is sensual or verges upon the realms of immorality. The wild, fanciful notions of Hermia, and her cravings for something not of earth, are but a very rough character of the sensual. The ideas are but an imitation of "Moths," "Idalia," "Princess Daphne," and particularly the character of Mrs. Carr "Dawn," but lack that smooth, gentle tincture of shadiness, that is embodied in those tales. There is no moral ending to Hermia, while even Zola and Madame Rene always teach a moral after the sensual. There is but little originality in "Hermia Suydam," and like "The Quick or the Dead," we find Abbe le Provost and Gauthier, are fruitful sources of the author's inspiration. The reading of Ouida, Zola, Sardou, or Gauthier, would scarcely be as likely to endanger the morals, as novels of the character of "Hermia Suydam." The former have moral lessons, the latter none.

"Beyond the Grave," by John Franklin Clark, is a short drama. It is clearly unsuited for stage effect, being of very lengthy dialogue. A very vivid imagination would be required to reconcile the three scenes of Baltimore, Philadelphia and the Elysian Fields. The plot is a portrayal of the doctrine of Spiritualism, including the exploded fraud of spirit rapping and table turning. There is, however, a vein of sentiment pervading the poetical efforts of the author. Spherism also finds a prominent place in the poem. The Spherist is an entirely different belief from Spiritualism. The spirit characters are Edgar Allan Poe, Aaron Burr, Tasso, the spirit poet-father of Poe, Sappho, his poetess spirit-mother, and Leonore, his angel-bride. The other dramatis personae are of the earth, earthly, and very commonplace. Published by the American News Company, New York.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

The New York Sun, in an interview with a noted manager, gave expression to the fact that actors are not admitted within the circle of first-class society on account of their reckless and indiscreet habits. Not because they are not, in many instances, gentlemen, but because they forget to act the full part of gentlemen.

Fathers with young daughters, and in fact any head of a family who has around him young girls, and who is familiar with the life and habits of actors, would not permit them to enter the threshold of their homes. The reason for this exclusion appears in the fact that actors, generally, at once take advantage of their dramatic powers to impose upon feminine weakness and romantic dispositions, thus, in many instances, bringing ruin upon those whom they should protect. That grand little comedy, "David Garrick," teaches a lesson that should guide every gentlemanly artist, and prompt him to guard the romantic rather than lure them to their destruction. It seems to be almost the universal rule that handsome and accomplished actors have an inordinate weakness to make conquests of the romantic girls, and then boast of their success. It was such a report of actor Bellevue that caused his exclusion from the fashionable clubs. There are of course many actors who ought not to be classed with the above; but such is the general sentiment in the prominent circles of society, that the doors are closed against all.

We have been regaled this last week with a surfeit of amusements. Eunice Goodrich and her comedy company successfully held the boards of the Clunie Opera House for the week. The Loan Exhibition at the Crocker Art Gallery has been a source of much entertainment, and has been a financial success.

For weeks at a time we are without any dramatic or musical entertainment in this city. Theatrical managers cannot, at all times, furnish companies or combinations. It is possible that the days of good stock companies may supersede the specialty combinations, and then we may have some of the good legitimate drama. But what we started out to say is: Why do not the young gentlemen and ladies of this city, many of whom possess fine dramatic and comedy qualities, organize into a society for the purpose of promoting their love for the divine art, and at the same time afford amusement for the masses? In the past, temporary organizations have presented some excellent performances for charitable purposes. Now, let some of the lovers of the drama move in this matter, and effect a permanent association. Where is Albert Hart? The McNeill Club is good, and fills part of the space needed. But the votaries of the histrionic art should follow the example of the McNeill Club and organize for business.

Kittie Mayhew is now starring in the role of Fanchon. We remember when Kittie was a member of the Hooley company, with James O'Neill, Louise Hawthorne, W. H. Crane, A. D. Billings, Hastings, Emma Wilmot, and other artists. She then displayed a high degree of dramatic art. Maggie Mitchell was at one time considered the great Cricket. Then came Alice Kingsbury, who created a perfect furor in that character, with John McCullough as Landrey Barbeau; Dave Anderson as Didier, and Mrs. Stewart as Fadet. So great a favorite was she in this city, that the citizens, through Judge H. H. Hartley, presented her with an elegant jewel, studded with diamonds. It is said Kittie Mayhew is fully the equal of either Maggie Mitchell or Alice Kingsbury in this character. She has occupied the boards in this city for a week recently, and disclosed that she is a great Fanchon. She will manage the Standard theater, at San Francisco, in the future.

Helen Modjeska has honored Sacramento with two creations of Avon's immortal bard: "As You Like It," and "Cymbeline." This eminent lady is an artist in the truest sense of the word. Her interpretation of Shakespeare's pastoral comedy, and the rare old drama, "Cymbeline," have never been equalled. There are but few of Shakespeare's plays where women can shine as stars, and "Cymbeline" is one. Imogen is the personification of all that is true and noble in woman, who, while Leonatus, her husband, roughly lays a wager with Iachimo upon his wife's virtue, she vindicates her womanly virtue by a contemptuous repulse of this rake. Her ardent love for Posthumus is something grand, and, with Madame Modjeska, it is realistic to such a degree that the auditor forgets the imperfect speech. Mr. Vanderfelt is a fine actor, and his scene with Iachimo (Mr. Henley) was exceedingly fine. Geo. Osborne is one of the best character actors on the boards, but unfitted for Cloten. Pisanio (Mr. Walton) has a conception of Shakespeare's lines superior to any of the company, but unfortunately has an impediment in his speech which detracts from his merits. We like Madame Modjeska in Imogen better than in Rosalind.

Among the members of Kate Mayhew's stock company of the Standard theater, we notice a talented Sacramento girl. Her stage name is Clyde Heron, but her true name is Lucy O'Brien. For a number of years she was a teacher in our public schools, and was always one of the foremost to aid in any charitable undertaking. Her elocutionary accomplishments were often utilized by our public. As a member of W. E. Sheridan's splendid dramatic company Miss O'Brien shone out in a fine light and disclosed a superior order of histrionic art. If this accomplished young lady had a tithe of the opportunities or backing that some of those upstart alleged stars are accorded, she would eclipse many of much greater pretensions.

The management of C. P. Hall of the two theaters in this city has given excellent satisfaction. The recent engagements have not, as heretofore, been limited to the Bush street combinations, but Baldwin attractions, under Al Hayman, have been presented.

Mary Anderson has learned that it is a very dangerous thing to fool with a pen. General McComb—genial John—now realizes that an indiscriminate use of the pen is not likely to be for his ultimate benefit.

"The old gray goose quill,
Torn from thy parent bird to form a pen,
That mighty instrument of little men."

The act of the Players' Club in black-balling Bob Ingersoll was beneath the act of gentlemen. The idea of black-balling such a genius, and excluding him from any club, literary or otherwise, save, perhaps, some orthodox association, is inexcusable. Some petty personal matter must have prompted this affront to one of America's greatest citizens.

Conried's Opera Company opened here on Thursday night. The romantic and spectacular production of "The King's Fool" was given with a cast and scenic effect seldom if ever seen on this coast. The scenery was new and grand. Particularly so was the camp at Pampeluna, which disclosed cascades, rocks, foliage, and a general scene true to nature. The costumes are simply dazzling. The music sweet and fascinating, with that tuneful harmony that the grand opera is often lacking.

There were three of the most exquisite singers who combined that rare quality in operatic artists, the histrionic art. Helen Bertram is a perfect model for an artist, and rich in voice. Ada Glasca is pretty, petit; an actress as well as a superb soprano. The manner in which she rolls those lustrous eyes is a wonder. Little Della Fox, the soubrette, reminds us much of Lotta in her palmy days. The male artists were fair, but not up to the standard of the feminine portion of the company. W. H. Fitzgerald did some good work as the King's Jester. De Lorme was in excellent voice. The chorus was large and good. Over 60 people were on the stage at one time. A new feature was presented, never before introduced on this coast, that of eight Vienna ladies who gave exhibitions, to the music of the opera, of foil, sword and dagger fencing. Such strong and novel combinations as this which Mr. Conried has drawn together must per force win public favor.

Next Monday Georgie Woodthorpe, with her regular company, will commence an engagement for one week. "Among the Pines," "Poor Jo," "Alix," and "The Two Orphans," will constitute the attractions.

Lillian Russell of the New York Casino, refuses to appear in tights. Pauline Hall snappishly says it is because her knees are crooked. Lillian's sister comes back at Miss Hall by saying that it would hurt Miss Hall's voice to appear in tights, because "she never had any." "Never had any" tights or voice—which? It is one of the characteristics of the stage in these degenerate times, that actors and actresses alike often appear in numerous tights of a very different order.

It is to be greatly regretted that those sterling artists, Louis James and Marie Wainwright, have separated. A more genial couple, apparently, did not live. Marie Wainwright is one of the few women who are the ideals of Shakespeare. Louis James, her husband, is an artist of the first order. Now comes their family trouble which is a shock to the public, as well as the rending of loving hearts. It is only another instance of the looseness of the silken bands between actors and actresses.

General McComb on the Stand.

The Assembly Committee of Ways and Means has been for the past week investigating the affairs of the State Prison, under Warden McComb. Some sixty odd letters were read before the Committee, purporting to have been written by Gen. McComb to Captain Chambers, Secretary of State, Hendricks, formerly a State Prison Director, and J. N. Vera, formerly assistant clerk at the State Prison, under McComb, now clerk in the Secretary of State's office, identified the letters as being in General McComb's handwriting. The letters referred to contain matters, which appears to be very damaging to McComb, Captain Chambers and several others connected with the prison management.

Yesterday afternoon General McComb came up in obedience to a subpoena from the committee. He took the witness stand, and when the chairman requested him to take the letters and examine them, and state whether they were genuine or not, he said he did not desire to go into that matter before the Assembly committee at present for the reason that there was a Senate committee going to investigate the matter; that he did not consider the Assembly committee was vested with as much authority in this matter as the Senate committee. Also that the Governor is to investigate the affairs of the prison, and he desired a postponement until after the Senate committee met, as they would probably meet jointly, and he would testify fully in regard to the charges. He understood from the wording of the subpoena that he was only required to testify in reference to the expenditures, and that he was prepared to do so.

Assemblyman Mathews desired to have the witness' attention called to a letter which stated that there never had been 14,000 sacks produced per day, whereas the Warden in his report states that the night shift in the jute factory was a success. The witness stated that he would like to be shown such a letter.

The Chairman: Here is the letter which refers to that matter. State whether or not you wrote that.

Gen. McComb: Yes, sir; I recognize the letter, and that is my writing. This is dated April 1st. The night shift was commenced about the middle of March. At that date that statement is true. But the statement that has been made before the committee that 14,000 bags had never been produced would leave a wrong impression. I am prepared to say undisputably, that 14,000 bags a day have been made, day after day. At the time this was written we had not got our weavers up to their speed, and as it says, we had not reached the proper result, and I say here, "we must push the night shift up with the utmost speed so as to make 14,000, even if we do not keep it at that average." I was trying with all my energy and all the power that I had to have the work pressed forward.

The witness was asked what advantage there would be in dropping the night shift and establishing a double plant for the day shift. He stated that there would be very little gained to stop the night work and run entirely with day work with a double plant. The difference would be very slight.

Q.—Here is a letter relating to the $26,000 puzzle. State whether that was written by you.

A.—That was written by me. The explanation of that is to my mind very simple. The reports appear to show that much difference, and in order to explain where the difference is we must show tangible things that have been purchased in excess. Now, in the course of six months or a year one forgets this expenditure and that expenditure, and I wanted to have it presented to me in such a way that I can explain in case I am called upon to explain to the directors. Of course there was an increased number of prisoners, as we had a transfer of 150 prisoners from Folsom, and we had better rations.

Q.—There is one question I want to ask you. There is a tenor running all through these letters directed to Captain Chambers and Scrivner to the effect that these positions around the prison are at the disposal of the bosses in San Francisco; that they make claims and receive patronage. Is that a fact or not?

A.—They receive just the same consideration as other distinguished men. If you should write for your friend, as members of Assembly and Senate do, the letters would be put upon file, and they will be appointed if possible. We have letters from everybody.

Mr. Stork: How many men are there on the force now through the influence of Higgins or on the recommendation of Higgins?

A.—I really do not know; probably seven or eight.

Q.—How many through the influence of Buckley?

A.—Maybe five—four or five. I answered it frankly. Perhaps I ought to have taken a reservation on that Captain Thomas was there through influences—I would not say that. I say through influences I would not care to state. Of course, you will understand, Judge Stork, that a great many of those men were there when I went there.

The Committee then adjourned to next Monday evening at 7:30.

Political Snaps.

Candidates are numerous for the various offices within the gift of the National Executive. Sacramento has her quota.

The postmastership of the city is of course sought after. The candidates for the place, so far, are V. S. McClatchy, J. O. Funston, J. O. Coleman and Christopher Green.

It is very difficult for any citizen to make a selection from among these gentlemen, and either would be satisfactory to our people. Mr. McClatchy has been raised in this community; is a controller of a daily newspaper. Mr. Coleman has taken active part in local improvements. He has sacrificed time and ability to advance the interests of Sacramento. Mr. Funston has grown up among us. He has been identified with the business interests of the city for years, and enjoys the confidence of all who know him. Mr. Green has served us as Mayor, and has filled other responsible positions creditably, including postmaster.

The revenue collectorship attracts the attention of Jud. C. Brusie, Geo. W. Ficks, and C. C. Mason. Brusie is a young man raised in Amador county, and his people elected him to the legislature. His record is creditable. Ficks has been a member of the Grand Army, and has lived in this community for years. Mr. C. C. Mason is a prominent physician and politician of Butte county. His backing will command attention.

For Register of the Land Office the candidates are Ed. F. Taylor, Chas. N. Post, Geo. E. Lukins, and E. W. Roberts. Mr. Taylor at one time represented the people of El Dorado in the legislature, and served a term in the office now under consideration. Mr. Post is a Sacramento raised man. He has served the people among whom he has been raised satisfactorily in positions of responsibility. Mr. Lukins has a strong following from El Dorado county, and from the district outside of Sacramento. Mr. Roberts has been a senator of Nevada county, has filled important positions and is a lawyer of ability.

For Receiver of the Land Office, Chas. F. Gardner has a strong petition.

Coming down to local matters, we have a spring election to take place in March. This journal is Republican, and will support the ticket of that party when the nominations shall have been made. We believe that a paper should be as a man, with defined opinions. We have little respect for independent movements and none whatever for the "independence" which means treachery to the Republican party. We are straight. When a convention of our party nominates a ticket, it will receive our support without consideration.

For Second Trustee there have been mentioned John Ryan, P. S. Lawson, George Murray, Wm. Tebbetts, R. W. Parker, Antone Brewer and John Stevens. Ryan has filled the office for a term. Lawson is a pioneer citizen against whom nothing can be said. Tebbetts is well known. Parker has been in business among us for years and was at one time sergeant-at-arms of the assembly. Brewer has been among us for years, and held offices of trust; an old fireman and popular among the boys. Murray is a contractor, has conducted an extensive business, is a man of unquestioned integrity. Stevens is an old resident, and has a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. It has been intimated that W. F. Knox will not refuse the nomination. He has already served in that capacity, and has been a member of our School Board.

For the office of Auditor, the Republican candidates are E. H. McKee and James Doody. Mr. McKee has filled the office with credit. Mr. Doody possesses equal qualifications. Either is acceptable.

For Assessor the candidates are John F. Slater, J. J. Buckley, Fred A. Shepherd and A. R. Conklin. Mr. Slater has been a member of the Board of Education and a Fire Commissioner. Mr. Buckley is the present incumbent of the office. Mr. Shepherd was formerly the Assessor of the city, and afterward the chief deputy in the office of County Assessor. Mr. Conklin has served in municipal capacities in the East and has represented his district in the Board of Education here.

Geo. A. Putnam has virtually a walk-over for the City Collectorship. He has held the office for a number of years. His administration has been clean; he has been repeatedly re-elected; the people have acted wisely; his place is beyond politics; he will be nominated without opposition and re-elected.

For Fire Commissioner the contest for the Republican nomination seems to lie between M. A. Howard and George B. Blue; possibly C. H. Hubbard may be named. Mr. Howard was identified with the fire department under the volunteer system. Mr. Blue has been in business among us for years. Mr. Hubbard is the manager of the business interests of Baker & Hamilton, in this city. A veteran soldier.

The support of this paper will be given to a ticket composed of any of the gentlemen whose names we have mentioned, and we believe that from the available material, nominations can be made on the Republican ticket of men whose election will be unquestioned. We have no sympathy with those who drift to side issues and who regard self above party. We have confidence that the Republican Convention will present us a ticket which we can conscientiously support. We never have been a follower of the doctrine that there should be a divorcement of municipal affairs from politics. The experiment has been tried in this city several times; it has resulted in the defeat of the Republican ticket every time. It never has happened that a "reform" movement has done other than to elect a Democratic ticket.

It is now settled among the leaders of the Republican party, that Hon. W. W. Morrow and our Mayor, Eugene J. Gregory, will enter in the gubernatorial race. This will make a lively contest for Gov. Waterman. With either as the standard bearer, there could be no cause of complaint.

The American party promise to put a ticket of leading citizens in the field. They doubtless will.

The Democrats are evidently awaiting the movements of the others.

Our New Suburb.

The new railway suburb, known as Monte Vista, situated a little over a mile from the city on the Southern Pacific, is destined to become a very attractive place of residence. The innovation of putting town lots and fruit blocks on the market, supplied with pure, soft water under pressure, bordering the various avenues with such tropical evergreens as the orange and olive, and prohibiting for all time the sale of liquors in the colony, is attracting the attention which such enterprise deserves.

Besides our own citizens, people from outlying districts who are looking towards a residence in this vicinity, have expressed a desire to secure a home under such surroundings, and last week an application was made for a lot for church purposes, which the directors will probably donate.

Mr. Will C. Clark has offered to put in a Westinghouse electric light plant of one powerful arc light for the plaza, and 90 incandescent lamps for the town site, at so low a figure that the directors are inclined to accept the proposition if speculators don't gobble up the lots, and retard building operations.

Last night the Loan Exhibition at the B. B. Crocker Art Gallery closed with a social hop, which was in every way a fit ending to the long season of entertainment provided by the lady managers of the exhibition. It is seldom indeed that such a collection of art works has been on exhibition in Sacramento, and it is a matter of congratulation to the managers that the affair brought forth such a generous response from the public. The art gallery was crowded every night, and its priceless treasures were admired over and over again.

Invitations were issued yesterday for an affair which will prove a surprise to a lady who has been untiring in her efforts to assist the spreading of a taste for art in the community.

The widow of Antone Carizma is lying dangerously ill in this city. Mr. Carizma died suddenly about a month ago. He was a member of the Odd Fellows and Druids.

A. N. Buchanan has returned from an extensive visit to Mexico.

FLASHES.

A spring robin—The Legislature.

One thing legislators divide—Counties.

Fortune does not change men; it unmasks them.

Society welcomes only those who amuse or flatter.

Woman is more constant in hatred than in love.

One of the sweetest pleasures of woman is to cause regret.

Any one can be a wit—if he chews. Wit rhymes with spit.

Flow wine! smile woman! and the universe is consoled!

Wealth is often the ticket of admission to the dress-circle of society.

The devil is never so dangerous as when he quotes scripture to his purpose.

Let us from wit and genius fly.
To the axe, the cart or the pit hard by;
For by these one earns his daily bread,
By the other, only honor—when he's dead.

Al Johnson (calling through telephone)—Hello, Alex!

Alex—Hello, Al.

Al—There is a dozen purity fellows who want to subscribe for THEMIS if you will write a sound leader; but there is a dozen more down town chaps who will subscribe if Win Davis does the grand. What shall I do?

Alex and Win, in chorus—We'll give 'em both kinds.

DARING EXPRESS ROBBERY.

The Southern Pacific Railroad, Near Pixley, the Scene of Murder and Robbery.

[Special.]

Delano, Kern county, Feb. 22.—A most daring train robbery took place at a point about two miles south of Pixley, Tulare county, at 8 o'clock this evening. Train 17 left Pixley on time, and when two miles out two men crawled from the front of the engine, covering the fireman and engineer with revolvers and commanding a halt. When the train slowed up one of the men still held the fireman and engineer under cover, while the other went back to the express car and exploded a bomb underneath the car to scare the messenger, and said that unless the doors of the car be opened they would explode another one. The messenger responded, when one of the robbers sprang into the car, and, obtaining the keys, the valuables in the safe were taken.

After the train halted, a brakeman by the name of Anzon and Charles Gabert, of Poso, who boarded the train at Modesto, went up on one side of the car, and another brakeman and Ed. Bentley, deputy constable at Delano, on the other side, to see what was the trouble. When near the express car they were roughly ordered to halt, and at the same moment a gun loaded with buckshot was discharged by the robbers over the brakeman's shoulder, hitting Gabert in the head, death resulting instantly.

The parties on the other side of the car met a like reception, and Bentley was shot in the side and arm. His condition is very critical, and he will probably die.

Conductor Symington and his crew threw stones at the robbers, but were forced to retreat into the coaches. After forty minutes the robbers left, going to the west, and the train backed to Pixley, leaving there at 9 o'clock, one and one-half hours late, and picked up Gabert's body.

The robbers, who were five in number, took the mail and Wells, Fargo & Co's express box.

The passenger coaches were not molested.

San Francisco, Feb. 23.—In relation to the charge of Captain Thomas, that Lichteuberg paid Sonntag $700 on jute contract, Lichteuberg brands the statement as false.

A woman by the name of Ida Roberts was run over by a hack and dangerously injured.

SOMETHING NEW.—The depot of the Remington Typewriter, the standard and best machine made, is at 1007½ Fourth street, the only place in town to obtain supplies. Mrs. Irene S. Banton, the lady in charge, is also agent for the Stenograph, the wonderful little shorthand machine, and has formed a class. She gives a series of trial lessons to test the system. Call and see her, for we can recommend her work.

TURNER MASKERS.—The twentieth annual social event of the Sacramento Turn Verein, will be given at Turner Hall on Thursday evening, 28th inst. There is no more welcome event than the Turners' masque ball—select, amusing and most enjoyable. This year the subscription is limited, and only in the hands of a committee. Tickets at J. Lang's, 909 K street.

Among the most active and energetic members of the present legislature, and one who has evidently the interests of his local constituents as well as the whole state at heart, and who is free from all wrong influences, is Hon. Henry Hook, the member from Contra Costa.

Knights of Pythias.

This order celebrated the silver anniversary of its foundation on the 19th inst. Although only twenty-five years of age, it has grown to that proportion that it now stands one of the first among the fraternal organizations, and well may be proud of its history.

The order was founded Feb. 19th, 1864, in Washington, D. C., just prior to the close of one of the most vindictive intestine wars of ancient or modern history—a war that threatened to disrupt the relations of two sections of our glorious land of freedom. It was founded at a time when other organizations of a similar character had proven their inability to practically carry out their professions and precepts. It struck a popular chord and commended itself to all to whom its objects were divulged.

The basis of its principles is the story of the friendship of Damon and Pythias, whose devotion to each other as students of the Pythagorean doctrines, led one to offer himself as a hostage for the other, who had been condemned to death by the ruler of the city of Syracuse, in the third century, prior to the Christian era. The strength of these men's friendship for each other has been taken as a text from which is taught the lesson of pure, unadulterated, unselfish love and affection, and is held as an example to be followed by the members of the Knights of Pythias. The infinite depth of devotion in the lines of Pythias offering himself the willing hostage for his friend, condemned to the block, that Damon might not die without the boon of first clasping his wife and child in a last farewell, is touching beyond conception. Here is how they run:

Behold me, Dionysius, at thy feet!
Let Damon go and see his wife and child
Before he dies; for four hours respite him;
Put me in chains; plunge me into his dungeon
As pledge for his return; do this—but this—
And may the gods themselves build up thy greatness
As high as their own heaven.

Although founded only twenty-five years ago, the order has spread until to-day the lodges in the United States number over 3,000, with a membership of 300,000.

On March 26th, 1869, it established a lodge in California: to-day this state has 158 lodges, and 11,000 members. Sacramento has four lodges and one Endowment and one Uniform Rank.

On Tuesday last, in this city, was celebrated the silver anniversary of the order by laying the corner stone of their Pythian Castle, which is being erected at the corner of 9th and I streets. This will be the first temple of importance in the state. The several lodges assembled at their halls at 2 o'clock, and headed by a band and escorted by Sacramento Division, U. R. K. of P., marched through the principal streets, thence to Ninth and I, where over 3,000 people were assembled to witness the ceremonies of laying the corner stone. At the conclusion of the ceremonies addresses were made by several prominent members of the order.

The building will have a frontage of 40 feet on I street by 90 on Ninth, and will contain reception rooms, ante-rooms, a banquet hall and also a lodge room 38x60 feet. It will be constructed of pressed brick, with galvanized iron trimmings, and will be a credit to the order and an ornament to the city.

Revolting Charge.

An examination of the charge against one Harry Holmes, a member of the Salvation Army, with rape upon his 9-year old daughter, was held before Police Judge Buckley, yesterday morning. The case rests upon the statement of the child in most particulars, coupled with physical facts that make an ugly case. The defendant denied the acts charged. While all things connected with this case point strongly to the guilt of the accused, it is but proper that the prosecution should proceed with the utmost caution. We recall a case that occurred here about eight years ago, quite as revolting in its nature as this, and one on all fours in every respect, where the father was prosecuted, convicted and sentenced to a term of eleven years. Within six months afterward, the child and the prompter of the prosecution confessed to the wickedness of the prosecution, whereupon the accused was pardoned.

Thus it is the policy of the law, and in the interest of justice, to avoid the clamor of impulse and consider such cases with extreme caution. The charge being so unnatural, and one which it is very difficult to reconcile with a human act, that we write these words of caution.

Mistaken Identity.

Possibly the most amusing case of mistaken identity occurred this week. Ed. Amsden lives in the outskirts of the city; he is a real estate man; consequently rich. He owns hens; they lay eggs; eggs represent coin. Amsden had more eggs than he could market. He brought some into the city for a friend; and had a team that had to be held. His idea was to pick up some one and give him a ride to compensate him for holding his horses. Coming down H street he overtook a farmer-looking man and invited him to ride with him. The invitation was accepted. Amsden drove to the house of his friend, took the eggs in, spent considerable time at chatting. His horses were held by his guest.

The joke came when Amsden asked where his companion wanted to go. He said to the State House; and that he had an interest in the establishment. Amsden observed that Brown run the hotel, as he understood, alone. The man who had held the horses while the eggs were being delivered, indicated that instead of the State House hotel, he meant the capitol. Amsden took him there. Driving up the I street entrance he said to his companion, "Your face is very familiar to me, but I can't place you; I know that you live here. By the way who are you?" The reply was, "I am Governor Waterman." The governor of the State passed into the capitol shaking his sides with laughter, and Amsden wondered why an insurance agent could have made such a mistake.

What's the Matter With Sacramento?

The following telegram, published in the Bee, rather intensifies what we have said editorially in regard to the police system of this city. It means that we have on this coast a body of accomplished criminals—men who have made crime their study; it is their trade.

Woodland is becoming a rendezvous for vagrants and hard characters. Since the police of Sacramento have begun a warfare on them they have migrated to this place. Yesterday two daylight robberies were committed—one at the residence of S. M. Mann, where a watch, chain and some smaller jewelry were taken; also, the saloon of Ben Baker was robbed of a small amount. The county jail is full of toughs and thieves awaiting examination and trial.

If our police have driven them from our city, much good has been accomplished. If we can have a law passed to lengthen the term of the Chief of Police, and to permit him to run his office uninterfered by politicians Sacramento will not be hurt.

The Skating Rink.

There was a big crowd at the skating rink last night to see the race, and the result was considerable of a surprise. Crozier, who was a favorite, dropped out after the first mile and gave up. There were six entries, namely: Rogers, who was first; Toole, second; Davis, third; Donovan, fourth; Hawley, fifth; and Crozier nowhere. There was a good deal of tripping and talk of foul play by those who lost money, who were not a few. Rogers is declared champion of Sacramento, and offers to put up $200 against anybody in town.

A kid race was got up at the same time between George Berry, of San Francisco, and "Oregon," a Mexican youth. Berry won after a hot race, and calls himself the "kid champion" of Sacramento.

SEVERE INJURY.—A young man, Ed. Phelps, was driving a cart, and stopped in front of a store on Fourth and K streets, at which point his horse became unmanageable. The driver was thrown beneath the wheels, and severely injured about the head by a deep and dangerous wound, which cut his face and ear clean to the bone. A physician dressed the wound, and found injuries that may evidently be of a serious nature. The noise and turmoil of the crowd about the scene of the accident contributed largely to the accident. The horse became frightened and unmanageable. The injured man is one of Ben Crocker's employees.

It is claimed by Sam Jones, that his presence has caused gambling to be stopped. More likely the action of the Grand Jury, which came so near finding "true bills," had more to do with this sudden change of heart.

If some whose history has been written could return to life, how they would laugh at what has been said of them.

INFLUENCE.

They tell us that each pebble dropped
On ocean's glassy breast,
Must wake a pulse, in th' boundless deep
Whose ripples never rest.

But ever sweep thro' coral caves,
Or break on distant sands,
To kiss cold faces which the deep
Holds far from loving hands.

On eddies round the treasures lost,
Which her calm bosom hides,
But still forever ebbs and flows
Upon her changing tides!

They tell us that each word we speak,
Though ne'er so softly said,
Shall still be throbbing thro' the air
Long after we are dead.

And that, although we hear them not,
Around us ever ring
The laugh and sigh of long ago
The shifting breezes bring!

It may be that, with mighty words,
Like pulses on the deep,
We stir the hearts of other men
And rouse them from their sleep!

It may be that, each word we speak,
Like an echo on the air,
Though scarcely heeded when 'tis said
Yet leaves its impress there.

Howe'er this be—'tis God's decree,
We cannot live alone,
No one can fold his arms and say
My life is all mine own.

The life of each is bound to all
By cords we cannot sever,
A ripple that will never cease
Upon Time's mighty river!
But like the pulses of the tide,
Or the air which echoes still
So must the words and deeds of each
The lives of others fill.

—John F. von Herrlich.

MR. O. W. NORDWELL, who is well known as conducting a successful "fine trade tailoring" establishment at 218 Bush street, in San Francisco, has met the demands of the good dressers of Sacramento by opening a branch here and bringing in a line of imported woollens such as he alone carries. This new establishment, which opens an era in Sacramento tailoring, is situated at 520 J street and is in charge of Mr. J. E. Damm, one of the first cutters in San Francisco, who will be found the right man for the place. We welcome Mr. Nordwell to our midst and wish him as good a success as he enjoys at San Francisco.

Robert Anderson.

The death of Robert Anderson, which occurred on the 20th inst., removes from this community one of our oldest and most esteemed citizens. He identified himself with the business interests in the early days; he was successful; regret follows his death.

Several cases of small-pox are reported at Placerville.

SCRAPS FROM POETS.

Full Fledged and Alleged.

Lines read by a Bohemian when called upon for his contribution:

Baby in the cradle sleeping—
Angel child!
Smiles about its face are creeping,
Sweet and mild.
Would that I could share its dreaming,
See its heavenly visions gleaming,
Ah, how pure the baby's seeming, Undeified.

Fairest gems thou hast, replacing Earthly toys,
Rarest flowers thy realm are gracing
Rich thy joys—
Holy Moses! the kid is waking,
Night melodious he'll be making,
What a raking, shaking, quaking—
Stop! that!! noise!!!

Old Stage Coach Days.

We hear no more the clanking hoof
And the stage coach rattling by;
For the steam king rules the traveling world,
And the old pike's left to die.
The grass creeps o'er the flinty path,
And the stealthy daisies steal
Where once the stage horse, day by day,
Lifted his iron heel.

No more the weary stager dreads
The toil of the coming morn;
No longer the bustling landlord runs
At the sound of the echoing horn;
For the dust lies still upon the road,
And bright-eyed children play
Where once the clattering hoof and wheel
Rattled along the way.

No more we hear the cracking whip,
Or the strong wheel's rumbling sound;
And ah! the water drives us on,
And an iron horse is found!
The coach stands rusting in the yard,
And the horse has sought the plow;
We have spanned the world with an iron rail,
And the steam king rules us now.

The old turnpike is a pike no more;
Wide open stands the gate;
We have made us a road for our horses to stride,
Which we ride at a flying rate;
We have filled the valleys and leveled the hills,
And tunneled the mountain side;
And round the rough crag's dizzy verge
Fearlessly now we ride!

On—on—on—with a haughty front!
A puff, a shriek and a bound;
While the tardy echos wake too late
To babble back the sound,
And the old pike road is left alone,
And the stagers seek the plow;
We have circled the world with an iron rail,
And the steam king rules us now.

We Only Played at Love.

We only played at love, you see,
And yet to-day the memory,
Like faded tea-rose scent, to me
Comes floating hazy
As fleecy crowds across a moon,
Left out upon an afternoon,
Or as a waltzer hears a tune
Amidst the mazy.

I had to hold your hand, you know,
Because the "stage work" had it so;
I wonder did I let it go
Without a pressure?
Thus is it even things that were,
Remembered, make our pulses stir,
Nor even wisdom can demur
To call them treasure.

Not seven months had passed in turn,
Ere you were married; so I burn
These "acting" letters here, and turn
To other fancies;
But still 'tis very sweet to me
This finished little comedy,
I'm glad we played at love, you see,
And took our chances.

Graves.

The sad night-wind sighing o'er the sea and strand,
Haunts the cold marble where Napoleon sleeps;
O'er Charlemagne's bones, far in the northern land,
A vigil through the centuries it keeps;
O'er Grecian kings its plaintive music sweeps, Proud Philip's dust is by its dark wings fanned,
And near old Pharaoh's, deep in desert sand,
Where the grim Sphinx leers to the stars, it creeps.
Yet weary is it of this chill spectral gloom,
For mouldering grandeur it can have no care,
Rich mansoleums in their granite doom,
It would fain to leave to wander on elsewhere,
To cool the violets upon Gantier's tomb,
And hush the long grass over Baudelaire.

The Texas Tarantula.

Apropos to a brief reference in the Ledger a few days ago to the insect reported to be the deadly enemy of the huge black spider called the tarantula, Dr. Horn, Philadelphia's distinguished entomologist, sends us the following:

In the not too fertile parts of the region from Texas to California lives a large spider known to the inhabitants as the tarantula, and to naturalists as the mygale bentzili. Its body is two inches or more in length, clothed with rusty brown hair; the legs long, and when extended, covering an oval of four by five inches. As may be imagined the mygale is not a handsome insect, and, while it is looked upon with terror by most people, no one cares to handle it unless quite certain it is dead.

In place of the web which usually forms the house of spiders, the mygale usually excavates a burrow in the loose soil, from which it wanders in search of its prey, consisting principally of members of the grasshopper family or cicades. The jaws are large and powerful, armed with long, stout fangs, with which they can pierce and kill their prey. One full meal will at times supply their needs for several weeks. In fact, during the moult- ing period they remain torpid and take no food.

During its growth the mygale makes an unknown number of moults; that is, it sheds its outer coat when that has become uncomfortably close fitting, in the same manner as the common crab of our coast. At these moults members lost from the body by accidents are partially replaced; if the leg is lost the first moult produces a perfectly formed but short leg, subsequent moults increasing the size of the leg.

While the mygale is a dread to most forms of insect life, there is one of which it in turn stands in mortal terror. Abundant in the same regions is a large wasp with bluish-green body and golden-red wings. The body is about two inches long, the spread of wings nearly an inch greater. These wasps (pepsis formosa) fly uneasily about in search of food for themselves until they discover a "tarantula," when a more definite course of action is assumed. The flight of the wasp is now in circles around its prey, gradually approaching it, the mygale meanwhile, in terror, showing fight, standing semi-erect on the two hinder pair of legs. A favorable opportunity presenting, the wasp stings the spider and renews the circle flight, repeating the sting until the spider becomes completely paralyzed. When the wasp is assured of the helplessness of the spider it seizes him and drags him to a previously prepared nest. The eggs of the wasp are then deposited and the spider covered up. The eggs soon hatch, the spider is gradually eaten, and a new wasp appears to repeat the actions of its parent.

By the sting of the wasp the spider is not killed, simply paralyzed, so that during the time it is being fed upon it retains vitality, furnishing living food to the newly-hatched larvae, which by a curious instinct, feed first on those parts of the spider not essential to the maintaining of the little vitality remaining.

Our common mud-wasp, chlaybion, has similar habits. Its nests, made of elastic mud, are familiar to most people, as they are found abundantly in sheltered places about barns and other outhouses. These, when opened, will be found filled with spiders, in the helpless condition already mentioned, among them a larva and some partly-eaten spiders.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Supposed to be Over 1800 Years Old.

In the province of Canton are occasionally dug up ancient copper gongs or drums, which some say were made by the aboriginal Laos tribes, others say by Ma Yuan, the renowned commander who invaded Tong King in A. D. 41 and quelled the rising of the rebellious tribes against the Chinese, erecting a pillar of bronze on the extreme southern border of the "hill country." The Nan-hai Maio temple, at Canton possesses two of these curious monuments, one large and one small; the characters are mostly indecipherable, owing to the length of time they have been under the ground. The larger one was obtained from the tomb of a barbarian chief 1000 years ago, during the T'ang dynasty at Kao-chow; the smaller one at Sunchow. They are much valued as rarities by the Canton people. A very fine sounding one was dug up lately and presented by the finder to the Temple of Confucius.

The Hading Veil.

The Hading veil is only a suggestion of what Parisiennes can do in that line when they really wish to be sensational. The newest thing in French veils is one which the wearer can untie, pull out the string and raise the tulle to display her mouth and chin. Just how far the veil can be employed as a combination fly-trap, baseball mask, and impenetrable disguise with sliding attachments remains to be seen. There may come a time when you will have to drop a nickel into the slot of a fashionable veil to find out who is wearing it.—World.

The Emperor of China.

At last, after many delays, a consort has been selected for the ruler of China. The choice was left to the Dowager-Empress, who has found a helpmate for the boy Emperor in her own niece. The first detachment of fair competitors numbered several hundreds, all daughters of Manchu mandarins of not less than the third rank.

After several inspections, in which the beauty, family influence and intellectual attainments of the young ladies were taken into grave consideration, the list of fair aspirants was reduced to thirty. The discarded ones were consoled with a present to each of a yellow silken purse, with a tael (one and a half ounces) of pure silver. The thirty were again sent back to their homes to await the final choice, and the eagerness with which they looked forward to their next appearance in the palace, on which depended the chance of winning a seat on the throne, is best left to the imagination. At length, after many weeks of waiting, the imperial messenger summoned the thirty candidates to the palace again on the 27th of last month. The rites prescribe that on such great occasions each of the ladies should be dressed in silken robes of great richness, and that each should carry an embroidered tablet showing her clan, the name and rank of her father and the date of her birth. When we are told that the ages of the candidates varied from eleven to fifteen, we can readily understand that there could be none of the wonted difficulty of the west on the latter tender score.

More than a week elapsed before the final examination took place. An imperial decree, dated the 2d of November, announced that the Empress-Dowager had selected a young lady of great beauty, the daughter of her youngest brother, Gen. Kuei-hsiang, as the future Empress. This fortunate lady is about thirteen years of age, and her name is Yeh-eh-nala. After her marriage with the young Emperor, which is fixed for the 23d of February next, she will, of course, take another title. From the remaining fourteen, two sisters, the daughters of a high civil official, aged fifteen and thirteen respectively, were chosen for the imperial harem. The legal number of ladies in this latter establishment is seven; but the Emperor is not tied down by any arithmetical limit. Whether the choice of the Empress-Dowager is a wise one remains to be seen; that she was guided by natural leanings to her own clan, is obvious enough. But if the young Empress proves to have the family tact, wisdom and legislative ability of her royal aunt, the nation will have no cause to regret the selection.

The young Emperor, of whose life a few little incidents have of late crept through the high walls of the sacred city to the outside world, is described as of juvenile and simple appearance, very fragile, and very unlike his early warlike ancestors, who wrested the throne from the Mings. The lakes inside the palace grounds have lately been disturbed by numerous steam launches and a miniature flotilla of steamers, which were presented to His Majesty, through Li Hsing Chang, by enterprising seekers after contracts.

The boy-Emperor has taken the greatest interest in the strange little vessels, and great alarm was caused the other day by his insisting on jumping, like any other boy of seventeen or eighteen, on board without waiting for the gangplank to be laid down, and insisting on remaining till steam was got up. Unfortunately, there was no one among the crowd of high officials who knew anything about working such a craft, and His Majesty had accordingly to forego his excursion, much to his chagrin. So infatuated has he been with the toy railway sent to him from France, that he has, it is reported, ordered a large one to be laid down inside the palace, and he spends much time in riding in the miniature, but beautifully furnished little French carriages.

Witty Toasts.

Good after dinner speakers are among the most popular of men among people who cultivate the art of dining. The flashes of wit which draw forth roars of laughter and applause are sometimes unpremeditated, but probably they are more frequently thought out and rehearsed in advance. Impromptu or not, we all like a witty speech and a witty toast. Chambers' Journal has collected some witty and amusing toasts given at banquets, and, in reading them, one can only sigh, "Would I had been there!"

A rather cynical toast ran thus: "Woman—she requires no eulogy; she speaks for herself."

A gallant young man, under the same festive circumstances, referred to one member of the sex he eulogized as "a delectable dear, so sweet that honey would blush in her presence, and treacle stand appalled."

At the marriage supper of a deaf and dumb couple, one guest, in the speech of the evening, wished them "unspeakable bliss."

A writer of comedies was given a banquet in honor of his latest work, at which a jovial guest gave the toast: "The author's very good health! May he live to be as old as his jokes."

At another gathering were toasted "The bench and the bar: If it were not for the bar, there would be little use for the bench."

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, MARCH 3, 1889.

In our last issue we held that the charter of this city could be amended under the constitution. Our views are sustained by very many of the members of the bar. If we are correct, the matter is one of great importance to this people. That we are correct, we do not doubt. The inhibitory provision in the present constitution against local legislation is unreasonable and absurd; municipal governments in a state so large as California cannot be successfully conducted under Procrustean and unbending laws. What may apply to Oakland or Los Angeles will fail in Sacramento. The constitution provides for the relegation of municipal legislation to the communities directly interested. It is perhaps too late to expect legislation at this session, yet bills can be passed as matters of urgency.

There is one subject upon which reformation is particularly needed—the conduct of our public schools. The selection of school directors is now too near to ward politics. The custom is for the members of the city committees to make the nominations; courtesy permits the two members representing a ward to nominate the director from that ward. It has happened that members of committees have misused this delicate power. We are not to be understood as saying that the result has been that our boards of education have been composed of corrupt men. We do say that men have been selected against whom we could utter no criticism did we employ them to shovel sand. No man should be selected to exercise the important function of controlling our public schools, either as superintendent or director, unless he has a reasonable education; he should at least be able to acquit himself in a competitive examination with a pupil in the intermediate grades. The law should be changed to set the time for the selection of school directors at general elections or at the elections in March; the candidates should be nominated in open, popular convention.

The trustees of the City Library are so named and selected; that institution has so far been beyond the reach of politics; it has been conducted with credit. The education of our children is a matter of serious moment. It should be as far removed from politics as possible. The naming of the school board should be taken from political committees. It has happened, and will, under the present system, that men of limited education have the absolute say as to who shall control our public schools. It has happened that directors have been named without regard to their qualification to administer the duties of their offices; solely as to whether they could be depended upon to respond to the nod of the gentlemen of political influence, without whom it seems our primary public affairs cannot be administered. We enjoy, with every thinking citizen, contempt for the creatures who are in politics for gain; we are willing that they should have a reasonable latitude; some conspicuous evils seem necessary. However, when it comes to the molding of public education, we think it is about time that the line should be drawn.

We personally experienced a very practical illustration of the entire incompetency of some of the members whom the people would not have selected to administer the affairs of our schools had an opportunity been afforded for the expression of popular will. A vacancy occurred in the principalship of one of the grammar schools. The younger people of the city—persons who had been educated here, petitioned for the appointment of a lady to the place; they vouched for her competency and executive ability; they met opposition because she was a woman—England is ruled by a woman. She was appointed; her administration is not the subject of adverse criticism. It would be a wise idea to select some of our younger people on the school board; men or women, fresh from our public schools; it is well enough to educate our children in geology; we cannot be excused in making our school board an unornamental cabinet of fossils.

A state police department or detective organization, under competent management, would be an excellent thing. There could be such an arrangement that all the sheriffs and peace officers of the state could act in accord, and promptly, thus rendering the escape of those daring fellows who now are so successful in robbing trains and stages, a matter of impossibility. It must be understood in advance of any such legislation that this department is to be entirely free from any political influence, and only competent and experienced officers placed at the head of the association. The idea that the Governor shall be the supervisor of this plan is a good one, and should prevail. It is too late this session to consummate any appropriate plan, but it would be well to consider this matter in the future.

The public is most exacting in these progressive days. If an editor, orator, minister or lecturer has anything to say, it must be brief and to the point, else he will find no readers or auditors. Brevity is the order. Amid the push, rush and hurry of this world, the busy man has no time for long-winded or prolix work of any character, be it novel, poem, editorial, or speech. It is an age of epigram. The work of the writer must be like that of the skillful surgeon upon the injured body—quick and decisive. We must take time to make the expression of our ideas short. An eminent divine once said that he did not have time to make his discourses shorter. This age demands that the time be taken. Brevity is truly the soul of wit.

If President Harrison adopts the following suggestion there will be no necessity to employ the old democratic slogan: Keep the rascals out in the first instance, and there will be no necessity to turn them out.

We appreciate the kindly notices of our first issue by the Record-Union, the Bee, and other contemporaries. We will reciprocate when opportunity will be afforded.

Our contemporary, the Leader, came out Sunday in a full new dress. The appearance of the paper was excellent, both from the matter contained and the artistic arrangement. We wish our contemporary all success. There is plenty of room for us both.

No man in this state was more widely known than Henry Edgerton—the bright, witty, eloquent, genial, though erratic Henry. His sad and untimely demise was a blow upon literature, eloquence, art and oratory, felt by every class of people in this state. Many historical reminiscences of this brilliant man might be recalled from his contact with the people, in the halls of legislation, at the bar and upon the rostrum. A little incident, which forms the subject of this article, occurred only a few days before his death. Henry, as was his habit when in this city, made the State Library his resort. He was only at home among books, at the bar, or upon the rostrum. There were a number of young students of law seated at the tables of the law department of the State Library, and Edgerton, in his own restless manner, was pacing up and down the room, occasionally giving expression to some idea, which kept the hearers in raptures of expectation. Finally he mentioned Blaine's book, which had just been published. He had carefully read it, and proceeded in his masterly manner to review its contents.

"Blaine," said Henry, "is a great man, but his book is not on a level with his genius. There is not a page of brilliant thought in the whole book. Blaine as a book writer is a failure. His forum is the House of Representatives, where he has no superior. He would never make a good Executive. His flashes of wit, his eloquence, is only for that forum; no other."

Now, this all occurred before the Chicago convention, and while Edgerton was a warm supporter of Blaine, he did not think it policy to nominate him again for the Presidency. It will be remembered that Edgerton was the messenger selected to cast California's vote for Blaine in the Electoral College. Edgerton continued his remarks, as he paced the floor: "Blaine is a great man, and can shine only in the halls of Congress. By the way," said Edgerton, "we have produced some of the greatest minds, deepest thinkers, most brilliant orators, of any state in the Union. Look," said Henry, "at Col. Ed. Baker, the old grey eagle! There was my ideal of greatness as an orator, statesman and soldier. What grander eloquence either in ancient or modern times, do you find than in his oration at the first laying of the Atlantic cable, spoken in front of the Western Hotel at the time. Then his matchless defense of Senator Peck, for alleged bribery in the famous Broderick-Gwin contest. I tell you boys," continued Henry, "that Col. Baker, Ed. Tompkins, and Wirt Pendegast, had few equals! When it comes to this line," said he, "I am no slouch myself, and it takes a pretty able man to lift me out of my boots."

The latter remark is eminently true. No more brilliant orator or scholar ever trod the halls of Congress, or appeared at the bar, or upon the rostrum than "our Henry." Yet harsh fate so ordained that he never attained the ambition of his life—Congress.

We notice that one of the numerous libel cases against the Bee is set for trial. This particular case is that of Eli Mayo, who takes umbrage at the Bee's strictures in reporting the proceedings of a court, wherein Mayo is mentioned as one of the dramatis personæ in a disgraceful disturbance in connection with a woman with whom he had consorted. We are advised that a fair report of any judicial proceeding, where no malice is disclosed, is always privileged. It seems to us that these frequent libel suits cannot be fruitful of any good, and the only benefit thus far disclosed inures to the lawyers. In all these spasmodic attempts to gain doubtful redress, the accusing parties have invariably emerged from the contest with drooping feathers. There is little use in trying to prevent the free expression of thought and sentiment guaranteed by section 9 of article 1 of the constitution, which provides: "Every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right; and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press." Thus, where a newspaper reports a judicial proceeding, it seems absurd to say that any person who may come under the judicial scrutiny can obtain a balm for the public exposure of his willful act. In a majority of all such cases, there is some foundation for the action of the newspaper in making mention of the facts, and no possible ground for malice can be presumed.

John F. Swift, one of the counsel for California in the Chae Chan Ping case, in the Supreme Court of the United States, left Sacramento for Washington yesterday. His known ability as a lawyer and his familiarity with questions such as will come up in that case, justify the Legislature and the people in the confidence which they have in him and his associate, Stephen M. White. In some talk with one of the editors of this paper Mr. Swift said that the leading counsel upon the other side is ex-Governor George Hoadly, of Ohio, for twenty-five years and more one of the leaders of the exceptionally brilliant bar of Cincinnati, and now one of the most versatile and accomplished jurists in the country. He is a Democrat, and it is to the credit of that party that it has given to the country some of its ablest advocates and lawyers. Mr. Hoadly's brief has not yet been filed or made public, so far as is known here, and as to the line of argument he will adopt we have nothing but conjecture, though it is certain that while the discussion will take a wide range, the main question will be as to whether Chae Chan Ping, having the certificate issued to emigrating Chinese under the Act in force when the present exclusion law was passed, has a right to land in the United States after Congress had declared that he should not, and that his certificate was null and void.

While it seemed clear to Mr. Swift that Congress has the undoubted power to exclude the citizens or subjects of foreign nations at any time, or to prescribe any condition for their residence here, there is much loose talk and opinion that the Supreme Court will find some way to let Ping land under the peculiar circumstances of his case. During the war of 1812 Congress enacted that no British subject should reside in this country within one hundred miles of tide water, and under that act an Englishman was arrested in Pennsylvania, and removed by the marshal from the prohibited territory. After the war he brought suit for damages for a false imprisonment, alleging the want of power in Congress to pass such an act, but he lost the case, and the act of Congress was upheld by the Supreme Court. Indeed, this power is one of the most important exercised by Congress. In the case of Chy Lung v. Freeman, the U. S. Supreme Court in 1876, said: "The passage of laws which concern the admission of citizens and subjects of foreign nations to our shores belongs to Congress" (92 U. S. 275). Authority upon the general question is ample to sustain the exclusion act, and that it will be sustained there can be little doubt, notwithstanding the supposed hardship to Chae Chan in not being allowed to land, when he had started from China before the Scott bill became a law. The hearing of the case will probably be postponed, but to what day will not be known until March 11th, when the court meets.

Literary Association.

Not for many years has there been anything like a permanent literary society in this city. One of the great features of San Francisco culture, refinement and social enjoyment is embodied in the Bohemian Club, which includes the brightest minds on the coast: lawyers, doctors, actors, artists, musicians, editors, authors, etc. Early in 1871, there was organized in this city a Bohemian Club, which was the very life and soul of literary and social enjoyment. Mrs. L. H. Foote, who recently died at San Francisco, was the leading spirit, and gathered around her, under the club name, the bright genial spirits of this city. The active members of this happy organization were: Judge J. H. McKune, Gen. L. H. Foote, Albert Hart, E. B. Mott, Mrs. E. B. Mott, W. A. Anderson, Nettie Anderson, W. E. McArthur, Jennie Armstrong, Mrs. Henry Edgerton, Mrs. John McNeill, M. R. Beard, W. G. Williams, W. B. Hamilton, W. H. Payne, Julia Dunn, Hattie Hart, Mrs. Lawrence (Ridinghood), who for many years was correspondent for the Bee, Julia Colby, Jennie Gourley (now Mrs. R. B. Harmon), Matt Clarken, Mrs. R. Pacheco, Florence McKune, W. C. Merrill (now the Congregational pastor), Maurice Hyman, Ella Harrison, Geo. A. Blanchard, L. E. Crane, Tracy Lesman. On the honorary list appeared the names of Hon. Newton Booth, Hon. T. B. McFarland, Hon. R. Pacheco, Henry Edgerton, and John McNeill. The gatherings of this club were usually twice a month, and at each meeting a regular programme of entertainment was carried out, without excuse from any active member. Literature, poetry, art, music and the drama were the order. Many invitation receptions were given the club by leading citizens, at which the choicest literary gems and finest music was presented. Often were their entertainments witnessed and enjoyed by the state officers and supreme court justices, who pronounced the association equal, if not superior to its namesake of the bay city. But owing to the changes of life's affairs, the members separated, and after a bright existence of six years, the club disbanded. Since then nothing of the kind has ever been attempted.

As a tender to this club, there was also a dramatic association, composed largely of the club members, with the addition of C. T. Jones, T. J. Clunie, Rosa Nathan, A. S. Bender, Tom. Baker. Many splendid dramatic exhibitions were placed upon the boards, which gained the favor of the public. We recollect once, the grand Russian play called "The Serf" was cast with Newton Booth in the title role. Mr. Booth was then at his zenith as an orator, and the club expected great things from him as an actor. But one rehearsal was sufficient; while the distinguished statesman orator could electrify an audience with his eloquence, as a dramatic artist he was a most dismal failure. It was positively laughable to witness his efforts to be natural, and with a hearty laugh at his own awkwardness, he threw up his part, and "The Serf" was abandoned for a play more in accordance with the ability of the club. But Mr. Booth declined to appear before the footlights as a Thespian. Major A. S. Bender and Gen. L. H. Foote were also about as unfortunate in their efforts to assume leading parts; and so with other distinguished gentlemen who essayed the divine art. The stilted strides and ungraceful movements of these gentlemen would have made a cat laugh. It remained for the younger members to bring distinction to the dramatic part of the organization.

We make the above observations in the hope that some of the literary inclined may revive the old spirit, and inaugurate a club on the plan of the former brilliant association.

The Founding of Sacramento City.

The city of Sacramento is located on the east bank of the Sacramento river, immediately below the mouth of the American river. The first settlement was made by John A. Sutter, in 1839, and long before there was any thought of establishing a city. The news of the gold discovery attracted to Sutter's fort a large immigration from all portions of the civilized world, and this point, being practically the head of inland navigation, became the first nucleus of a settlement. At first a town of canvas tents was established, and afterward the city was regularly laid out, the survey being made in December, 1848, by Captain William H. Warner, of the United States Army, assisted by W. T. Sherman, now General.

In 1844, however, an effort had been made, under the patronage of Sutter and others, to lay out and build a town at a point three miles below the site of Sacramento city. A survey was made and a village commenced. The first house was erected by Sutter, the second by one Hadel, and the third by George Zins. The last mentioned was a brick building, and the first of the kind erected in California. Zins afterward manufactured the bricks, in Sacramento, which were used in the first brick buildings erected in this city. He stamped each brick with his initials, and one of them is now preserved in the Crocker Art Gallery Museum of the city. For a time, "Sutterville," as it was called, in honor of its projector, flourished; but after the gold discovery the population centered at Sacramento, or the "Embarcadero," it was called.

At the time, or shortly after the discovery of gold, quite a number of stores were established at the fort, and indeed that was the practical business center in this portion of the territory. The first store, an adobe building, was that of C. C. Smith & Co., Samuel Brannan being the "Co." This was started two months prior to the opening of the mines, and across its counters were made the first exchanges of American goods for California gold. Brannan subsequently became the sole proprietor. Hensley & Reading had a store afterwards in the fort, and one of the clerks was James King of William, later editor of the San Francisco Bulletin, and who was killed by James P. Casey in the "Vigilance Committee" days of 1856.

When the city of Sacramento was established Sutter owned its site. After the discovery of gold and the laying out of the city, Sutter conveyed his entire interest in the plat to his son; and on December 30, 1849, Sutter, junior, employed Peter H. Burnett—afterward Governor—as his lawyer to manage his newly acquired interests. Conveyances were made by Sutter and his son, which resulted in a confusion of titles that were not adjusted until after many years of litigation.

After the establishment of Sacramento there was a steady improvement of the town. From a village of canvas tents it grew to be one of wood and brick structures, and the town of Sutterville soon had an existence only on paper. After the flood of 1861-2, an effort was made to revive the town of Sutterville, but it again failed.

During the time that Sacramento was flooded, in January, 1853, all communication with the mining counties was cut off, and some of the enterprising merchants sought higher ground for the city site, where freight could be landed from vessels without danger from floods. The site they selected was on the south bank of the American river nearly due north from the present Brighton, and they named the new town "Hoboken." At that day the American river was navigable to that point. A large town was laid out there, with wide streets and a steamboat landing. Within ten days a place sprang up which promised to be a rival to Sacramento. Three steamers made daily trips between the two places. An express office was established at Hoboken, besides many other facilities for commercial business. Trade there flourished. Many of the business firms of Sacramento removed to the new town, and the newspapers of the city devoted a page to the interests of Hoboken. But Hoboken declined as rapidly as it had sprung up, and to-day its site constitutes a portion of a farm.

The city of "Boston" was laid out at the confluence of the American and Sacramento rivers, north of Sacramento. It, however, never "materialized," and existed only on maps.

The population of Sacramento, prior to January, 1848, was comparatively insignificant; but with the influx which followed the discovery of gold its augmentation has been perhaps unprecedented in the history of the world. The first census taken in the state—in 1851—during the administration of President Fillmore, was under the superintendency of J. Neely Johnson, as Census Agent of this district. He was afterward Governor of the state. In that enumeration Sacramento was credited with 11,000 inhabitants. The population of the state as then returned, was about 120,000. The Federal census of 1860 credits the city with 12,800; of 1870, with 16,283; of 1880, with 21,420; and the present year, 1889, it has probably between 30,000 and 40,000.

George McDougal, brother of "I. John," the second Governor, was a prominent character in the founding of Sacramento city. He came here from Indiana in 1848, joined Fremont's battalion, and was with it in the memorable campaign in southern California. Returning to San Francisco, he became distinguished there; and when the mines were discovered joined the gold-seekers and had some racy experiences in the mines. Shortly after the survey of Sacramento city was made, he procured a lease of a ferry privilege from Captain Sutter at a point below the entrance of Sutter lake, and opened the first store in the place, bringing up a store ship and locating it near the foot of I street. His partner was Judge Blackburn of Santa Cruz. The arrival of the son of Captain Sutter effected an important change in the destiny of the new city. He received the interest of his father in the city, and immediately a question arose between him and McDougal in respect to the prerogatives of his lease. The question being decided in favor of Sutter, McDougal became so disaffected with the place that he determined to "extinguish the prospects" of the new city, and move to Sutterville. Transporting all his goods to that point, and leaving his brother John in charge of them, he went east. John then issued immense placards, declaring that the firm over which he presided had determined to take the lead in competition, and accordingly would sell goods at "cost and freight," with a verbal assurance that if they could not obtain patronage at that rate they would sell at the primary cost of their merchandise. But the merchants at the fort combined and McDougal & Co. soon had to break up.

George wandered into Utah, New Mexico and adjacent territories, and meanwhile reports of his death were received on the coast. An eastern brother administered on his estate. Trace was lost of him for years. Finally Captain Brown, of the ram Stonewall, was going to Japan through the straits of Magellan, when some Patagonian chiefs came aboard, among whom was a "hirsute, squalid, weather-tanned and very tattooed man," none other than "Colonel George McDougal." He had journeyed through Central America and various South American countries, and was then prospecting at Sandy Point, a savage and solitary station in the straits. He was the chief of an Indian tribe!

He was a giant in size, and so princely and handsome that he had been called "Lord George McDougal." Captain Brown says that after he had had him shaved, cleaned up and dressed in good clothes, he was the handsomest and most distinguished looking man he had ever seen. McDougal sobbed and cried when told of his family; but all entreaty to keep him on board and get him back home was unavailing, as he had a valuable mine which he was developing by aid of these Indians. However, he promised that as soon as possible he would proceed farther north and then make for home. Some time afterward Brown chanced to meet McDougal in Valparaiso, and succeeded in sending him home.

WHAT IS SAID OF "THEMIS."

Record-Union.

THEMIS is the name of a new Sunday paper which has made its first appearance in this city yesterday morning. It is neatly printed on good paper and filled with well-written and interesting matter on live issues. Winfield J. Davis, W. A. Anderson, and George A. Blanchard are announced as the editors, and A. J. Johnston & Co. as the printers and publishers. There is room in this city for such a paper, and these gentlemen say they will furnish it, and if the publication is to be judged by the first issue it will merit and no doubt receive a liberal patronage. The editors declare that they will "present to the people a clean paper, which shall contain no matter unfit to be read in the parlor of any citizen in the presence of his wife and children," and that they are "not in the business of publishing scandal and filth that may cater to the depraved." Many other similar promises are made, and the issue under consideration fulfills all of them. The editors and publishers are all well and favorably known in Sacramento, their first paper is highly creditable and their enterprise is deserving of substantial recognition by the people of this city.

The Bee.

THEMIS is the name of a new Sunday paper issued yesterday, with A. J. Johnston & Co. as publishers, and W. J. Davis, W. A. Anderson and George A. Blanchard, editors. The new paper takes on a literary appearance, and typographically is quite neat.

Marysville Appeal.

Sacramento has a new literary and political weekly journal somewhat on the plan of the Argonaut, and edited by three able amateurs—Win. J. Davis, W. A. Anderson and George A. Blanchard, any one of whom would probably have made a good editor if caught sufficiently young and trained to the work. THEMIS is the name of this publication, which informs its readers that the "editorial expression will be reviewed by all of the editors before publication." That plan never yet succeeded. There should be only one editor, and his responsibility should cover the contents of the paper. It is much better to have signed articles than a division of responsibility. Are all the editors of THEMIS responsible for the department of "Flashes," which contains this surprising observation?

The colored prize fight, a few nights ago, were blows in the dark.

Is that to be regarded as "editorial expression," or as a paragraph from some external source, smuggled into the columns of THEMIS at some moment of relaxation on the part of the editorial triumvirate, and with a view to excite unpleasantness over points of grammar?

Our fighting editor assumes all responsibility for this alleged joke.

Book Chat.

"On Horseback." Notes of a tour in Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Mexico and Southern California. By Charles Dudley Warner. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. For sale by C. S. Houghton, Sacramento.

Like most tourist accounts, we find some glaring inaccuracies in Mr. Warner's work. For one instance, in his little sketch of Southern California called "The Golden Hesperides," he generalizes the entire climate of the entire state by a superficial observation at Los Angeles, saying: "The night temperature throughout California is invariable in great contrast to that in the day time; nearly everywhere fire is necessary at night the year around." Now, this will be news to the people of central and northern California. As a fact, for eight months in the year such a thing as a fire for the purpose of imparting warmth is unheard of in these parts. Rarely, indeed, is it uncomfortable to sit upon our verandas at all hours of the night in our shirt sleeves. The account of the southern California "boom" is amusing and entirely truthful. The tour of the south on horseback probably shook Mr. Warner's digestion a little before he arrived here. However, his description of the backwoods and mountain life in the three southern States named is very edifying and instructive. It seems incredible that there can be such dense ignorance upon American soil. Judge Tourgee, in "A Fool's Errand," gave an insight into the life among the lowly in the south, which has been emphasized by Mr. Warner. In a conversation with an intelligent colored man whose brother was formerly a member of congress, he is represented as saying: "Social equality is a humbug. We do not expect it, we do not want it. It does not exist among the blacks themselves. We have our own social degrees, and choose our own associates. We simply want the ordinary civil rights, under which we can live and make our own way in peace and amity. This is necessary to our self-respect, and if we have not self-respect, it is not to be supposed that the race can improve. I'll tell you what I mean. My wife is a modest, intelligent woman, of good manners, and is always neat and tastefully dressed. Now, if she goes to take the cars she is not permitted to go into a clean car with decent people, but is ordered into one that is repellant, and is forced into company that any refined woman would shrink from. But along comes a flauntingly dressed woman, of known disreputable character, whom my wife would be disgraced to know, and she takes any place that money will buy. It is this sort of thing that hurts." Mr. Warner has given us an agreeable sketch of the manners and customs of our sister republic, Mexico. However, he is not enthusiastic on their prospects and governmental progress. There is, according to his idea, a little too much mixture of races. As a whole the little book is very readable and entertaining, and, barring the inaccuracies, instructive.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Miss Gertrude Jones, teacher of music, and one of Sacramento's favorite artists, gave a class recital on Monday evening. The attendance was upon invitation only, and the entertainment excellent. Those who assisted in the programme, were: Miss Jessie Kinney, Miss Ida Unwin, Harry Ravenscroft, Bertie and Daisy Wasserman, Miss Martha Burnett, Miss Sophie Jones, Miss Lulu Kim, M. E. Kenney, Grace Dudley, Master Otto Burnett, and Miss Clara Burnett.

Miss Georgie Woodthorpe and her company have presented a series of drama at the Clunie Opera House this last week to a good business. They opened in "Among the Pines," with Miss Woodthorpe as Butterfly. Mr. Philleo as leading man seemed upon that occasion to be inspired by something stronger than emotion. Miss Fallon is an ambitious aspirant for histrionic fame, to whom money is no object. During the engagement, "Poor Joe," "Alix," and "Two Orphans" were given in a good manner.

It is quite common for actresses, particularly the minor members of a company, to be annoyed by the volunteer attentions of brainless fops. These poor imbeciles do anything possible to attract attention, by doing and saying what they conceive to be funny things in the presence and hearing of the object of their solicitude. It is amusing to witness such antics in this city when a troupe embodying young and handsome actresses appear.

The society actress' stock in trade, is gorgeous attire, shapely limbs, and pretty face. Art in other respects forms no part of her professional attainments. Actors, too, are much given to their Adonis-like shape, rather than "divine comedy."

"Mend him who can! The ladies call him sweet."

Later days, however, reveal a reformation in this régime.

Dukes, barons and counts are often recorded as marrying actresses. The invariable rule is that they make poorer husbands, than their other halves do wives. Now it is reported that Prince Alexander has married an opera singer. It will be soon the old, old story. Matrimony has no binding effect upon such doubtful alliance.

That splendid combination of minstrels, Thatcher, Primrose and West, will soon pay California a visit, under Al. Hayman's management. The company comprises 60 people. The first engagement is at the new California Theater, San Francisco.

The eminent merchant and political philanthropist, Wanamaker, of Pennsylvania, never attended a circus. Upon his advent in the cabinet, he may see many a circus within the next four years.

The plays of Shakespeare have been translated into many languages. It now remains for the dowager Empress of China to order that Shakespeare shall be rendered in Chinese for the benefit of the "Son of Heaven."

Hermann, by the way, is even yet trying to see the point of Ned Buckley's latest joke at his expense. Buckley asked him if it were true that he now throws in, as an attraction for the Broad-street Theater, his newest and greatest specialty—the invisible audience.

Dion Bouciault remarks that the works of Æschylus, of Sophocles, of Euripides and of Aristophanes, come down to us as these Greek authors gave them to the world, and wants to know why Shakespeare has been tinkered with by actors, from Colley Cibber and David Garrick down to Kyrle Bellevue and Charles Cogan.

On Monday night, the Artillery Band gave one of its brilliant concerts. These concerts are one of the principal amusements of this city, and deserve and receive proper recognition at the hands of the public. The selections and management of these enjoyable affairs are beyond criticism. The concert was assisted by a fine soprano from San Francisco, Miss Carrie Millsner. On account of illness and other causes, three members of this band were absent from the concert.

In Shakespeare's creation of "Troilus and Cressida," we find Cressida saying:

"But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very centre of the earth,
Drawing all things to it."

Troilus said in the play prior:

"As true as steel * * * * *
* * * * * on earth to the centre."

Here we have two direct references to the law of gravitation. Now, Shakespeare wrote in the days of Queen Elizabeth, and died in 1616. Sir Isaac Newton is accredited with the discovery of the laws of gravitation in 1685, 60 years later. It looks like the bard knew of this law long before. Again, in "Hamlet," we have a full illustration of the circulation of the blood, yet this discovery is credited to Dr. Harvey many years later. Some of the Baconian cranks use these ideas in favor of the theory that Bacon wrote Shakespeare. There never was but one Shakespeare; never will be another.

Scribner for March has an interesting article on Wagner's Heroes and Heroines. What Shakespeare imparted in thought-ideas, Wagner compasses in music. Alberich, Hans Sachs, Telramund, King Mark, Tristan, Parsifal, Wotan, Siegfried, Sieglinde, Siegmund, and Brunnhilde, are as much characters as Hamlet, Macbeth, Othello, Brutus, and Richard, only upon a different idea of expression. One line lives in thought-ideas—the other in music.

George Staley, a Sacramento boy, and who was one of the original stock company of the Clunie Opera House, will return to this state soon with a new specialty play, written by Scott Marble. George is a prime favorite in this city. He only needs backing.

The first concert of the second series of the McNeill Club will be given to-morrow night at the new Metropolitan.

Legend of Emerald Bay and Origin of Tahoe Trout.

There is no more beautiful spot than Emerald Bay and its surroundings. The scenery is grand and imposing. This has been the subject of many paintings and sketches. Several years ago the writer, while visiting this grandly romantic locality, conceived the following legend of the origin of the trout in Lake Tahoe.

Who is there that does not love the romance, the ideal, and legends of the past? Life is as much made up of the ideals as of the realities. The legends and ideals of the past form the food which nourishes the imagination, guides the pencil of the artist and the pen of the poet, and upon which is founded our choicest literature, our finest art.

"'Tis the very soul and life of poetry and art."

From the fabulous realms brilliant golden thoughts are culled and garnered into beautiful truths. They form the treasure house of literature; the handmaid of poetry and art.

The scene of this sketch, so goes the legend, was centuries ago, the summer resort of a race of people of greater culture than any that has succeeded it. The women had great beauty; the men great passion. The valley of the Sacramento (now called) was the winter home of a beautiful princess, who was most proficient in all the field sports—in fact, a Diana.

As was her custom, one summer she betook herself (in those days ladies did not hesitate to travel alone) to the pleasant scenes of the great Mountain Water, as it was then called, to revel in her hunting sports. While engaged in this pursuit upon the summit just back of that part of the lake now called "Emerald Bay," she was accosted by a strange being, not of her race, and who was determined to possess himself of her whether she was willing or not. She sought safety in flight. Over crag and cascade they went, she bending every nerve to escape; he to capture. The pursuit at length brought her to the waters of the lake, and rather than submit to capture, she invoked the protection of her guardian spirit, and plunged into the lake. Her guardian spirit, having heard her prayer, preserved her life by at once changing her into a beautiful fish. Her pursuer was at the same instant metamorphosed into an eagle, and from his crag and flight kept constant watch where she disappeared. After a time she jumped out of the water, just as fish often do, when the eagle, always on the alert, with a sudden dart, fastened her in his talons, and spread his wings in flight to carry her away. But before he rose more than a few feet above the surface of the water, some invisible power struck him dead, and he fell, with wings outspread, and at once was changed into stone and formed an island. The beautiful fish swam away with the marks of the eagle's talons on her sides, and which formed spots. From these drops of blood issued which developed into other fish, and all bearing spots just the same as the ones from which the blood issued. These spots remained ever after, and were the distinguishing marks of all her family tribe, and which in our day has taken the name of trout.

The legend goes still further, by saying that the island thus formed (which can be seen to this day) rests upon two pillars (the eagle's legs) and that beneath is a magnificent palace where the huntress regales herself at times when she is not sporting in the waters as a fish. Near this island can be seen, and has been seen for years, upon a clear day, deep in the water, a large and beautiful trout, which many have endeavored to lure to the hook, but to no avail. It shows its spotted silvery sides, and darts under the rocks of the island when too closely pursued. This unusually large and beautiful trout is supposed to be the legendary huntress. The old legend continues by saying that at intervals of a great many years this beautiful huntress for a brief time assumes her maidenly form, just before which the hills and glens around Emerald Bay and Idlewild are awakened by the sweetest strains of invisible music; more entrancing than the harmony of the Æolian harp. During those periods the greatest of prosperity and happiness visits all the country, and they are the harbingers of great events and discoveries.

Political.

The Republican caucuses held in this city Thursday night were but another exemplification of the unpardonable indifference of the people to public concerns. The writer has been and is in a position to view the internal history of politics; he knows the standing and price of every political boss, small and large, in this city. To illustrate the situation we will refer to the caucus of the Three-and-a-half precinct. It was composed largely of non-taxpayers. Had the enactment occurred upon the stage of a theatre and an admission fee charged, profit and entertainment would have resulted. The district represented is populous and wealthy; the assemblage was rather of toughs and alleged politicians. Two factions were represented. Each came in with a cut-and-dried slate. We personally knew before the meeting the programme of each side. The meeting was held in a public bar-room. Each side elected its chairman in the same room. The chairmen stood upon card tables. Precisely where the good people got in is difficult to define. A windy discussion arose between one of the chairmen, who has held distinguished offices, and another citizen, who occupies a state position. As we have stated, the chairman stood upon a card table; the other gentleman, of course, on the floor. It resulted in the chairman putting the question, to the meeting whether the other man was a gentleman; the negative carried. Either of these men are old enough to be the father of the writer; it is perhaps indelicate to criticise them, but it occurred to us that it was not necessary to hire a hall in which to make an exhibition of themselves, particularly before such an audience. The usual committee of five was appointed by each chairman; their names were known to the writer before announcement; lists of delegates were reported, whose names we also knew in advance.

The people may not understand it, but that is a sample and the plan upon which our primaries have been held. The people are to blame. They do not attend them; the meetings are simply the battle grounds of the lower order of politicians, and from these sources sprung our nominating conventions who name men to fill offices of importance.

We have a city election approaching. It is of importance. Our people should infuse a little more brains in the Board of Trustees. The selection of the candidates for trustees should be made with the care which the importance of the positions demands. Our people of both parties permit petty politicians to make the selections—men who do not regard the qualifications of the officers, except as to whether they will stand up and deliver the patronage. The writer knows the men who have the strongest pull for that office in both Democratic and Republican conventions. We have serious doubts whether either has the ability to properly fill the place. We can put our finger upon men who will sit in the Republican Convention who are absolutely committed to vote at the dictation of the politicians of our wards; they will be as subservient as the small dog who lies at our feet as we now write. Our respect for our dog will not justify us to make a comparison of intelligence. We are not to be understood that the controlling members of the convention come under this category. To them we suggest that they seek out a fitting candidate. In a city of 40,000 people we have plenty of men who can be selected to properly administer our municipal affairs. It is not always wise to nominate from the material presented before the convention; it is always unwise to nominate a man who has been staked out in advance for the office by the politicians.

We ask the members of the Republican Convention to seriously regard the critical situation of this city. It may not be generally known, but if adverse decisions come from the appellate court in the cases in connection with our bonds recently determined by Judge Hunt, we are liable to flounder in deep water. That is but one consideration. This city needs in its legislative and executive board the highest order of intelligence and wisdom, and its affairs should be conducted as those of a business house. How long would any bank in this city exist if its managers were selected so carelessly as public officers are?

We speak earnestly about this matter, because we own property here, and because we personally know of the influences which exercise so powerful a control in the naming of our officers. We have seen many instances where the people have been deceived. We have occupied public station. We know that during a session of the legislature a meeting of some members was held in a room in the state capitol to fix the price of their votes on a question of no less importance than that of legislation on the subject of irrigation. To secure the passage of a bill for the benefit of the people of this city, members were forced to make humiliating concessions to a state political boss. He promised us so many votes, tallied them on his shirt cuff; the goods were delivered. If this state of affairs exists in state politics, what is the truth in our local affairs?

Should the convention not center upon any one of the gentlemen who are candidates for Second Trustee, would it not be a masterly stroke of policy to tender the nomination to W. F. Knox, who is eminently a suitable man for the place? This would in reality be the office seeking the man. Certainly there is no man better informed upon city affairs, particularly our fiscal matters, than Mr. Knox. We do not know that Mr. Knox would accept the nomination. If he will it would reflect more honor upon the convention than his acceptance would upon him. Whoever may receive the nomination let him be untrammelled and free from any doubtful influence.

Space does not permit us to now dwell further on these matters; we will hereafter relate some political history which will perhaps be of interest to the people.

The Primaries.

The Republican primaries were held yesterday. Had a stranger happened in the city and viewed the contests in some of the precincts he would have supposed that a President of the nation was to be elected. There was, as usual, a contest, not as to the merits of men to be nominated on the ticket, but as to which element should be on top, and the matter as to who should be selected on the Central Committee, in the minds of the smaller politicians who have more lungs than brains, overshadowed that of the nomination for the office of Trustee. In the closely contested precincts colonization was the rule. Down town all was serene—likewise at 4½ precinct. The battle grounds were at 3½ and the lower precinct of the fourth ward. The colonization at these scenes of contest were by both elements represented by the smaller bosses. Deserving the first and second wards the characters residing in them, who have disgraced themselves by the degrading influence they have exercised in local politics.

While the primary was called under the law, legal restrictions were thrown aside. Particularly was this conspicuous at the polls at Seventh and K. Plenty of officers were there; the 100-foot limit law exists on paper; it was not attempted to be enforced. Possibly the officers can be excused that they had their hands full in suppressing the fights. The proprietor of Lafayette Hall, possibly as low a dive as has ever been tolerated in a civilized community, took an active hand in reformation; some one licked him—who is hurt? At the last criminal term of the Superior Court the official record showed that this den of infamy was connected with about all the cases. The proprietor was prosecuted for an alleged violation of the election laws. Such were the men who undertook to exert their influence in moulding the opinions of the Republicans of that precinct. Our limited space permits not accounts of the other disgraceful fights. At 3½ things were lively; however, friendly—no noses bled. The following is a list of the gentlemen who have been elected to the Republican City Convention:

A careful scrutiny of the names of the delegates elected at yesterday's primary discloses the fact that no man can predict what will be the outcome of their deliberations. It is certain no man or set of men can control this body for or against any candidate. This is as it should be; for with such a state of affairs good will result.

Welcome the New.

Before we issue another number, a new administration will have been inaugurated at Washington. Great things are expected, and it is our hope, will be realized. Four new states will take their places in the Union in the near future. The political complexion of Congress will be changed from democratic to republican proclivities. The scramble for the federal patronage will be an absorbing question with the administration until the positions are all filled, or it is decided not to make a clean sweep, and of course some regard will be had for a civil service founded on reason and good republican business principles.

At the Skating Rink.

The race at the skating rink last night was an exciting one, and a big crowd turned out to see it. Five entries came to the goal in the following order: Rogers first, Clark second, Davis third, and Crozier and Donovan nowhere. The darkey, Davis, got the start, and led for half a dozen rounds, when Clark pulled ahead, Davis second, and Rogers third. Rogers fell, but was up again, and his fall seemed to do him good, for he soon took the lead, and held it easily to the finish, with Clark and Davis nearly a lap behind. Mandeville and Nagle were the judges, Hanlon timekeeper, and "Senator" Gagus referee.

McComb Investigation.

During the McComb examination before the legislative committee, the letter attributed to John McComb, Jr., was disclosed to be a forgery. General McComb made explanation of most of the letters heretofore published. A number of the letters the General could not account for. The Governor's investigation of state prison affairs will commence on March 16th. Judge Van Fleet will act as adviser to the Governor during the investigation.

Mystery of the Waves.

The body of a man was found in the bay. He appeared to be about fifty years of age, dressed in a cheap suit of tweed clothes and woolen shirt; face covered with light beard. His pockets were filled with cobbles. The body had the appearance of having been in the water several weeks. There is nothing to indicate his identity.

The Grand Jury of Sacramento County will convene again next Tuesday morning when it is expected that the Billings murder case and other important business will be brought before it by the District Attorney for consideration. It is rumored that interesting matters will be brought before them for consideration during the coming week.

Rising Star Rebeckah Degree Lodge, No. 8, I. O. O. F., will on next Thursday evening entertain its members and all visitors who are in the city, with a literary and musical programme of much interest to all.

We congratulate the Bee in its sound judgment upon local governmental affairs, particularly relating to the question of the adoption of amendments to our charter. We have already expressed their views.

Women's Temperance.

The Women's Temperance Union held a meeting and adopted this resolution: Resolved, that the thanks of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Sacramento are tendered to Governor Waterman and family for thus expressing their sympathy with temperance reform; and we cherish the hope that the precedent thus established may be followed on all similar occasions in the future. The above resolution was prompted by the fact that Governor Waterman declined to allow any liquor at his late reception to state officers, legislators and citizens.

The killing of young Lighthall on Friday by Billings is certainly a sad matter. We cannot of course criticise in advance, serious matters which will have to be adjudicated in our courts. The facts, as far as elicited, are already in the possession of the public.

The installation of officers of the Young Ladies' Institute, No. 17, on Monday evening was made the occasion of a delightful party at Turner Hall. The following young ladies were charged with the duties of the various offices for the ensuing term: President, Josie J. Regan; First Vice-President, Mrs. J. W. Willem; Second Vice-President, Miss Lizzie O'Brien; Financial Secretary, Miss Mamie Whyte; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. M. A. Nagle; Treasurer, Miss Nellie Boylan; Marshal, Miss Mollie Brown; Sentinel, Miss Ida Desmond; Physician, James Parkinson. The literary and musical programme which followed the installation exercises was full of interesting features.

The annual masquerade of the Turn Verein Society at Turner Hall on Thursday evening was full of enjoyment to the merry participants, and to the many who witnessed it as spectators. The hall was gaily decorated and the scene was one of life and animation. The balls given by the Sacramento Turners have always been successful, and Thursday evening's compared favorably with the preceding ones.

Hon. J. Sloat Fassett who married Miss Jennie Crocker of this city, seems to be one of the coming men. He has been a member of the New York State Senate two terms, was Secretary of the National Republican Committee during the last campaign, and now is prominently mentioned for the important office of Collector of the Port of New York under the Harrison administration.

Notable among the week's attractions was the class recital given at Y. M. I. Hall on Monday evening under the direction of Miss Gertrude M. Jones. An interesting and extended programme was given in a manner bespeaking great progress on the part of her pupils.

On Monday evening next a party will be given at Y. M. I. Hall by the ladies composing the Sacramento branch of the Catholic Ladies' Relief Society.

The Odd Fellows' Social Club gave a reception at Pioneer Hall on Tuesday evening to a large number of friends of the order.

The reception tendered as a surprise to Mrs. E. B. Crocker, on last Monday, the occasion of her birthday, by the ladies comprising the executive committee of the Ladies' Museum Association, in the halls of the E. B. Crocker Art Gallery, was one of the most delightful affairs ever planned in the city. When the hour for opening the reception arrived, Mrs. Crocker was waited upon by the ladies and escorted to the main room of the upper gallery. Here the magnificent apartment had been beautified with a profusion of floral pieces, which shed their fragrance throughout the entire room. An orchestra had been stationed to the south of the upper vestibule, and when the guests began to come in an almost endless procession, it filled the stately gallery with enrapturing strains. The good woman in whose honor the day had been given was overwhelmed with congratulations, coming from over six hundred residents of the city. Embowered with fresh flowers which revealed their innumerable hues on every side, the lady, aided by the committee, received the callers. Down stairs, a number of young ladies waited upon the guests with punches and light delicacies, and throughout the whole building merriment and good will reigned in undisturbed sway the day long. The reception was an informal one in every way, and carried with it sincere wishes for the happiness of a woman a whole city full of people honors and respects.

On Wednesday evening the Plaisir Club gave one of its parties at Turner Hall. Despite the counter attraction of the Governor's reception, it was well attended. The club is making preparations for a brilliant closing party to occur soon.

The reception held at Governor Waterman's residence on Wednesday night was a most brilliant affair. Fully eight hundred people attended, among whom were many prominent state officials. The decorations were very elaborate, consisting in great part of beautifully arranged floral pieces. An orchestra played concert selections from 9 until 10:30 P. M., when dancing was begun and continued to the early hours of morning. Refreshments were served in the dining room down stairs. On the dancing floor the toilets of the ladies were most elaborate, and a number of military men appeared in full uniform. Every one agreed in pronouncing it one of the most enjoyable state receptions ever given in the city.

A pleasant surprise party was given to Miss Susie Walling at her residence, No. 620 F street, last Friday evening.

AN OLD TIMER'S REMINISCENCE.

The First Public Reception and Banquet in Sacramento.

In June, 1849, Hon. T. Butler King was sent out by the general government to reconnoiter the Sacramento valley, and report to Washington. He called on General P. F. Smith, who afterward was conspicuous in the army of the rebellion, but who was then in command of the military of the Pacific; also upon Commodore Jones, in command of the navy, to whom he presented his credentials and orders, at Benicia. An expedition was made up at that point, consisting of two 6-mule teams, one dingy cart, with supplies for the trip. A detachment of thirty dragoons was formed under command of Lieut. Stoneman—afterward a famous war general, later governor of California—to act as escort.

The expedition started on the 4th day of July, 1849, the writer being one of the party. We reached a point at the mouth of the Feather river, called Fremont; crossed over to Vernon, and set out for Sacramento, where we arrived on July 7th. Lieut. Stoneman was left in charge of the camp about five miles from the city, Gen. Smith, Com. Jones, T. Butler King and myself came to the city, and were met by General Sutter, Sam Brannan, E. F. Gillespie, Joseph Winans, J. G. Hyer, P. B. Cornwall, Col. J. B. Starr, W. R. Grimshaw, and a large number of citizens. After congratulatory remarks, a banquet was given the visitors by the citizens. General Sutter had a considerable quantity of English ale, which was the principal beverage for the occasion. Considering the scarcity of the commodities that usually appear at banquets, this early effort in that line was a success. It must be remembered that Sacramento city was composed then only of a few buildings and tents.

During the stay we visited Sutter's fort where we received additional courtesies from Gen. Sutter. After making a tour to Marysville, through the Yubas, we crossed the American, Feather and Stanislaus rivers, and stopped at Stockton, about August 1st. We had a good reception and an improvised banquet at that place, which was comprised of but few houses. We moved on to the foot of Mount Diablo, where we found Dr. Marsh, who owned a large ranch, and who also entertained us handsomely. Our circuit was made in one month and eleven days.

Mendelssohn Quintette Club.

This Boston concert company will give one of its choice concerts on the evening of March 7th, 1889, at the Metropolitan theatre. This magnificent combination of musical talent has a national reputation and stands at the head of all concert companies. The company is composed of the most noted musicians of the world. Herr Wilhelm Ohliger, solo violin and concert master; Mr. Manassa Adler, solo violin; Thomas Ryan, solo clarinet and viola; Herr Fritz Schlacter, viola and violinello; Herr Anton Hekking, solo violinello, and Miss Alice Ryan, prima donna soprano. The people of Sacramento can expect a rare treat from these concerts. Prof. Holbrook has the management in this city.

SOMETHING NEW.—The depot of the Remington Typewriter, the standard and best machine made, is at 1007½ Fourth street, the only place in town to obtain supplies. Mrs. Irene S. Banton, the lady in charge, is also agent for the Stenograph, the wonderful little shorthand machine, and has formed a class. She gives a series of trial lessons to test the system. Call and see her, for we can recommend her work.

Local Bibliography.

The formation of a collection to illustrate local history and bibliography is a matter of considerable importance, to which each community should give some attention. Such a collection should embrace books and pamphlets relating to the locality, as well as works by local authors, or issued from local presses. No matter should be deemed too insignificant to find a place in the collection; pamphlets, directories, newspaper clippings, files of newspapers, or single copies may sometimes prove of value. In many households material of this kind is to be found upon which but little value is placed, and which, if left to pass through the various changes the family must undergo, will entirely be lost. Such material, if placed in the care of a public library or historical or literary society, would be carefully preserved and arranged, would become readily accessible to the student and would rapidly enhance in value. If you have any matter of this kind, offer it to your city public library, and so far as it is necessary to complete their collection, it will be gladly accepted.

Emmet as "Fritz."

Good houses has witnessed the revised production of "Fritz" at the Metropolitan. Emmet is the pioneer in this line of dialect character acting, and is master of the art. While age is perceptible yet the art remains. His songs are inimitable and charming. The dry humor rendered in his quaint manner can never fail to please. A little more pruning of the piece, by way of getting rid of some of the long dialogue, would not be a detriment. The support was good, considering that the play is "Fritz" alone.

First Fire Department.

On the 5th of February, 1850, the first fire company on the Pacific coast was organized in the city of Sacramento, under the name of the Mutual Hook and Ladder Company No. 1, with the following officers: Demas Strong, foreman; John S. Fowler, first assistant; M. D. Eyre, second assistant; Henry G. Langley, Secretary; T. A. Warbass, treasurer. At a meeting of citizens held March 10th, 1851, to organize a permanent fire department, John A. Read, D. O. Mills, Robert T. Brown, Hiram Arents, John T. Bayley, Robert M. Folger, Samuel Young, and Wm. H. Simmons, were appointed to take the matter in charge and to solicit subscriptions. They collected $7000, which was expended in the purchase of a truck for the Hook and Ladder No. 1, an engine for No. 3, the building of houses for Hook and Ladder No. 1, and Engine Company No. 1, and the construction of seven cisterns on J and K streets. Some of the gentlemen whose names are mentioned have since risen to prominence.

SCRAPS FROM POETS.

Full Fledged and Aileged.

Old Saws in Rhyme.

Actions speak louder than words ever do;
You can't eat your cake and hold onto it, too.

When the cat is away the little mice play.
When there is a will there is always a way.

One's deep in the mud as the other in mire;
Don't jump from the frying pan into the fire.

There's no use crying over milk that's spilt;
No accuser is needed by conscience of guilt.

There must be some fire wherever is smoke;
The pitcher goes off to the well till it's broke.

By rogues falling out honest men get their due;
Whoever it fits he must put on the shoe.

All work and no play will make Jack a dull boy;
A thing of much beauty is ever a joy.

A half loaf is better than no bread at all;
And pride always goeth before a sad fall.

A Suggestion.

Good Mother Nature, we admire your beauty
And bow to you in proper filial duty;
But nevertheless scarce any one would question

Onr right to, here and there, make a suggestion.

Now, histories say—and all people trust 'em—

For centuries you have pursued this custom;
Your winters are so cold a mortal cringes;

Your summers are as hot as Hades' hinges.
Why not experiment? Take the extremes,

The coldest frost, the sun's most torrid beams, Find then the temperate middle 'twixt the two,

And give us that for once the whole year through.

Homeless.

Turned out in the somber twilight,
Out in the bitter cold,
And the pitiless sleet as it sweeps the street
Is piercing her garments old,
And the babe on her breast is crying,
And her little ones, clust'ring 'round
In a vague affright at the falling night,
Are clutching her tattered gown.

For the rent was not forthcoming,
And how could the landlord wait;
And what did he know of her want and woe
As early she toiled and late?

He couldn't be losing his money—
It's only the way of the world!
And why should he care if she crouches there

Mid the storm king's wrath unfurled?

She has sewed in the dawning sunrise,
She has stitched in the gathering gloom,
And her eyes had grown dim and her fingers thin

As she worked in her dreary room.
But the pay was very meager,
And the mouths were many to fill,
And the fatherly heart lay far apart
In the graveyard on the hill.

So she stands in the deep'ning darkness,
And her tired and aching head
Is throbbing with pain and the sad refrain
Of her children's cry for bread.

And she sees the laughing maidens
Ride past in their robes of fur,
And the city is bright with its mansions to-night,

But there's never a home for her.
—Chicago Times.

The Wires Were Crossed.

What is it she hears through the telephone
That renders her eyes so bright?
They never before so brilliantly shone
Nor expressed such intense delight.

What is it she hears that dimples her face,
And conjures the smile to her lips,
As she holds the machine with an indolent grace.

In her delicate finger tips.

Tap, tap, tap! Tap, tap, tap! then a buzz and a whirr,

And wild words in confusion lost.
They all of them seem to be speaking to her,
For the telephone wires are crossed.

"Hello, there, Central! Hello, there—Hello!"

"What's that," "I don't hear you aright."

"Speak louder!" "Who's there?" "Is that you, husband?" "No!"

"I'm detained at the office to-night."

But it is not these voices that brighten her eyes

And cause her to smile—to be plain
The voice she finally hears with surprise,
Is her father's, in Maiden Lane.

Like music from far away lands the words come;

What emotions ecstatic they bring!
"Duke will drop 'round to-night, so you'd better stay home;"

He has called here and purchased a ring.

Some Peculiar Proverbs.

Somebody said that a proverb is the wit of one and the wisdom of many, but there are a few proverbs in current use which are more indicative of folly than of wisdom. In proof of which I would respectfully submit the following: "Money makes the mare go." In childhood I received this as gospel, but when I grew older I knew better. I owned a mare who would go just when she liked and no oftener. Finding her stubborn one day I offered her a five dollar bill to proceed on her journey, but she disclaimed to notice it. I raised her five, but she was obstinate. I offered her $20 and she kicked, and the effects of that kick are still visible on my off-side eyebrow. Candidly I don't believe a spirited mare is open to a bribe of filthy lucre—a whip is more powerful.

"Short reckonings make long friends." Do they? Well, that depends on which way you look at it. I had a friend who was generally short in his reckoning with me, and now we never speak as we pass by.

"The early bird gets the worm." Possibly, and it is no doubt a dead snap for the bird, but where does the worm come in? He must have been out earlier than the bird and seemingly didn't profit by early rising.

"A barking dog never bites." Don't you believe it. I was fooled on that assertion once when I went around to see my best girl, and having faith in the adage I put trust in the old man's dog and the dog put his teeth in me. He bit me where I had no ambition to be bitten.

"Don't cast your pearls before swine." I never did. I have never seen anybody else do so, and I am of opinion that the pigs themselves would prefer raw potatoes or chunks of coal to pearls or any other gems.

"It is better to give than to receive." If this applies to advice, thrashings and counterfeits I can understand it, but not otherwise.

"Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day." Surely this is wrong. I think a day's postponement is advisable in such cases as nursing the baby, kissing your mother-in-law and going to jail.

"Economy is wealth." Excuse me, but it is nothing of the kind. I have a large stock of economy on hand which I am willing to exchange at sight for a quantity of wealth.

"Walls have ears." It's a libel. They haven't.

"A soft answer turneth away wrath." Not necessarily. When I have been asked for the arrears in my board bill I have invariably answered softly, so that the other boarders wouldn't hear, but the landlady's wrath didn't seem to diminish much.

"Truth lies at the bottom of a well." It does, does it? Well, who does it lie to, and why? And wherefore, if it lies at all, is it still called truth? But I have given you enough instances to prove that you should not put your trust in proverbs.—World.

A Tonquin Pearl Myth.

In countries where the precious stones are commonly found, myths are found with them very similar to those associated with the commoner objects of our daily experience.

Thus in Tonquin the origin of the pearl is accounted for in the following way:

There was once a Tonquinese king so well skilled in magic as to make a bow of pure gold, which, as its arrows never failed to deal death, was a sure pledge of perpetual victory.

He, therefore, had no difficulty in defeating another king who attacked him.

In time his daughter married the defeated king's son, and one day the latter prevailed on his wife to procure for him the magic bow, and to substitute for it another resembling it in its place.

She did so in ignorance of the bow's virtues, the result being that her father in his turn was conquered and compelled to fly.

Being informed by the demon of the source of his misfortune, he seized his daughter, and, drawing his scimitar, proceeded to kill her, but not before she had time to predict that, in order to afford to future ages an enduring proof of her innocence, the blood that he shed should be turned into pearls.

And surely so it must have been; for is not the spot where she was slain still the place where men discover the fairest and loveliest pearls?

Celery is the latest cure for rheumatism. It is asserted that the disease is impossible if the vegetable is freely eaten. The fact that it is so generally put on the table raw prevents its therapeutic powers from being known. The celery should be cut into bits, boiled in water until soft and the water drunk by the patient. Put new milk, with a little flour and nutmeg, into a saucepan with the boiled celery, serve it warm, with pieces of toast, eat it with potatoes and the painful ailment will soon yield. Such is the declaration of a physician who has again and again tried the experiment with uniform success. He adds that cold or damp never produces, but simply develops the disease, of which acid blood is the primary and sustaining cause, and that while the blood is alkaline there can be neither rheumatism nor gout.

A desirable thing in gloves—a warm lining.

Taming a Bird.

No creature is more jealous or sensitive than a bird, says Oliver Thorn Miller in the Home Maker. It is easy, however, to win the heart of almost any bird, and without starving him or making him think that he has mastered you. Simply talk to him a good deal. Place his cage near you on your desk or work table, and retain the choicest dainty to give to him with your own fingers. Let him know that he can never have that particular thing unless he takes it from you, and he will soon learn, if you are patient and do not disconcert him by fixing your eyes upon him. After this he will more readily take it from your lips; and then when you let him out of his cage, after the first excitement is over, he will come to you, especially if you have a call you have accustomed him to, and accept the dainty from you while free. As soon as he becomes really convinced that you will not hurt him, or try to catch him, or interfere in any way with his liberty, he will give way to his boundless curiosity about you; he will pull your hair, pick at your eyes and give you as much of his company as you desire.

A Prize Story.

A Western paper recently offered a prize for the best story to be written by a pupil of a public school. Here are a few passages from the contributions:

"Cora Brown was fortunately the possessor of a birthday, for she was the daughter of rich friends."

"But all this time a cloud was gathering over Mrs. Delaney, which grew large as years went by, and that cloud was full of grasshoppers."

"My father desired me to marry a bank president, a handsome, reckless man, fond of naught save the gaming-table."

"'Vat I dell you? vat I dell you!' shouted the Irishman."

"As she entered the room a cold, damp smell met her sight."

"The Jews celebrate Christmas in the summer."

"She forgot the Lord and all his blessings, and after that she went and got married."

Sacramento has reached an era of prosperity. After having been in business but a very few years, Politz has been enabled to make an assignment. Of course it is yet too early to find out what will be realized out of it, or when business will be resumed.

Some one is indignant because a Plaza officer swore profanely when he saw several people strewing banana skins upon the walks there. An officer who would not mildly oburgate under such circumstances certainly ought to be dismissed, and the "Senator" who would permit the careless use of the deadly banana peel ought to be tobogganed off the dome of the capitol in an overcoat of that peribaceous plant, with the slippery side out.

"Charley, dear," said a meek-looking little woman to her husband, "I want to ask you a favor."

"What is it?"

"I wish you would let me learn to talk politics, chew tobacco and swear."

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, MARCH 10, 1889.

No. 3.

The question has been raised as to the power of the legislature to amend the charters of municipal corporations which were organized prior to the adoption of the present constitution. Those who deny the power of the legislature found their argument chiefly upon section six of article eleven of the constitution. But an analysis of the section will demonstrate the fallacy of the argument. We will quote and analyze it by paragraphs. And, first, "Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended or repealed." This paragraph only refers to cities and towns to be incorporated under general laws thereafter to be passed by the legislature, and the legislature is only authorized to classify such cities and towns by general laws. This is the necessary implication from the enumeration of those cities and towns for classification to the exclusion of all others; and the implication grows in strength from a consideration of the paragraph which immediately follows it. And, second, it is this, consisting of two clauses: "Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under general laws whenever a majority of the electors, voting at a general election, shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith; and cities and towns heretofore, or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof, framed and adopted by authority of the constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." What is the meaning of the first clause of this paragraph? By irresistible inference the meaning is that cities and towns previously incorporated are not within the operation or ban of the constitution, but are excluded therefrom; and can only be brought within its operation or ban upon these conditions: First, that they become incorporated or organized under the general laws; second, they cannot become organized or incorporated under general laws unless a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall "so determine;" and, third, the organization or incorporation must be in conformity with the determination of the electors. Until these conditions are performed municipal corporations previously organized cannot be brought within the ban or operation of the constitution and consequently not within the operation of the general laws. And this is apparent from the second clause of the paragraph. Let us paraphrase it. If it had been the intention of the constitution to make all cities and towns incorporated previous to the adoption of the constitution "subject to and controlled by general laws," without regard to whether their charters were "framed or adopted by virtue of the constitution," the intention would have been expressed in these words: "And cities and towns heretofore or hereafter organized shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." But such is not the language. Continuing the paraphrase, omitting the word "hereafter," and we have the clause to read: "And cities and towns heretofore organized, and all charters thereof, framed or adopted by authority of this constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws." To what do the words "all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution" refer and qualify? Cities and towns which precede them in the clause. What charters are subject to and controlled by general laws? Those framed or adopted by authority of the constitution. An incorporated city or town without a charter is a legal monstrosity—something no civilized man ever knew. It is the charter which clothes the population of a district with municipal powers. No incorporated city can exist without a charter to create it; the charter confers its governmental functions as a municipality. To control a city separately from its charter by law is a legal impossibility, because there can be no city without a charter to control. It must be presumed that the framers of the constitution were fully aware of this, and did not intend that cities or towns, independent of the "charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of the constitution," should be subject to and controlled by general laws. There is a dictum in the case of Staube vs. Election Commissioners, 61 Cal., 313, to the effect that municipal corporations, previously incorporated, could be controlled by general laws, and the last clause of this section was quoted; but the court did not analyze it, nor was the question involved in the case; nor was the decision by a unanimous court, and it is not law. But it is thought by some that the amendment of a charter of a municipality is special legislation, and forbid by section twenty-five of article four of the constitution. This section declares that "the legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases," and then follows thirty-two enumerated cases, none of which include the amendment of a city charter, and the thirty-third and last clause in this section is in these words: "In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." How can a general law be made applicable to the amendment of the charter of the city of Sacramento? Who is to be the judge as to whether a general law can be made applicable? The legislature is the sole and absolute judge. This clause recognizes the necessity for special legislation, and seeks merely to limit, not to prohibit it. This has been frequently decided in those states from whose constitutions this section has been taken. As a general law cannot be made applicable to the amendment of the charter of Sacramento city, the legislature, in their discretion, may amend it by special act. Of this there is no reasonable doubt.

We have thought that the importance of this subject warrants us in giving so much space to it in this and the preceding number.

Every few years there is a small spasmodic effort among the lawyers to form some kind of a union or association for the better conduct of professional affairs. Something over a year ago there was a meeting of a number of the members of our bar, and a temporary organization effected. Committees were appointed upon a more perfect organization, and there the matter rests. This should not be abandoned. No profession in the world occupies such a high standard, or has such a controlling influence upon the affairs of the nation. Members of the bar exercise a power upon the public policy of the country, as well as questions of law affecting individual rights. There should be a close bond between the honorable members of the profession; indeed, there should be no dishonorable members. To guard against the latter contingency, a bar association is a necessity. Rigid rules and regulations for the government of the conduct of attorneys are essential. Again, the members of the bar, collectively, ought to be in a position for alliance with other bar associations in the Union. This is important in order to have some unity of action in securing a more uniform system of commercial and divorce laws; also laws of descent, of wills, conveyances, limitations, and laws affecting comity between states, and the extradition of criminals. The condition and improvement of our judicial system, and to maintain a high standard of professional honor and ethics among the members of the bar, is a consummation devoutly to be wished. A bar association in this city could be brought in direct communication and unity with other kindred associations, and also identified with the "National Bar Association of the United States." When we consider the wide difference that often exists between states in their enactments, the benefit of a more perfect legal organization to remedy this inconsistency is apparent. Thus what would be barred by limitation in one state, is a good demand in another. In regard to wills and conveyances, what would be a good will or a good acknowledgment in one state, in another would be invalid. Hundreds of instances of these uncertainties and incongruities might be mentioned. It is only through organized bar associations throughout the Union that a reform can be effected.

If Sacramento could and would enforce the laws already in the books, the practical result would be high license and restriction. Section 2, subdivision 9, of the charter declares that the board of trustees shall have power "to license, tax, regulate, prohibit or suppress all dramshops, tippling houses, saloons, bars, and bar-rooms, * * * ." No further or greater power could be vested in the board, even by a new charter. Acting under this power, an attempt has been made to fix a license tax commensurate with the necessities, by ordinance 17. Unfortunately, there are such grave doubts about the enforcement of this ordinance, that the city collector is obliged to resort to a medium compromise measure in order to collect any licenses under these provisions. The actual fact exists, that the licenses which any of the most prominent saloons should be required to pay under the ordinance, would, upon a strict construction and an affidavit of the saloon keepers, amount to five times the amount they now pay. Yet so doubtful is the remedy for enforced collections that the city authorities are compelled to accept whatever sum it is convenient to obtain. There are no saloons that actually pay more than five dollars per month, while under the provisions of ordinance 17, and a verified account of the monthly gross receipts of very many saloons—which is the gauge of the amount of license to be paid—their monthly license would be not less than twenty dollars. It is the fear of encountering some of the inconsistencies of the present laws which are antagonistic to the constitution of the state that prevents their due enforcement. It is no use trying to disguise the fact or to hide the true situation from the people. Our system of ordinances and local regulations are sadly defective. The statute laws, also, relating to our local government are not in accordance with the progress of the times, and are in many instances so impracticable that no attempt even is made to enforce them. Our revenue system, aside from licenses, is so utterly inconsistent with the spirit of the times (having been actually repealed twenty-three years ago), that the authorities do not make an effort to collect by suit any delinquent taxes. It is only through the public spirit of our tax payers, who voluntarily pay their taxes, that governmental expenses are collected. The issue, at this time, of high license is childish. It is evidently a side show improvised for some ulterior purpose. What Sacramento needs is a board of trustees of brains who are able to grapple with living issues. A new system of local self government is of first importance. Those people who are now parading in the garb of injured people in prospect of some imaginary invasion of individual rights, do not know that the power to close every saloon and dram-shop in the city is now vested in the trustees. All good citizens should at once turn their attention to the suppression of dens of infamy and vice, which, in fact, are the source of all the crime in the city, rather than rendering them aid and comfort under the indiscriminate licensing of such places. All respectable saloon men should rather join in a crusade, if such there be, against these enemies of society rather than in their favor. When we consider that more than four million dollars annually are absorbed through the channels opened by the various places where intoxicating liquors are sold, it seems that the subject is of sufficient importance to at least suggest regulation. The vile compounds that are set out for the poor victim of drink, would, under a proper regulation, be at least driven out, and a more wholesome article—if such there be—substituted. We assert again, that this matter is not a question of high or low license, but one of regulation and restriction. The great difficulty in this city heretofore, has been the lack of power to enforce even our crude laws and ordinances. What we now need are new ordinances which can be enforced, and at the earliest possible time, a new organic law. Why, the authorities cannot even prevent the use of our public streets and sidewalks for private business purposes! You, gentlemen, who are croaking yourselves hoarse upon high license or low license, give more attention to the general welfare of the city, and the good people will be much better satisfied and rewarded.

The question of a proper regulation and restriction to the sale of intoxicating liquors is by no means one upon which there is a unity of sentiment. Prohibition is at all times impracticable, and the advocacy of extremes is never fruitful of any needed reform. High license is demanded by some as a compromise between extremes. No business man, who has the welfare of the community at heart, would desire to injure another in the lawful conduct of a legitimate business. The real remedy for the abuse of the sale of intoxicating liquors at retail and in bars, is a politic regulation, whereby the indiscriminate issuance of licenses can be restricted to those only who have good moral characters. In other words, to close all dives and disreputable places where the abuse of this prerogative is exercised. A license sufficiently high should be exacted, in order to meet the regulations which are necessary to suppress the disreputable places. As a matter of news to the general mass of the people, we announce that under our city organic laws, at the present time, without any further power or authority, either by vote of the people or otherwise, the Board of Trustees have the power to license, tax, regulate, suppress or prohibit any saloon, bar, and the sale, by retail, of any and all intoxicating liquors. It is only then upon a question of policy to what extent any regulations or restrictions shall be enforced. Our views are, that there should be strict regulations and restrictions sufficient to abrogate all nuisances; i. e., the extermination of all dives and disreputable places where the abuses of our license system arise. No sensible man would ask that those who are conducting decent places of social resort shall be oppressed or injured in their business by extreme measures. But the legislative power of this municipality may be directed to the abuses without certainly being accused of prohibitory views.

That was an amusing anecdote of Judge G. E. Williams and George G. Blanchard, of Placerville. Some years ago, before Judge Williams went upon the bench, he and Judge Blanchard were adverse to each other in a suit where an old miner was sued upon a book account—Williams for plaintiff and Blanchard for defense. A jury composed of old-time miners was impaneled to try the case. Judge Williams presented his case and introduced the books, which made out a complete cause of action. Blanchard saw there was no defense, the books being conclusive against his client. He resolved to employ stratagem with the jury, and play upon the credulity of the old miner jurors. Any one that has ever heard Blanchard before a jury can readily understand the manner in which he addressed this jury. His quaint style and forcible emphasis formed a picture that was irresistible. This is the way he went to the jury: "My old miner friends," said Blanchard, "these people here have introduced a lot of books. Why," he continued, "who ever heard of an old miner keeping books? Books—books. Why books are the instruments and resorts of rascals; they are invented to swindle unsuspecting old miners." Continuing—"Why you all know the honest old miner, the defendant, and that he, like you, kept no books; and you will not let this plaintiff take advantage of him because he kept books. No, gentlemen, I mistake your old miner temper if you allow this satanic decree of books to be used against him." During the whole of the case Blanchard never once touched upon the facts, but imposed upon the old fellows by denouncing the "books." It is needless to say that the jury followed Blanchard and rendered a verdict for the defendant, much to the disgust of Judge Williams.

There has been an impression among our people—and, indeed, a number of eminent scientific men have advanced the theory—that there is an inexhaustible artesian supply of water in old channels running beneath a portion of this valley, near Sacramento city. Some even proposed to demonstrate this fact by boring wells to a considerable depth. Did it ever occur to these gentlemen that the laws of nature, the laws of gravitation and hydraulic pressure must necessarily form an important factor, in producing an artesian supply of water? There is only a fall of about twenty-six feet from Sacramento to the level of the sea. To say that there could be undercurrents or old river channels at any greater depth than twenty-six feet, would be to revoke the laws of gravitation—of nature. If these undercurrents or channels exist, there must be outlets. Where are they? By invoking the imagination and genius of Jules Verne, one might overcome these immutable laws and find the outlets in the Celestial Kingdom, or through Allan Quartermain's wonderful cave river.

Discovery of Gold.

The first mention of gold in California was made in Hakluyt's account of the voyage of Sir Francis Drake, who spent five or six weeks, in June and July, 1579, in a bay on the coast of California. It has always been a question and will remain a question, whether this bay was that of San Francisco or one further to the north. In the narrative of Hakluyt it is written: "There is no part of the earth here to be taken up wherein there is not a reasonable quantity of gold or silver." At this day we know that this statement must have been untrue, and was doubtless written for the purpose of attracting attention to the importance of the expedition of Sir Francis Drake. California was then a comparatively unknown country. It had been visited only by early explorers, and its characteristics were merely conjectured. When Hakluyt wrote there could hardly be a "handful of soil taken up wherein there is not a reasonable quantity of gold or silver," in the light of the present statement was absurd, for neither gold nor silver has ever been found in the vicinity of the point where Drake must have landed.

Other early explorers stated that gold had been found long before the discovery by Marshall; and there is no doubt that a well founded surmise prevailed that gold existed in California. The country had been explored at times since the sixteenth century, by Spanish, Russian and American parties. It was visited by Commodore Wilkes, who was in the service of the United States on an extensive exploring expedition; and members of his party ascended the Sacramento river and visited Sutter at the fort, while others made explorations by land.

James D. Dana, a celebrated author of several works on mineralogy, was the mineralogist of this expedition and passed by land through the upper portion of California. In one of his works he says that gold rock and veins of quartz were observed by him in 1832 near the Umpqua river, in Southern Oregon; and again, that he found gold near the Sierra Nevada and on the Sacramento river; also, on the San Joaquin river and between those rivers. There is, in the reports of the Fremont exploring expedition, an intimation of the existence of gold.

It has been said that in October and November, 1845, a Mexican was shot at Yerba Buena (San Francisco) on account of having a bag of gold dust, and when dying pointed northward and said, "Legos! Legos!" (yonder), indicating where he had found the gold dust.

It has been claimed, and with a considerable degree of probability, that the Mormons who arrived in San Francisco on the ship "Brooklyn" found gold before the famous discovery at Coloma. The circumstances in connection with this discovery are somewhat romantic. The Mormon people had established themselves at Nauvoo, Illinois, a point where they believed themselves to be beyond the reach of persecution. However, the country there became populated by those not of their faith, and the antagonism against the Mormons resulted finally in bloodshed, and the founder of the church, Joseph Smith, was shot by a mob and killed. The Mormons then determined to remove farther west, and into a section of country beyond the reach of the government of the United States. They selected California as their future home. Their land expedition started across the plains, and a ship named the "Brooklyn" carried from the eastern side of the continent a number of the believers. Samuel Brannan, who was prominent in the early history of Sacramento, San Francisco and the State, was one of their leading men who came with the sea voyagers. When the "Brooklyn" immigrants landed at Yerba Buena (San Francisco) they found that the United States forces had taken possession of California, and that they had landed upon soil possessed by the nation from which they were endeavoring to flee. Couriers were sent overland to intercept the land party, and it is said that they found them at the place where Salt Lake City is now located. The overland party determined to locate at that place, although it was then sterile and unpromising. Those who came on the "Brooklyn" dispersed in California, and some of them located at Mormon Island, in Sacramento county; and it is claimed that they found gold long before the discovery at Coloma, but that they kept their discovery a secret. However that may be, it is a fact that mining was prosecuted by them about the time of Marshall's discovery.

At a banquet of the Associated Pioneers of the territorial days of California, held in the city of New York, on January 18, 1878, Colonel T. B. Thorpe, a veteran of the Mexican War, who had been on the staff of General Zachary Taylor, stated that while he had been employed as a journalist in New Orleans, several years before the discovery of gold at Coloma, a Swede, evidently far gone into consumption, called upon him and represented that he was what in his country was called a "king's orphan," that he had been educated at a governmental institution, on condition that after he had received his education he should travel in foreign lands, observe and record what he had seen, and deposit his records with the government. He stated that he had visited California, remained several days at Sutter's fort, enjoying the hospitality of Sutter; that while there he closely examined the surrounding country and became convinced that it abounded richly in gold. Colonel Thorpe stated that the Swede gave him this opinion in writing. At that banquet General Sutter was present, and Colonel Thorpe called upon him to say whether he had any recollection concerning the Swedish visitor. Sutter replied that he did recollect the visit, which had occurred about thirty-four years before; and he also remembered that the Swede expressed himself regarding the presence of mineral wealth in the neighboring hills: "but, added the General, 'I was too much occupied at the time with other concerns to devote any time or attention to it. My crops were ripe, and it was imperative that they should be gathered as quickly as possible, but I do recollect the scientific Swedish gentleman.'"

The report of the remarks delivered at that banquet were published, and in it is contained a copy of the manuscript to which Colonel Thorpe referred, in which the "king's orphan" wrote: "The Californias are rich in minerals. Gold, silver, lead, oxide of iron, manganese and copper ore are all met with throughout the country, the precious metals being the most abundant."

There is another account of an early gold discovery, which was published in the New Age, in San Francisco, the official organ of the Odd Fellows, in September, 1865. It purports to have been an extract written by the Paris correspondent of the London Star, who wrote that in the city of Paris he visited a private museum, and that its owner exhibited to him a nugget of gold, and stated that twenty-eight years before a poor invalid had presented himself and took out of his tattered coat a block of quartz, and asked the proprietor of the museum if he would purchase it, assuring him that it was full of gold. The stranger said: "I have come to you to apply to the government to give me a vessel and a crew of one hundred men, and I will promise to return with a cargo of gold." The proprietor of the museum presumed that the man was mad, and gave him a napoleon as a matter of charity, but retained a piece of the quartz. Afterward the quartz was analyzed, and it was proved to contain pure gold. Fifteen years elapsed, and a parcel and a letter were left at his door. The parcel was wrapped in a handkerchief, and was heavy. The letter was worn and almost illegible. On deciphering it, it proved to be the dying statement of the poor traveler, which, through the neglect of the lodging-house keeper where he had died after the interview referred to, had never been delivered. The package contained a block of quartz, and the letter was thus worded.

"You alone listened to me; you alone stretched out a helping hand to me. Alas! it was too late! I am dying. I bequeath my secret to you. The country from whence I brought this gold is called California."

The credit, however, for the practical discovery of gold in California is due to James W. Marshall. It is true that a gold mine had been worked in 1841 in the lower part of the state, and that gold from that mine sent to the Philadelphia mint for coinage as early as July, 1843. The mine, however, proved unprofitable and was abandoned. The story of the discovery by Marshall at Coloma, in January, 1848, is confused, and the precise date upon which it was made can perhaps never be settled. Marshall was employed by Captain Sutter, and was in charge of a party of men erecting a saw-mill at the present site of Coloma, in El Dorado county. A raceway was dug and the water turned in. In examining the race afterward Marshall's attention was attracted by a shining object. He picked it up. It was gold. Other particles of the metal were collected, and Marshall came with them to Sutter's fort and exhibited them to his employer, Sutter. They were tested in a crude way, and Sutter became convinced that the metal was gold. Afterward specimens were sent to Monterey, then the capital of the territory, and exhibited to General R. B. Mason, the military governor, and to W. T. Sherman, at that time an obscure officer in the United States Army, but who has since risen to national notoriety. The integrity of the metal was established, the news of the discovery sent forth, the world was electrified, and immigration poured in from every civilized country.

James W. Marshall was born in Hope Township, Hunterdon county, New Jersey, October 8, 1810. On arriving at man's estate he removed to Indiana, afterward to Illinois and Missouri; and arrived in California in 1844. In 1845 he came to Sutter's fort, and was employed by Captain Sutter. He took an active part in the California revolution of 1846. After his discovery of gold the legislature of the state pensioned him for a time. Subsequently he settled on a small piece of land at Coloma, near where he had discovered the gold, and made his living by farming. About 5 o'clock on the morning of August 10, 1885, he was found dead in his cabin, and was buried near the spot where gold was first found by him. He was never married.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

The first concert of the second series of the "McNeill Club" was given Monday night at the Metropolitan theatre to a large and fashionable audience—congregation would be a more truthfully descriptive term. We never saw such a cold-blooded, undemonstrative house. One would have supposed that it was a sacred Sunday concert. There was entirely too much stiffness. It would seem to the auditor that the members of the club were fearful of disturbing their immaculate shirt fronts or creasing their claw-hammer coats. The concert, as far as the artistic part and the numbers in the house, was a grand success; the vocal and orchestral music superb. That favorite little "song-bird," Mrs. McNeill, has few equals either in society or upon the operatic stage. Any other audience would have fairly lifted the roof with applause. The same might be said of a number of other artists that appeared. The programme was excellently rendered and was as follows:

FIRST PART.
Comrades in Arms	McNeill Club and Orchestra.	Adam
Amo (Orchestral Accompaniment)	Alfred Wilkie.	Mattei
Blue Bells of Scotland	McNeill Club.	D. Buck
Under the Greenwood Tree (with flute obligato)	Mrs. John McNeill.	Arne
Fairest is She	McNeill Club.	Nevin
Hail Us, Ye Free (Eranian)	Ladies, McNeill Club and Orchestra.	Verdi
SECOND PART.

Ever be Happy (Euchantress)	Soprano Obligato.	Balfe
Star of Love	Mrs. John McNeill.	Wallace

Le Filles de Cadiz	Orchestra.	Delibes

Gustav Kobbé, in March Century, presents a most instructive article upon Amateur Theatricals, giving the history and origin of such. While amateur theatricals have been robbed of their charm of privacy by vaulting ambition, there should be a reaction in favor of the legitimate amateur. This is "an intellectual lever that our society could ill afford to lose." The great trouble, however, of recent times has been the craze of society women to become blazing stars in the dramatic firmament. Mrs. Potter is one of these, and it is but a question of brief time before she will disappear from the stage and from memory—save only as a very foolish and misguided woman. Now we have another society woman, Mrs. Rudolph Allen, who claims to have received this divine inspiration. The theatres are filled with these very, very bad apologies for actresses. The rule might be made to safely apply to very many of the alleged actors. Nothing of this kind should deter the usefulness of the amateur in the legitimate field.

There has been at all times since the play of "Hamlet" was written, a diversity of opinion as to what Shakespeare really intended. Whether Hamlet was mad, or only assuming madness. Martin W. Cooke has furnished a little volume entitled "The Human Mystery in Hamlet." One of the most interestingly absurd theories was held by some literary critics "that Hamlet was a woman masquerading in man's attire." Mr. Cooke disposes of many of these delusions. The true solution is that Hamlet is not a man—he is a type. "Hamlet" is made to exhibit mental agitation, the purpose or end of which is to show neither madness nor the struggles of the hero with the palpable obstacles to his action, but rather the conflict between his will and his passions, and thereby to illustrate that contention which begins with his birth and ends only with his death.

It is announced that Eben Plympton will soon appear in California at the head of a company in the "Mountebank." We remember when Plympton (then a green boy) first appeared in Sacramento, in small parts. He was a member of Joe Proctor's company, which at the time included Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Bates, J. F. Cathcart, Wm. Cogswell, Billy Crosbie, Jennie Mandeville, Mrs. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Edmunds, Walter Leman and others. Often was poor young Plympton the victim of merciless gulling by the other members of the company. And many times has the writer of this heard him retort upon his persecutors that some day he would reach the topmost round of the profession. We have not seen him for years, but from announcements through the press believe he has realized, in a considerable measure, his ambition.

No class of people are so much given to superstition and ridiculous crazes as are actors and actresses. Let an actor don a very peculiar style of apparel and there are hundreds who will ape the fashion. Actresses appear in a new form of hat or glove, or other article of dress, and immediately we have the "Bernhardt" style or the "Davenport" hat, etc. Fanny Davenport has started the latest craze. When out driving she carries a small Japanese hand-warmer, which is her substitute for a muff. This new toy, which never fails to excite curiosity, is a tiny stove, whose dimensions may be six inches by six and three-quarters of an inch. Silver is the material and brown ivory. The framework is dark silver, and curiously wrought medallions of ivory are set as panels in the lid. It is a pretty bit of jewelry, and is heated by a carbon pencil.

The Augustin Daly Company, in a brilliant comedy called "A Night Off," appeared at the Metropolitan theater last week. The artists were all new to a Sacramento audience. Rarely have we had such a uniformly artistic company. There were no "sticks." The ladies of the company were of a superior order of dramatic ability. Geo. Easton, Chas. J. Burbridge, E. G. Spangler and Stanley Reynolds are all clever artists. Mrs. E. A. Eberle made a matchless mother-in-law. This is the first time "A Night Off" has been presented in Sacramento. It was a success in every sense of the word. The ridiculous situations of the comedy kept the audience in a roar from the start.

A letter from Belle Boyd's manager, published in the New York Dramatic News, verifies what THEMIS said on February 24th: That the person alleged to have been assassinated was not Belle Boyd. She is now giving dramatic recitations of her war experiences with G. A. R. Posts.

Kate Mayhew's evidently partial to Sacramento. Clyde Heron (Miss Lucy O'Brien), and C. M. Gray are members of her company. All Sacramentans remember little Charley Gray who was a member of the little amateur minstrel and dramatic club organized here several years ago by Bert Kidder, Lou Crackboun, Rich. Cohn and a number of others.

John P. Jackson, in the Cosmopolitan, of March, gives a pretty review of the "Ring of the Nibelung," and the successful efforts of Dr. Damrosch to make the musical public acquainted with the true beauties of Wagner's music, as well as the dramatic powers of the artists. There are a number of excellent illustrations of scenes of the play.

The New York Dramatic News hauls the Argonaut dramatic critic over the coals for glaring errors about Pauline Markham, Pasquale Brignoli, Cottrelly and Jansen. The scoring winds up with this: "Shades of 'Betsy B.,' that her old and spicy dramatic department on the Argonaut should have fallen into such hands * * *"

At the Metropolitan the Madrid Spanish Opera Company is now holding the boards. A very high order of music is developed by the members of the combination. "Campanone" on Friday night, and "Mascot" last evening drew good houses. To-night "La Tempestad" will be given.

Young sapheads will pay $5 for a bouquet for some ballet dancer or chorus singer, when he is in debt for his washing. This breed of animals, however, only infest large cities. Occasionally a few develop in this city.

Frederick Warde will give the Sacramento public a treat in the legitimate drama next week. "Virginius," "Damon and Pythias," and "Mountebank" are in his repertoire.

Book Chat.

Again has the antiquarian book maniac reported a discovery. This time a writer in the St. James Gazette has desecrated the sepulture of Goldsmith and accused him of plagiarism. First we had Donnelly with his cryptogram attempting to shatter our idol and rob us of our devotions at the shrine of Shakespeare. Now we have this literary crank of the St. James Gazette, fishing up what he alleges to be the original poems of an obscure French poet, and accuses Oliver Goldsmith with plagiarism. The poem alleged to have been appropriated is that famous one commencing with these lines:

When lovely woman stoops to folly,
And finds too late that men betray,
What charms can soothe her melancholy—
What art can wash her guilt away?
The only art her guilt to cover,
To hide her shame from every eye,
To give repentance to her lover
And wring his bosom—is to die.

In a copy of Segur, printed in Paris, in 1719, the following lines appear:

Lorsqu'une femme, a pres trop de tendresse,
D'un homme sent la trahison,
Comment, pour cette si douce foiblesse,
Peut-elle trouver une guerison?
Le seul remede qu'elle peut ressentir,
La seule ravanche pour son tort,
Pour faire rep tard l'amant repentir,
Helas! trop tard—est la mort.

A translation forms the sense and rhythm of the above.

It will take more than this alleged revelation to shake our faith in the honesty of the author of the "Vicar of Wakefield." Call another witness, Mr. Critic!

The North American Review for March is before us. General W. T. Sherman has contributed to this number an interesting reminiscence of "Old Times in California," which will be read with interest by all old timers. This number contains a number of choice articles, among which are: "Assassination as a Political Argument," "Was Clayton's Murder a Political Crime?" "Humanity's Gain from Unbelief," "Della Bacon's Unhappy Story," "Legislative Injustice to Railways," "Common Sense and Copy Rights," "At the Goethe Society," "Can our Churches be Made More Useful" and a number of other articles. For sale by H. C. Megerle, 4th, J and K.

ENGLISH LIFE. By T. C. Crawford. Published by Lovell & Co., New York, in the International Series. H. C. Megerle, Sacramento, Agent.

This little work is a compilation of Mr. Crawford's letters from London to the New York World. Only those which were upon important features of English life are embodied in this volume. The personal observations of royalty, as seen through Yankee eyes, make good reading. The Derby and Ascot meetings, Prince of Wales levees, the English newspapers, amusements, etc., are graphically described.

The Cosmopolitan, for March, is a readable volume. The contents are: "The Ring of the Nibelung," "Edward Everet Hale," "In the Headsman's Room," "A Catch," "Some Washington Homes," "From the Sea to the Desert," "A Wind Song," "Birds," "Wu chih Tien," "Oskimo Ice Whaling," "A City of Sea Shells," "Uncle Jonathan's Ditty," "Social Problems," "In the Library." For sale by H. C. Megerle, 4th, J and K, Sacramento.

Rider Haggard, who has been lately thrown in the background by the vaporings of Mrs. Chanler and Mrs. Atherton, now comes to the front again with a new novel—"Cleopatra." This author, too, wrote himself out and sought to furnish literature by measurement only.

It is announced that Amelia Rives-Chanler intends to inflict another of her books upon a patient, tired and suffering public. It will be entitled "The Witness of the Sun." Say it is immoral and the book will sell.

Wheatland Graphic.

Under the above name a new Sunday paper has been issued at Sacramento by Messrs. Win. J. Davis, W. A. Anderson and Geo. Blanchard, all gentlemen of acknowledged literary ability. With such a corps of writers the success of the venture is assured. The first number is a model of typographical neatness, and its contents highly interesting, the editorial articles having a dignified conciseness and pith to them that is attractive, and awakens a desire for more of a like kind. The selections and original articles show good taste and careful preparation. The local news of Sacramento of Saturday and the latest telegraph until Sunday morning being presented. A field for such a journal has existed at the capital for a long time, and THEMIS gives abundant evidence of its admirable adaptability to fill the place. It will be principally devoted to literature, drama and art, and we wish it well. A. J. Johnston & Co., the well known printers, are the publishers.

Social Chat and Experiences of Lawyers and Doctors.

It is often amusing, as well as instructive, to listen to the anecdotes and experiences of medical and legal gentlemen, while in social converse. Frequently at a popular place of resort, the writer meets a party of doctors, again a number of lawyers, sometimes a joint party of both, where joke, anecdote and professional experience is the order. At such pleasant gatherings the useful, entertaining and amusing experiences given, would, if recorded, fill a large volume. Recently at such assemblages the usual happy experiences were the subject in order, when one of the learned medicos gave an account of a woman who swallowed a tooth-brush, and after fifteen years' experience of various pains and conditions the brush was, by a skillful surgical operation, removed from the lower part of the stomach. The woman got well.

This was the prompter for another case, where a young girl 15 years old, swallowed a mass of hair, which was also removed without ultimate injury. Then another, of the extraction of a tea-spoon, which had been taken as diet nine months prior. Continuing in this line, another recalled a case of dieting upon a fork, which remained in the stomach five years, was extracted and the patient lived. More yet, a knife-blade and butcher's sharpening steel, respectively, had been removed from the region of the epigastrium of two patients, both of whom got well.

By this time it devolved upon the lawyers to recount some of their remarkable experiences and anecdotes. An old veteran told a story on Judge Van R. Paterson while practicing at the Stockton bar. "Van R.," as he was familiarly called, went up to a little place to try a case before a justice of the peace. The action was for the possession of eight sheep. Paterson was for the defense. The first witness was asked, "Do you know the sheep in question?" Paterson objected, saying, "This is improper; I suppose the counsel will next ask who introduced them." The justice sustained the objection, remarking that he "could not allow such foolish questions." The attorney for the plaintiff tried to reason with the justice; but it was no use, he was obdurate. He next asked, "Who is the owner of these sheep?" Paterson interposed objection, and with an assumed indignant frown said to the justice: "Why, he wants to make the witness the judge and have him decide the case. Who is the owner, indeed!—that is for the court to say." The justice ruled the question out. By this time the attorney for the plaintiff was thoroughly disgusted, and declined to offer any further evidence. There being absolutely no evidence, Paterson moved for a nonsuit. Greatly to his surprise, the justice refused to grant the motion, announcing that "he knew the plaintiff to be a good man, and who would not have brought suit if he had no cause; further, he knew that he had lost thirteen sheep." (The suit was for eight only.)

While Paterson was a little staggered at this decision, after such favorable rulings on the evidence, he put the witnesses for the defense on the stand, and asked the first witness: "Do you know the sheep mentioned in this suit?" Plaintiff's attorney now turned the tables by making the same objection used against him. The old justice looked at Paterson and said: "I guess he is right." Paterson resorted to his wits to counter this, by urging the court that the positions of plaintiff and defendant were entirely different, and the rules of evidence were not the same. "You see," said Paterson, "the defendant has been forced into court against his will, therefore he has a right to ask this question." The justice agreed with him, and allowed Paterson to prove what he pleased. This being so satisfactory to Paterson, and there being no evidence other than what was in his favor, the case was submitted with the certainty in his mind of a judgment.

The justice took a recess for a few moments to make up his judgment. Just before the court again convened, Paterson spoke to the justice and asked, "Have you decided the case?" The justice answered, "Oh, yes." "Well, how," asked Paterson. "I have given plaintiff judgment for thirteen sheep," replied the justice. "How the devil can you do that when only eight sheep were sued for?" exclaimed Paterson. "Oh, I knew before the trial that plaintiff lost thirteen sheep, and that defendant had them," concluded the justice. Judge Paterson resolved after that never to rely on sharp tactics, even with an old country justice.

Another good story was told of the late Chief Justice W. T. Wallace, who, since his retirement from the Supreme Bench, and shortly before his assumption of the Superior Judgeship of San Francisco. Judge Wallace was called upon to try an unimportant suit before a justice of the peace in Santa Clara county. During the trial his quick perception discovered that the old justice desired to be perfectly impartial in his rulings, and would sustain or overrule objections or motions in such a manner as to make them equal on each side. Thus, if Wallace was overruled at one time, the next ruling would be in his favor, so as to exactly adjust the rulings on both sides. Observing this, Wallace resolved to take a substantial advantage of this procedure, so that it would be of practical benefit. So when it came to his turn for a favorable ruling, he in the most serious and dignified manner moved to dismiss the case. The old justice granted the motion, as it was Judge Wallace's turn. No amount of argument of opposing counsel could change it, and Judge Wallace walked off bursting with laughter at his opponent's discomfiture.

Rather an amusing incident occurred in Judge Armstrong's court in this city not long since. An aspiring young lawyer, before the meeting of the court, explained to the court officers in social chat that he always made it a practice to study the characteristics of the judges before whom he practiced, with a view of determining how to make the most favorable impression on the mind of the presiding officer; and that his conclusion as to Judge Armstrong was to agree with him in every ruling. Said he: "Just watch me try this case this morning, and you will see that I am a judge of human nature. I patronize theatres and attend churches and other gatherings, for the sole purpose of pursuing this study. It is in my estimation, an important part of the education of a lawyer." The case was called, and everything went on without a hitch until the student in human nature interposed an objection to some testimony; he argued it at length; it was promptly overruled by the court. The young lawyer gracefully acquiesced, and said: "I entirely agree with your honor's views; I had no confidence in the point when I made it." The judge remarked sharply: "It is unprofessional to trifle with the time of the court by the making of silly objections. If you repeat this, sir, I will send you to jail for contempt." The student in human nature subsided with faith in his theory very greatly shaken.

These are but a few of the very many amusing incidents of court life, which we will publish when space permits.

Political.

The political parties have placed their municipal tickets in the field, and everything is ready for the fray—if it can be called a fray, for the Republicans have practically a walk-over. As this paper stated last week, the Republican Convention could be controlled by neither of the elements who have been accustomed to make the primaries and conventions the battle grounds of their little spleen and the arenas for the exhibition of their selfishness of purpose and narrowness of view. The petty statesmen who are conspicuous in these conflicts had arranged their programmes, and each side had its candidates selected in advance for every nomination on the ticket. A conservative element—an element of Republicans who are not spoils seekers, an element who desire the selection of men of capacity to fill our offices—men who are not tied up on any proposition of appointment or policy, but whose very standing guarantees ability and integrity—stepped in. That element forced all of the programme candidates out of the convention. The result is the nomination of a ticket which will not be defeated; every nominee on it will be elected. It is conceded by prominent Democrats that it is the strongest ticket that has been nominated in this city for many years. The only hope the Democrats have for success is to resort to the stereotyped tactics of former campaigns, to take advantage of side issues, encourage them, and in that way slide in their candidates. This devilish plan of muddying the political waters to deceive, enabled the Democrats to load down the board of trustees a few years ago with sticks. We do not think the people will again be deceived by political schemes of this sort. It should be recollected that in no instance in our municipal elections in the past have these side shows ever been gotten up to benefit the Republican ticket. A reflection as to the incapacity of the men they have in some instances carried into the board of trustees and other offices, should be of some significance to our people. Through the incapacity of some of the members of the city board in the past, Sacramento has been retarded; we have not been able to keep up with the advance of the times.

A comparison with other cities—and even with Woodland, a town in an adjoining county—is against us. We have been constantly compelled to apologize to the outside world. There is one way to remedy this: Put men of brains at our legislative and executive heads. We are not addressing anything we may say in this paper to any but the intelligent among our people. We care not for the small army among us who are so conspicuous at elections; whose open palms extend behind them; whose votes and "influence" are controlled by the sack; and who, if the law could be enforced, would land in state prison. Nor have we very much respect for those who may attempt to apply the "knife" to punish candidates they do not like, or who will not come up to the captain's office and produce the required coin to purchase their friendship. There has been much talk that certain elements contemplate the "knifing" of certain gentlemen on the Republican ticket. If the attempt be made, the parties at the bottom can be easily located, and we advise the Republican committee and all honest men to be on their guard. Such attempts are usually accompanied by the corrupt use of money. A little vigilance on the part of a few may result in sending some of these corruptors to the penitentiary. This paper will volunteer to furnish additional counsel without cost to punish such offenders. It is not difficult to spot men who engage in this business; they are known to about every man who has run for an office.

John Stevens, the Republican nominee for Second Trustee, has been a successful business man in this community for a great many years. He is a man against whom no adverse criticism can be truthfully uttered. He will enter office untrammelled. He has always been a staunch Republican. In the board of trustees Mr. Stevens will represent no clique or faction; he will represent the city of Sacramento and her best interests. He is not a man of contracted views, and we will venture if the question of his nomination and election was as to whether he should receive them in shackles, he would have stood on his dignity as a man and independently replied that if the price of the office was to truckle to any man or set of men he wanted not the honor. We know that Mr. Stevens has been approached to commit himself to vote for the appointment of particular individuals to sundry subordinate offices, and that he has been asked to say in advance what he will do in regard to some matters of legislative importance to this city.

He is right in declining to enter the office as a tool. We have known of very many instances where men have unequivocally pledged themselves before election and have unblushingly broken their pledges. An honest and capable man needs no pledging. Men who will truckle for popular votes by a committal in advance to everybody and everything are either knaves or cranks. Past experience has demonstrated that in their election the people have always come out losers.

E. H. McKee for Auditor, John J. Buckley for Assessor and Geo. A. Putnam for Collector, are the present incumbents. Their records are certainly satisfactory, and it will be difficult for any intelligent citizen who regards the interests of Sacramento to point out a reason for any change. They are men drilled and skilled in the performance of the intricate and important duties of their respective positions; to break in men inexperienced and untried would be unwise as a business proposition. Sacramento has no money to throw away in educating new men to fill ministerial offices. No merchant would discharge a competent bookkeeper or clerk and fill the place with another of doubtful competency.

George B. Blue has been a carriage maker in this city for many years. He is a man of strict integrity, and beyond approach by any corrupting influence. His many acquaintances will stand sponsor to those in this community who do not know him, as being a man of a high order of capability to fill the office of Fire Commissioner; one whose conduct will be beyond any reproach.

With such a ticket as the Republican party presents success is assured.

Work of our Local Legislators.

Little attention is paid to what the members we elect to the legislature from this county accomplish. That has been the rule in the past; it is the rule at present. Many of our citizens who scrutinized their votes at the last November election were then disposed to view the important questions that would come before the legislature with seriousness, but they relapsed into indifference, and have paid little attention to what has or has not been accomplished by our local representatives.

Our delegation consists of F. R. Dray, Senator; and W. M. Petrie, E. C. Hart and L. H. Fassett, Assemblymen.

Their votes on matters of general state importance have not been adversely criticised.

Of interest to Sacramento county they have successfully handled the following measures:

An appropriation of $40,250, to improve the grounds in the park east of the capitol building.

An appropriation of $3,200 to construct a concrete walk from the capitol building to Twelfth and L streets, and another from the building to Twelfth and N streets—walks similar to those which now extend to Tenth and L and Tenth and N.

An appropriation of $2,000 to grade Fifteenth street east of the capitol grounds.

An appropriation of $17,920 to remove the wooden steps in the walks in the capitol park and to replace them with substantial and ornamental steps of cut granite.

An appropriation of $11,000 for an extension to the state printing office.

All of these bills have passed both houses and are now in the hands of the Governor.

Another bill has been passed, but it is held by a motion to reconsider, to provide a room for the deposition of archives, in the basement of the capitol. It appropriates $10,000 for that purpose.

Sundry minor bills have been passed.

A bill is now in the hands of the Governor to appropriate $112,500 for the electric and water-power works at Folsom. It will doubtless become a law.

In addition, our delegation were really the practical movers in the passage of the bill for the relief of the laborers and other small holders of drainage claims under the act of 1880. Under the act of 1885, the larger claims have been paid, but the smaller, yet equally deserving ones, largely owned by persons in Sacramento and Marysville, have been waiting for their money all these years.

In all, we think that our delegation should be congratulated on their work. No important measure that has been placed in their hands has failed, and the people of Sacramento county certainly cannot complain of want of fidelity and good judgment on the part of their representatives.

Death of Chris Zimmerman.

Christian Zimmerman, an old resident of this city, died at half past 11 o'clock yesterday, of hemorrhage of the stomach. His death was unexpected, and he was out on the streets as usual during the early part of the day. With W. L. Pritchard and George Cowles, the deceased projected the extensive carriage works at Eighth and K streets, and erected for that purpose what is now the Clunie block. Mr. Zimmerman has for several years conducted a grocery store at Twelfth and E streets. He was a member of Sacramento Commandery No. 2, Knights Templar, Sacramento Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, Sacramento Lodge No. 40 F. and A. M., and Eureka Lodge of Odd Fellows. The deceased was a native of Switzerland, and aged about 53 years. The funeral will take place on Monday at 2 o'clock, from Masonic Hall, under the auspices of Sacramento Lodge F. and A. M., with Sacramento Commandery acting as escort.

The Usual Bluster.

A few weeks ago the public were alarmed at what appeared to be a phenomenal outbreak of crime. Burglaries and robberies were reported nightly; many of our citizens feared to be on the streets at night; the gunsmiths did a good business in the sale of revolvers. That the state of affairs were bad will be admitted; that the situation was as bad as reported we deny. There is always a disposition to magnify vice and its prevalence; to belittle virtue and its attributes. This city and the people in it are not nearly as bad as they have at times been painted. It is true that at times we have an influx of the migratory criminal element. They do not remain very long; they either leave freely or land in the State Prison. However, this recent excitement, which seems to have suddenly been allayed, reminds us that considerable parade was made about the matter of the passage of a law to increase and improve our police force. Much was said about it, but has the proposed law fallen through a knot-hole? Are we always to propose improvements on the spur of the moment, and drop the matter when another engrossing subject arises? Why alarm, condemn, propose relief, and then quit?

A Ubiquitous Swindler.

The hatless check-swindler who victimized a number of our merchants a few months ago, according to accounts from San Francisco, has been driving a thriving business in that locality. Several firms have been taken in for sums varying from $50 to $60 each. It seems strange, after so much publicity has been given to this style of swindling, that in the metropolis vigilant merchants and business men should be so neglectful as to fall into this scheme of robbery. No matter how much caution may be given, however, we will find otherwise careful business men fall victims to bunco thieves and confidence sharps. This swindler and forger has at least the merit of originality; he is enterprising. He first operated on this coast at Los Angeles, then in this city, then in San Francisco, then in San Jose, and then in the coast towns to Oregon and Washington territory. Now he has returned to the bay. He certainly has made his expenses. His visit to Sacramento realized to him $165.

The True Story.

We observe that the fellow Lewis, who murdered Perrin in San Francisco several weeks ago, makes a queer defense. He claims that in Colorado he was a member of a Vigilance Committee that caused Perrin to leave the country, by reason of which Perrin held a vengeful animosity against him, and attempted to kill him, Lewis, but he was too quick for him with his pistol. The facts are that these two worthies were partners in bunco steering business and confidence operators; that shortly before the murder the pair of them robbed a drummer in that city at one of their bunco devices, and escaped punishment by some means. When they arrived at San Francisco, Perrin, who had the proceeds of their little enterprise, refused to divide up with Lewis. The result was Perrin's murder by Lewis. These are the facts as they come to us.

Exciting Chess Contest.

The Chess Club of this city is playing a match game by telegraph with J. D. Redding, the well-known lawyer of San Francisco, who is considered one of the best players in that city. The game is nearing the close, with every indication of victory for the Sacramento club. We have some enthusiastic players in this city, and other games are in prospect.

Signal Service Report.

The signal service weather report during the week ending last night shows that the highest temperature was 75°, on the 4th, 5th and 6th; the lowest 45°, on the 3d and 6th. The rainfall during the week was .16 of an inch, making 10.10 inches for the season, as against 9.86 to even date last year. The reports last night show a low barometer, southerly winds and cloudy weather. The storm appears not to be over at the present writing.

Burglary.

On Friday night some midnight burglars made an entrance into the Louvre, from a rear window, and robbed the till of about $5 in change, and opened a number of packages of cigarettes, removing and taking therefrom the certificates, strewing the cigarettes upon the floor. The nature of the robbery would indicate the thieves to be small boys.

A Stray Shot.

About 8 o'clock last night a pistol shot was heard at O, Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets. There was a general rush of neighbors in the vicinity of the shooting, but no one could be found who knew anything about the occasion of the shot, or the one who fired it.

SOCIAL.

The entertainment and dance given by the Catholic Ladies' Relief Society No. 1, at Y. M. I. hall, on the evening of March 4th, was a pleasant affair, and largely attended. The musical programme was as follows: Vocal solo, by Millard, Miss W. S. Leake; instrumental solo, "Nocturne No. 2," Miss Annie Winters; trio, Misses Dake and McGuire, accompanied by Miss Belle McGuire; vocal duet, "Come Where the Violets Blow," Miss Ida Wilson and Mrs. Leake. The floor directors were: Len Ryan, Dr. C. T. Magill, and Messrs. Longshore and McInerney. The officers of the society are: Miss Emma Hughes, President; Mrs. S. Slight, Senior Vice President; Mrs. Thos. Fox, Junior Vice President; Miss Louise Conrad, Recording Secretary; Miss Winnie Devine, Financial Secretary; Miss Minnie Leonard, Corresponding Secretary; Miss Ida Wilson, Treasurer; Miss Lizzie O'Brien, Grand Marshal; Miss Nellie Connolly, Marshal; Miss Katie Fitzgerald, Assistant Marshal; Miss Emma Lanfrotter, Guard; Miss Angela Cadogan, Assistant Guard; Mesdames F. D. Ryan, W. S. Leake, Dr. M. J. McGill, and Misses Eliza Wittenbrock, Addie Hughes, Nellie Ogden, May F. Talbot, Nettie M. Hopley, Directors.

A grand masquerade ball was given at Deterding's hall, at Hangtown Crossing, Friday night. Very many Sacramentans attended. The ball was a success and enjoyable. The music was furnished by the First Artillery Band. There were about 100 masquers. The prizes were awarded as follows: Best dressed lady, Miss Gertie Jones, as Princess; prize, pair of vases. Best sustained character by gentleman, Chas. M. Hill, as a Spanish Cavalier; prize, watch holder. Best sustained character by lady, Miss Belle Taylor as "Venus;" prize, card receiver. Best original character by gentleman, R. H. Platt as "The Dude Darkey;" prize, ink stand. Best comical character by lady or gentleman, A. E. Noack and Chas. Schwilk, as "The Battered Senators;" prize, musical doll. Conpon prize, silver fruit dish, William Parry.

A progressive whist party was given by Miss Mamie Lindley last evening to a large number of friends. The residence was handsomely decorated. Victor Hartley carried off the first prize for the evening.

Miss Bea. Fitch leaves for Woodland to-day, to visit Miss M. Scheuller.

Mrs. E. J. Turner is visiting friends at Penryn.

H. R. Martin is rustivating for a few days among the foothills of Placer county.

Clark Pearson, of Augusta, Ill., is visiting Sacramento, the guest of W. E. Brown.

Frank. M. Pixley, editor of the San Francisco Argonaut, is in Sacramento, the guest of ex-Governor Booth.

San Francisco Items.

Ben. Morgan, an attorney, has sued Judge Sabin, of the United States District Court, for $10,000, for alleged slander, growing out of Judge Sabin's strictures upon Morgan's recent letter to Judge Hoffman, asking that Sabin and Sawyer be not allowed to sit in a case he had before the Court.

The war rumor at San Francisco has created great excitement. The defenseless condition of this port is the cause of much apprehension, in case there should be a declaration of war. Many people are fearful that the rumors are founded on truth.

Judge Hoge, of the Superior Court, has decided upon demurrer, that an injunction will not lie against the Chief of Police of San Francisco, to prohibit him from smashing in doors of suspected localities. The decision was in the case of Leong Foo vs. P. Crowley. This might be instructive to our local police, who are delicate about forcing an entrance to suspected gambling dens.

The Chinaman who was shot by one of his countrymen a day or two ago, died yesterday. The fight, as usual with the celestials, was over one of their human chattels. About the only thing a Chinaman will fight for is a woman—that is, the possession of a woman.

To-day, and every evening this week, there will be gospel meetings held in the First Baptist church, Ninth street, conducted by Dr. Kenard, of New York city. Good music and all welcome.

Samuel P. Putnam will lecture this evening, at Pioneer Hall, on the tyranny of Sabbath laws and the freedom of the Sunday, an important question. All are invited. Seats free.

The Liquor Dealers Association, pursuant to a notice in our advertising columns, will meet to-day in Turner Hall, at 2 P. M.

Mrs. Sykes—Yes; Bill is a most devoted and loving husband, dear. He only beats me when he is bilious or his corns hurt him. —To-day.

The Old Bohemian Club.

EDITORS THEMIS:—In grateful remembrance of the many happy hours spent with the "Old Bohemian Club," and brought more forcibly to mind by the mention of dear and familiar names, I cannot refrain from adding a few words to a past so fraught with pleasant associations and refined enlightenment, at a time particularly when the influence of cultured men and women made itself deeply felt through after life; and also to pay a small tribute to the noble woman whose generosity threw open her hospitable doors weekly, to gather around her congenial spirits whose aims were only to contribute to one another's pleasure, and for self improvement. She not only gave advantage to those intellectually superior, but her innate kindness prompted her to seek those whom force of circumstances gave small opportunities, and helped to refine and enlighten them by her own association and those that she gathered around her. Such cordiality and utter forgetfulness of self it has never been my good fortune to meet, and the little gatherings so teemed with kindly spirit that the coldest nature must have become harmonized in such genial surroundings. A perfect hostess in every sense—cultured, intelligent, refined. I am sure that every one of the little band dropped a tear at her untimely end. To those evenings, now past, go the pleasant recollections of my life, and I hope the mention of the leading spirit will not be out of place. Mrs. L. H. Foote was a woman of dignified appearance; handsome, intelligent, a fine reader, and above all, appreciative of others' merits. Her husband contributed many of his original efforts to our ears for the first time, and those who heard will not forget the beauty of his "Ma Pauvre Petite," read at the home of Gov. Newton Booth, on December 10, 1874; the entertainment was intended as a surprise to him, and an eve long to be remembered.

The programme lies before me now, and I think it a good opportunity to show the talent contained in the club, and trust, as was mentioned last week, it may influence a few choice spirits to a like effort in organization, and at the same time serve to bring to mind again details of a delightful evening. The programme was as follows:

"Myths" (original)—W. A. Anderson.
Scene from "The Hunchback"—Tracy Lesman, Albert Hart, W. H. Payne.
Bicarole (Schufert)—Mrs. John McNeill.

A Musical Somnambulist.

A married lady of this city, who is an ambitious student of music, got up in her sleep a few nights ago, and entering her parlor, lighted the gas, proceeded to open her piano, place her music in proper order, and in the most earnest manner ran over her musical exercises, being an arrangement with variations of "The Suwanee River," "No One to Love," etc. These she performed in a manner superior to the best efforts of her waking hours. During all this time her husband was an amused auditor of the midnight concert, yet fearful of doing any act that might awake her, as nervous persons under somnambulist influences are frequently thrown into hysteria upon any sudden awakening. The lady, however, deliberately took her time, and in her diaphanous attire paraded through the apartments in an independent manner, finally going to the secret hiding place of her jewelry and taking out a case containing her diamond earrings, went into her bedroom, stood before the dressing case mirror admiring herself and earrings. After all this she quietly returned to her parlor, extinguished the gas, and returned to bed. When told of her adventures next morning she was skeptical, and was only convinced by finding her earrings where she had left them, and not in their accustomed hiding place.

Hugh C. Jones, a prominent resident of Sutter county, died on Thursday, near Yuba City, of hemorrhage of the lungs. The deceased was the inventor of several improvements on the threshing machine, and was a good citizen, highly respected by all who knew him.—Wheatland Graphic.

Mr. Jones was well known in this city. Edw. Anderson, one of the Tullis murderers, and who was executed in this city, was working on a threshing machine on Mr. Jones' ranch immediately before and after the murder. Anderson rode from there in the night for the purpose of committing the crime, and returned in time so that his absence was hardly noticed. When danger of detection came, a marked note was sent to Anderson by his co-conspirators; he rode here in the night and was arrested at his house. Mr. Jones was an important witness in the case.

From the Northern Citrus Belt.

A gentleman from the northern portion of the State was in this city during the past week, and reports things lively in that portion of the great Sacramento valley. Large orchards and vineyards are being set out, and improvements are going on on all sides. In and around Kirkwood there is more stir and enterprise than in any other portion of the valley; large tracts of land are being subdivided and sold on the most liberal terms. Liberal advertising is now doing for Tehama county what it once did for Los Angeles, and they have only to tell the truth and show their lands to encourage immigration. The last few years have demonstrated the fact that that section of California is peculiarly and well adapted to grain and fruit raising of all kinds, no irrigation being necessary. The most liberal inducements are being held out to home seekers, and they are so well pleased with the country and the price of land that they invariably conclude to stay, and at once settle down and go to work. We predict that a few months later the boom which the southern section of California once had will be on in the northern portion of the citrus belt, with this exception, that the boom is in the land and not in prices. And why should it not? Tehama county, as the statistics show, has a better climate than Los Angeles, more rainfall, no fog, and equally as good land. She has the great Northwestern States and Canada in which to market her fruits, while Southern California must meet the competition of the Southern States, and the result is low prices for her products.

Quite a number from this county have gone to Kirkwood, and are going into business there. Being in the center of a large area of some of the best land in the valley, it must, in the near future, become one of the important towns of Northern California.

The depot of the Remington typewriter, the standard and best machine made, is at 1007 1/2 Fourth street, the only place in town to obtain supplies. Mrs. Irene S. Woman's Work.

Darning little stockings for restless little feet,
Washing little faces to keep them clean and sweet,
Learning Bible lessons, teaching catechism,
Praying for salvation from heresy and schism—
Woman's work!

Letting fall her own tears where only God can see,
Wiping off another's with tender sympathy;
Learning by experience, teaching by example,
Striving for the gateway, golden pearly, ample—
Woman's work!

Lastly cometh silence, a day of deep repose,
Her locks are smoothly braided, upon her breast a rose;
Lashes resting gently upon a marble cheek,
A look of blessed peace upon her forehead meek.

A fresh grave in the valley, tears, bitter sobs, regret;
One more solemn lesson, that life may not forget;
The face forever hidden, the race forever run,
Dust to dust, a voice saith,
And woman's work is done!

In Vino Veritas.

Let a man be well mellowed with wine,
And his nature will quickly appear.
If it be genial and kind,
The liquor will make it more clear;
But if he's a villain ingrain,
The tippie will act like a spell,
And expose from his innermost brain
The thoughts and conceptions of hell!

Then pass 'round the bottle and drink,
That the truths of our souls we may glean;
And he who refuses, we'll think
Has a heart that he fears to be seen!

"As Falls the Leaf."

Borne on the shrill and cheerless blast,
From shivering branches rended fast,
The autumn leaves are earthward strewn;
The lustre of their early green,
Their later gold and scarlet sheen
Are all as if they had not been—
A moment's splendor flown.

But yesterday it seems, when first
The swelling buds their fetters burst
And flung them forth in vernal day;
Through the long summer months their shade
In whispering grove and colonnade
Ever a grateful covert made Against the scorching ray.

Touched by the autumn's finger chill,
How took they on, o'er vale and hill,
A sudden beauty all untold;
Vision most wonderful! most brief!
As flamed the maple's every leaf
And glowed the oak in rich relief Against the aspen's gold.

—Mail and Express.

He Came Back.

I.

At the end of the lane by the big white gate
(Oh, the heart of youth is fickle!)
He left his love for a year to wait.
Sing fickle, oh, so fickle!
"I'll return when the blushing roses bloom,
And be true to thee till the day of doom."
With a good-by kiss in the deepening gloom.
Oh, sing of a youth so fickle!

II.

"Will he ever return?" the maiden cried,
(Alas that hearts are fickle!)
And she sat her down and loud she sighed.
Sing fickle, oh, so fickle!
But he came as he said, all safe from harm,
And strolled down the lane in the June-time warm,
But another girl hung on his arm!
Oh, fickle, fickle, fickle!

—Herbert Hall Winslow.

Worse Than Marriage.

A bachelor old and cranky,
Was sitting alone in his room;
His toes with the gout were aching,
And his face was o'erspread with gloom

No little ones' shouts disturbed him,
From noises the house was free,
In fact, from the attic to cellar
Was quiet as quiet could be.

No medical aid was lacking;
The servants answered his ring,
Respectfully heard his orders,
And supplied him with everything.

But still there was something wanting,
Something he couldn't command;
The kindly words of compassion.
The touch of a gentle hand.

And he said, as his brow grew darker
And he rang for the hireling nurse,
"Well, marriage may be a failure,
But this is a blamed sight worse."

—Boston Courier.

An Instructive Paper.

The March number of the Occidental Medical Times has just been issued from the press of A. J. Johnston & Co., Sacramento. Edited by James H. Parkinson, with collaborations of Doctors Wallace A. Briggs, Thos. W. Huntington, G. L. Simmons, Wm. Ellery Briggs, W. R. Cluness, Albert Abrams, W. Watt Kerr, J. W. Robertson, J. P. Morse, W. H. Mays and D. W. Montgomery. There are many very instructive articles in this number, embracing a variety of medical and surgical discoveries and treatment. The relations between the generalists and specialists is carefully considered by one of the medicos. Practical experiences in the various departments of medicine, and upon a great variety of ailments which flesh, bone and brain are heir to are given from the most eminent physicians of the times. Here is a little medical advice which we clip from the paper, and reproduce free. It might be of interest to the boys who have just had a "little time" and such an "enlarged head": "The most satisfactory results in headache, and especially in neuralgia, from 10 to 20 grain doses of antifebrin. Relief is obtained in one-quarter to one-half hour. The patients who shortly before were in despair with pain in the head felt entirely relieved. * * *

The articles upon mental diseases and medical jurisprudence are interesting alike to professional and laymen. The doctors do not take much stock in the theories that music is a sedative in insanity, and "the idea that music exerts a soothing influence over the insane is merely an instance of the longevity of a popular superstition. Like the belief in the moon's influence, it dies hard."

The deaths registered in 75 town districts last month, in a population of 773,000, correspond to an annual rate of 15.53 a thousand, the total mortality being just 1000. The average annual death rate from all causes in ten largest cities in the State, representing a population of 593,100, was 15.44. The highest rate reported for the month was reported from Pasadena, Los Angeles county, the rate having been 27.60 a thousand; the lowest was attributed to Chico, the rate being but 4.80.

There is an editorial reviewing all the sanitary legislation at the present session of the legislature. An interesting correspondence relating to medical recollections of a journey to Egypt, from R. Virchow, abstract and translation by G. L. Simmons, Jr., now in Europe.

A Strange Mark.

James Rothermel, who lives in Fayette county, this State, has a strange birth-mark, which makes him an object of superstitious regard among his neighbors. According to a correspondent of the Pittsburg Post, on the back of Rothermel's head, just below and a little to the right of the base of the brain, is a small excrescence, bluish in color and crescent-shaped. The moment the moon begins to turn the first quarter of her pole the mark begins to undergo a startling change. Its bluish color turns to a brilliant red, and the flesh below it and extending diagonally across his neck to the left shoulder begins to swell. As the moon grows older the birth-mark gets redder and redder, and the flesh swells more and more, until, when the moon has reached its "full," the crescent-shaped mark is of a fiery scarlet, and the flesh extending from the mark to the left shoulder has swollen into a horn-like roll, two or three inches in thickness at the largest point, and gradually tapering to a point near the left shoulder.

As the moon gradually begins to wane, in like manner the scarlet of the crescent-shaped mark becomes less fiery, the horn-like roll across the neck to decrease in size, until when the moon is dark again there is nothing to be seen but the small bluish crescent-shaped mark. For over twenty-eight years these changes have followed monthly with the moon's phases; and so marked are they, and so regular, that Rothermel can tell by simply placing his hand on the back of his neck exactly what stage the moon is in. —Philadelphia American.

A Test for Tea.

A Russian analyst, writing to the papers, gives the following as a test by which tea can be proved to be genuine or not. Take a pinch of tea in a glass, pour upon it a little cold water and well shake it up. Pure tea will only slightly color the water, while a strong infusion is quickly got from the adulterated or painted leaf. Now boil both sorts separately, and let them stand till cool, and the difference between them will be most marked. The false tea will become still stronger after long standing, but will remain transparent. Whereas the pure tea will become muddy or milky. This last appearance arises from the tannic acid which is a natural property in pure tea, but which in artificial tea is entirely absent. —N. Y. Telegram.

Dr. W. R. Cluness in the March number of the Medical Times, reports that there is undoubtedly present such an atmospheric condition as requires but little intensification to cause the spread of small-pox, and advises the revaccination of those who are not fully protected. The doctor also advises great precaution in matters of diphtheria.

The Way to Silence a Donkey.

I have no doubt that the donkey believes himself when braying to be executing a vocal solo of the highest excellence. As some of my readers may be incapable of appreciating the song, I will mention a device whereby the Turks induce the too-vocal donkey to be silent against his will. Just as before a cock crows he finds it necessary to stretch out his neck to the utmost, so the donkey feels himself compelled to begin his performance by holding his nose in the air and his tail parallel with his spine. When, therefore, a Turk wishes to silence his donkey he ties a tolerably heavy stone to the end of the animal's tail and departs with an easy mind. When the donkey feels inclined to bray, and begins the usual preliminaries he finds himself debarred from placing his tail at the requisite angle, and, in consequence, is unable to do justice to the bravado with which he was proposing to favor the world. —The Rev. J. W. Wood, in Chautauquan.

Both Got In.

"What is your profession?" asked St. Peter.

"I'm a lawyer," was the proudly spoken reply.

"And what was yours?" was asked of the next comer.

"I'm a lawyer, also."

"Humph; I suppose you may as well both go inside. I don't like to send both of you to the other place, because we've got more down there than we can accommodate now, and if I send one of you the other will sne out a writ of habeas corpus for him so quick it would make my head swim. Go on, both of you."

A woman advertises in a Chicago paper that she desires correspondence, with a view to matrimony, with a steady young man—one who neither smokes, chews, drinks nor swears; does not frequent club-rooms, and will be satisfied with the society of a loving wife. Ring off, dear; you have called up the wrong planet. There are no such angels on earth now. But just think of such a request coming from a Chicago woman! —Peoria Transcript.

Soul-Beauty.

How sweetly sounds that myth of old,
Which tells of Beauty's birth—
Of how she sprang from ocean's foam
Immortal to the earth!

The goddess rising from the spray
That tips the fleeting billow,
Yet springing into deathless life
From e'en so frail a pillow.

It seems to speak—across the void—
From ages far away,
To tell how human hearts may read
A lesson in decay.

A lesson that is taught us now
In every evening's sky,
In every rose that blooms on earth,
In every dewdrop's dye;

In every note that stirs the soul
As music softly swells,
Or falls upon the listening ear
The sound of distant bells.

It tells us though the sunset fades
With all its golden splendor,
Though dies from off the dewdrop's breast
Its beauty pure and tender;

That though the frost may blight the rose,
And music's pulses perish,
There is a beauty of the soul
That Heaven seeks to cherish.

A beauty that will ever last,
A gem that dims—no, never;
For though its outer casing fades
This beauty lives forever!

The First Public Reception and Banquet in Sacramento.

EDITORS THEMIS:—A correspondent in your issue of March 3d, relating the circumstance of a public reception and banquet in this city, on July 7, 1849, says that General Smith, Commodore Jones, T. Butler King and himself, on their arrival here on that date, were met by a large number of citizens, among whom he named Joseph Winans. Now the writer of this happened to know positively that on the 7th of July, A. D. 1849, Joseph Winans was afloat on the Pacific ocean, and that his feet did not "press the golden shore" until August 30, 1849, only fifty-four days after his alleged presence in Sacramento.

The above refers to a communication published in our last number. The articles are from prominent pioneers of this city. It is our desire to, as much as possible, preserve in the columns of this journal the early history of the state—a history more interesting than that of any other state or territory of the Union. In a few years all of the actors in the pioneer events will pass away. The history of those days should be now gathered.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, MARCH 17, 1889.

No. 4.

We have had a succession of three dry seasons with no threat of overflow or break in our levee system, but as in times of peace it is necessary to prepare for war, so is it necessary to consider and perfect our defenses against floods at times when the danger is remote. In fact, it is too late to remedy defects in our levees when the floods are present. The writer of this has been in the habit of observing our levees since 1862. When the floods came he visited the points most threatened and noted the course and volume of the currents at the threatened localities. When the waters subsided he examined the causes which weakened our defenses, and considered the most appropriate remedies. On the north and northeast sides of the city the levees are sufficiently high to guard us from overflow from the American river, unless the water rises higher than at any flood known to our American population. In 1861-2, the water from the American river rose so high that a large volume of it ran over the country about Brighton; but that water would reach the low lands south of our Y street levee and would injure us but little.

Our chief danger from overflow of the American river lies in the fact that we do not pay sufficient attention to the structure of the levee itself. From the railroad yards east to Twelfth street our levees may be considered as impregnable. The recent additions made by the railroad company for lazy tracks, together with the constant use of that part of the levee, place it entirely outside the category of dangerous. Eastward from Twelfth street, much may be done to strengthen the levee. Any one passing along the levee, from Twelfth street to Brighton junction, may observe the slopes of the levee covered with earth thrown up by burrowing rodents; mainly the work of gophers. These animals are invited to burrow in our levees because they are not driven out of their homes by high water. The region is more hospitable to them than the low lands, and there they do most congregate. No one can tell exactly the direction or extent of their excavations. But they are not contented with one opening to the surface. Their burrows may run through the levee and furnish an opening on both sides below high water mark, or they may extend so nearly through as to weaken the structure, and the water may burst through. With the water standing ten feet above the level of the ground inside the levee, who can tell the result of a break, small at first, in such a structure, especially if it shall occur in the night, when it cannot be observed until too late; and this, too, caused by an animal as insignificant as a mole. "A wise man foreseeth the evil and fleeth from it." Beyond the trestlework leading to the railroad bridge the sides of the levee are covered at certain seasons with high weeds which hide the surface from view and furnish convenient burrows for larger animals, which make larger holes than the gophers, and beyond and southeast of the Burns slough, the writer of this has seen colonies of squirrels making their homes in the levees, and by their excavations weakening the structures at points threatened by high water.

This paper, standing, as it ever will, on the watch-tower of the citadel of this the capital of the State, suggests that the proper authorities take action now, or at least during the coming summer, which shall strengthen our levees at this their most vulnerable point. How may this be done? Let the proper authorities employ a careful, prudent, conscientious man who will devote his whole time to carrying out his instructions. Furnish him with a good horse and a cart provided with a suitable tank, with instructions to prepare a thin mortar composed of clay, mixed with a little lime, so that when dry it will harden. Direct him to inspect the levee carefully, sides and top, and fill every hole made by a gopher or other burrowing animal with that mortar, made so thin that it will run to the innermost depths of the burrow, thus repairing the levee where weakened, and making it inhospitable to the burrowing animals. The burrows of these animals generally extend downward, and by use of a proper funnel they may be readily filled, and the animals themselves be driven from the levee. Between Brighton junction and the railroad bridge, a truck may be constructed, and used instead of a cart, running it by hand on the unused railroad track. By taking these precautions at a small expense we can insure safety from overflow from the American river.

But how is it on the Sacramento river front? The watershed which discharges its surplus through the American is large, the descent steep, and in times of heavy rains, or of recent snows melted by warm rains, the amount of water forced along our northern defense and falling into the Sacramento river, added to the swollen Sacramento, require a large channel to carry them. We have staring us in the face an unsolved problem: What shall we be able to do with that large amount of water? Hitherto at such times an outlet has been furnished through a break in the levee above Washington and our levee front thus relieved. During the past year a large levee has been built from the northwest end of the Washington causeway connecting with the levee above the present mouth of the American. This, we presume, has been made higher and stronger than our Sacramento levee, from L street south. Thus the waters of both rivers must be forced under the Yolo and Sacramento bridge, and serve to swell the volume of water pressing against our river front. Hydrographic engineering may perhaps solve the problem whether our levee on Front street will protect the city from overflow in that direction. But the problem seems to us unsolved. Heretofore when the water rose sufficiently high to threaten us in that quarter, a large volume of surplus water flowed through the opening at the north side of Washington, thus relieving us from threatened danger. Now, with that amount added, will the river in front of our city carry all the water without overtopping the levee from N to R streets? Given the width, depth, and velocity of a stream of running water, an engineer can estimate the amount of water it will carry. Perhaps our city authorities are furnished with the requisite data. If not, they should be obtained.

What officers, commissioners, or body of men are by law charged with the supervision, enlargement and repair of our levees? prior to the passage of the act of April 9, 1862, concerning the construction and repair of levees in the county of Sacramento, we were practically defenseless from water which overflowed the city at high floods. That act established a commission and our principal levees were constructed under its provisions. This was done whilst our city and county governments were consolidated. The construction and repair of the levees were in charge of that commission. The present charter of our city was passed in 1863, and the powers of our board of trustees did not include the jurisdiction to supersede the board of levee commissioners. On the contrary, the act of 1862 has never been directly repealed. Perhaps that act may be considered as repealed by an act passed March 30, 1878, conferring power on the city of Sacramento to construct such canals and levees as may be necessary to the drainage and to its permanent protection from overflow; but the provisions of that act seem inadequate, and some action should be taken which will, beyond doubt, place the whole subject of levees under control of our city authorities, and authorize and require them to so maintain our levees as shall guarantee us from possible disaster in times of floods.

It would appear that the San Diego newspapers are making a mistake in booming the San Catalina placer gold mines so industriously as they have. Already the reports are coming in that the free placer deposits are nearly exhausted, and that it is a poor place for a poor man to go. However, thousands are already there and many more thousands are on the way. This excitement will, for a time, tend to reduce Southern California of a portion of its surplus population, which by false representations it has gathered within its borders. For the time being the whole Pacific Coast will spew out its lawless, vicious population, and San Diego and the gold mines just across the border, will be the unwilling recipients. We do not wish our neighbors harm, but at the same time we are glad to be rid of them. The reaction, however, is sure to come. When it takes a day's labor to secure a fair day's wages, back across the border the hungry horde will come. All the poverty-stricken, improvident, lawless adventurers will beat and tramp their way to the nearest city, and San Diego will receive the first benefit. It will require all the power of the police, aided by all its law abiding citizens, to quell the harvest of crime in prospect.

Seattle and Tacoma, W. T., are now enjoying the exciting times which characterized Los Angeles and San Diego in their palmiest days. On the cars, both east and west, on the steamers, everywhere that travelers are found, all are talking of the great future of the cities of the new northwest. Seattle now has about forty thousand and Tacoma about thirty thousand inhabitants, five times as many as either had two years ago. The citizens themselves are nearly wild with the speculative craze. Every man and woman, according to his means, and if he has none, begs and borrows till he gets a town lot. No matter where it is located, so long as it is platted, and a band of music is on hand to assist the real estate agent in selling it. Much of this immigration is due to the efforts of the Northern Pacific R. R. Company. Under Villard's management the company built a magnificent hotel at Tacoma, and it also owns vast quantities of land of which it is desirous to dispose at the present time. Portland, Oregon, is also receiving some of the benefit of this influx of immigration—her population having materially increased in the past two or three years. While conservative, she is gradually taking the real estate fever, and we may look for great doings there in the near future. The writer recently entered a car attached to a steam dummy in East Portland, for a ride to Vancouver, W. T., six miles away. Within a mile from the start we entered the pine forests, where hundreds of axes were preparing the solitudes for the habitation of man. For four miles nearly every acre was platted in town lots. The train frequently stopped at real estate offices, bearing in large letters the euphonious and familiar titles of "Highland Park," "River View," "Columbia Highlands," "Everglade Park," etc. Enough land is now laid out in town lots in and around Portland, to accommodate a population of five hundred thousand people, and every head of a family have a garden and keep a cow. There are great possibilities in the future, however, for this northern country. The great deposits of iron and coal, the vast wealth of magnificent timber, and above all its broad acres and exhaustless fertility of alluvial soil, will, with peerless California, form a triumvirate which for population, learning and wealth, will not be surpassed by any other portion of our great nation.

Speaking of "booms," as the term is commonly understood, we do not believe them to be an unmixed blessing. In fact, experience has shown them frequently to be exactly the reverse. Growth to be healthy must be uniform, equal in all its parts. The brain to be strong and vigorous must receive healthy, pure blood from the heart and the extremities. The proper food must be had to provide tannin for the stomach, strength to the muscles, hardness of bone, and the blood that surges to the brain will be pure and invigorating in quality, making up the full measure of the man. Cut off the supply from either source and trouble is sure to ensue. So it is with communities. The farmer, the producer, is the life-giving quality—the city is merely the head. Cut off the supply of beef and pork, hay and grain, from the country and the city languishes. It is all very nice, for a time, to feed the boy all the pie and cake, and sweetmeats his untrained appetite may lead him to devour, but the hour of reckoning is at hand, when sweet oil and paregoric will be necessary to avenge outraged nature. So we say, we want no phenomenal growth to occur in Sacramento city. All classes of our people—laboring, mercantile and professional—are prospering, while our farmers are happy in a ready market for all their products, and we desire the greatest good to the greatest number. A boom would inevitably enrich a few of our land sharks and large property owners; men who for many years have waited for the rise in values, and selfishly refused to keep their property in repair, or even looking decent, so that to-day the business portion of Sacramento city is as repulsive as any that could be found anywhere. We do not forget our friends, the real estate agents. They also would make money, for they would make commissions on the property sold. But who else would be profited? Do not let us be understood as desecrating progress in any particular. On the contrary, we shall do all in our power to foster a healthy growth of Sacramento city and county. The natural center of as great a farming and producing section of country as even California can boast, Sacramento is bound to be a great city. What we want is farmers with money to buy farms, grapegrowers with money to build wineries, and manufacturers with money to erect the machinery; then Sacramento will have greater prosperity. The sappers and miners; i. e., the doctors and lawyers, and middle men, won't be far behind. We want and must have a new city government (the old one is worn out); that will enable us to foster and encourage the kind of growth we have pointed out.

An international copyright system is a subject of much discussion in literary circles. Geo. S. Boutwell, an American statesman, takes decided grounds against any such legislation. The United States and Great Britain do not stand upon equal ground in this contest. We furnish two readers for English books for every one they furnish for an American book. As a fact, there would be three English books copyrighted in this country for one of ours copyrighted in England. In other words, we would have to pay England three dollars for her books, and only receive one dollar in return. It would not serve to encourage young authors here, because the American market is more profitable to the English market than their's is to us. Says Mr. Boutwell: "Next to a system of public instruction, this country is most largely interested in the publication of valuable reading matter, and at a moderate cost. If the foreign author cannot claim protection in this country upon the ground of justice, and if it is inexpedient for us to concede protection as a public policy, there is no sufficient reason remaining for the adoption of the international copyright system. The reading public in America is a large one, and it is increasing in a ratio far greater than the increase of population. That public can never be less in numbers, or less capable of purchasing books than it is now. Authors are protected and supported by a body of readers not less than twenty millions strong." Thus it will be observed that the great thinking minds of this country are not in favor of an international copyright system.

Illustrative of some of the inconsistencies of the laws of the several states of the Union, when compared with each other, only a few years ago an appellate decision was rendered in Missouri, which, if it had not been overruled from public policy, would have overturned the validity of numerous divorces and rendered bigamous subsequent marriages. In a modern case in Massachusetts, a man was convicted and sent to the penitentiary for bigamy, who proved that he had been divorced from his former wife by a judicial record of a court of competent jurisdiction in California. This is made possible by the various incongruities between the laws of different states.

Now we have an original and interesting account of the true source of Shakespeare's inspiration in producing the master character of Hamlet. It is claimed that Hamlet, or Amlæth, first emerges from the night of the past as the mythical hero of a Norse legend, who is typical of the quarrel between Summer and Winter; then he appears in the guise of an historical prince upon whom the great bard seizes to make of him what we see.

"Old Times in California."

General William T. Sherman contributes an interesting article to the March number of the North American Review, on "Old Times in California." The General arrived at Monterey as a lieutenant of Captain C. Q. Tompkins' company of the Third Artillery, coming out in the United States storeship "Lexington" around Cape Horn, after a passage of 198 days. The General has heretofore contributed much in relation to the early history of this State, in magazine articles and in his memoirs. In the article now under consideration he states that he proposes to supply from "memory some episodes illustrating the American method for a state or group of States to pass from a lower to a higher grade of civilization." The General prefaces his article with a very brief account of the settlement by the missionaries, of the subjugation of the Indians, and of the secularization of the missions. He states that "the name of California is generally supposed to come from the two Latin words, calor (heat) and fornax (oven)." There has been a popular impression that from these words the name "California" was derived, but it now seems to be conceded that the name was first given by Cortes in 1535 to the peninsula of Lower California, and that he took it from the old Spanish romance of "Esplandian," by Garcia Ordenez de Montalvo, which was first published in 1510. In this work the name "California" was given to an imaginary island "on the right hand of the Indies, very near to the terrestrial paradise," and it was stated that it abounded in treasures of gold. This derivation of the name was elaborately explained by E. E. Hale, in a paper in the Atlantic Monthly of March, 1864.

Speaking of the period before the American occupation, the General says that there never was nor can be a better description of California in that epoch (1830-5) than is contained in Dana's "Two Years Before the Mast." Richard H. Dana, Jr., came out here in the brig "Pilgrim," leaving Boston in 1834. At that time about the only articles of export from California were hides and tallow; the trading vessels that visited this coast and the Sandwich Islands were principally from Boston. Dana's opportunities for observing were meagre, and so far as his description of the country is concerned it is unsatisfactory. As we recollect his book, it was intended more to expose the ill-treatment of sailors on merchant vessels than to record observations of the new countries which he visited. We have read a crudely-written work, published in London, by a gentleman who visited this country in 1828-9, and who traveled by land through it. He came out, as did Dana, in a trading vessel, but his observations were carefully noted, and it is very evident that he had better opportunities for writing a description of the country at that epoch than the gentleman whose writings General Sherman indorses.

The General states that his company was under orders to occupy and hold Monterey, the capital of Upper California; and that they did so. He became the adjutant of Colonel R. B. Mason at that place. His paper contains a very interesting account of the first mail route established in California—from San Francisco to San Diego, a distance of 500 miles. The famous trapper, Jim Beckworth, after whom the pass of that name was called, was a mail rider on a part of the route. While giving Beckworth credit for being a man of indomitable courage, the author states that his reputation for veracity was not good. The General details the incidents of what was perhaps the first tragedy of importance committed in California—in which a man named Reed, his wife, children and servants were brutally murdered by four men who had deserted from the United States sloop-of-war "Warren," at Monterey. The tragedy occurred at the mission of San Miguel, in October, 1848, and was prompted by a hope for gain. Gold had been discovered, and desertions from the army and naval forces were numerous. These men received the hospitality of Reed, and then committed this terrible crime. Lieutenant E. O. C. Ord—afterward Major-General—in command of a party, pursued the murderers, overtook them, killed the leader, took the other three to Santa Barbara and delivered them to Lewis Dent (brother of Mrs. General Grant), the Alcalde. General Sherman remarks:

They all made confessions, had a fair trial, and were sentenced to be shot. They were shot, Lieutenant Ord and his detachment present, but not assisting; and no men ever better deserved death than these three. When Lieutenant Ord returned to Monterey and reported what he had done, Colonel R. B. Mason, a strict constructionist, doubted Ord's right to assist in what he construed as an unlawful act; but I have always contended that my orders to Ord to follow the murderers "to the death" were Colonel Mason's orders, and were absolute and final. At all events, time has settled this question forever.

The General was here last we believe in 1885 or 1886. He has had an opportunity to note the wonderful changes which have taken place in this country since the very early days. Speaking of these matters, he says:

California, from 1848 to 1888, passed through all the phases of civilization which England did in the past thousand years. In 1846 it was an outlying Mexican province. At that time there was not a shod horse in California, not a tavern, hotel, or even a common wagon road. We traveled by trails, on horseback, sleeping by the roadside, eating jerked meat or game shot with our rifles; and now California has better hotels, better markets, more convenient appurtenances for travel than London, Paris, or Vienna, and as good stores, factories and machine shops. When I first rode into Yerba Buena, now San Francisco, in 1847, I could not command a roof, a common meal, or even buy oats, barley, or hay for my tired horse. Now, anybody can obtain a good carriage, hotel, and room as luxurious as can be found in the world. By the law of virtual velocities this transition has been sudden, violent and necessary. The existence of San Francisco on the Pacific Coast was demanded by the civilization of the whole world—a necessary link between Europe, America, Japan, China, etc. Mexico was not equal to accomplish this task, and we of the United States have the right to claim the perfect fulfillment of a noble task in the grand march of civilization which must encompass the globe.

The General refers at length to the early steamboat connections, and speaks of his return trip in the autumn of 1853. His account is of interest, but our limited space will not permit a republication in extenso. He says:

The recent death of Admiral Baldwin in this city recalls to my memory a most interesting incident, and one illustrative of the development of civilization on the Pacific Coast. As soon as the United States had become possessed of California, arrangements for a more perfect communication with it were begun, even before the discovery of gold had attracted world-wide attention. A contract was made for a monthly steamship line from New York and New Orleans to California, by way of Panama. The first of these steamers, the "California," reached Monterey February 23, 1849; the next, the "Oregon," in March, and the "Panama" in April. Thereafter we had a monthly mail to the United States. Of this line William H. Aspinwall & Co. became the owners. Subsequently a rival line was established by way of Nicaragua, of which Mr. Vanderbilt was the chief owner. Being in San Francisco in the autumn of 1853, and having business in St. Louis and New York, I took passage by way of Nicaragua in the side-wheeler "Brother Jonathan," of which Lieutenant Baldwin, United States navy, was the captain. He may have resigned from the navy before that date, but he was every inch a sailor, a gentleman, a type of the school in which he had been reared, and the same who, when a midshipman, had been relieved by us of the command of that block house at Monterey in 1847. Our voyage down the coast was uneventful, with about one hundred and fifty first class passengers going home from California, and about four hundred and fifty steerage passengers. * * * In due time the "Brother Jonathan" reached San Juan del Sur, and we all scrambled to get across to Greytown and home. I have seen none of these people since; but with Baldwin as midshipman, lieutenant, captain, commodore and admiral, I have been associated ever since; and but a few weeks ago I saw the casket inclosing his body lowered into an honored tomb. If our government will continue to encourage such men, no American need entertain a doubt of the future of his country.

General Sherman relates a very interesting incident of how Baldwin saved a gambler from being lynched on board the "Brother Jonathan," and graphically describes the subsequent improptu trial and punishment of the offender. Speaking of the "Brother Jonathan" reminds us of the appalling calamity which happened to her on July 30, 1865, on the northern coast of California. She struck a sunken rock and carried down with her all but about sixteen of three hundred passengers. Those saved escaped in a small boat. Among the lost were General George Wright, his wife and staff, and James Nisbet, one of the editors and proprietors of the San Francisco Bulletin. Subsequently, the bodies of General and Mrs. Wright were recovered, brought to Sacramento and interred in the city cemetery. An imposing monument marks their resting place. Their funerals took place from the Congregational Church. Years later their son, Lieutenant Wright, was slain at the lava beds by the Modoc Indians. His remains were brought here. His funeral was from the same church, and his interment was in our city cemetery. Mr. Nisbet was a Scotchman, and became attached to the Bulletin in 1856. After the vessel struck and was in a sinking condition, when all hope for life was gone, Mr. Nisbet took out his note book and penciled his will in the book on the railing of the fated steamer. His body was recovered, the book was found in his pocket, and the will thus drawn by a man in perfect health, but with the certainty of death before him, was probated in the courts of San Francisco.

The General makes slight references to the discovery of gold in 1848, and to the vigilance committee of 1856. These interesting subjects were fully covered in his interesting memoirs, which were published a few years since.

His Wives Help Rule.

Thirty years ago, just about the time when the big African lakes were discovered, there lived in Unyamwezi, through which Burton had just traveled, on his way to Lake Tanganyika, a boy named Msidi, who has since become famous. His father went every now and then several hundreds of miles from home to the great copper country of Sango, to buy the metal from native miners. When Msidi became a young man his father took him on some of these expeditions.

Finally Msidi started out to buy copper on his own account, says the New York Sun. He arrived in the mineral region once when the big chief of this Sango country was at war with a great tribe who were invading his district from the north. Msidi had with him four guns and plenty of ammunition. Firearms had never been heard of in that country, and when Msidi marched out to win a battle for his friend, the chief of Sango, the enemy fled in great dismay after a few shots. Just as a few of Livingstone's Makoiolo porters, with only nine guns, conquered the whole Shire country and set up as little kings, so Msidi laid the foundation of his fortune with four guns.

The old chief felt so grateful to Msidi that he made the young man his heir. He died soon after, and the humble ivory trader suddenly became the chief of quite a large country. He killed all chiefs whom he thought might become his rivals, carried on aggressive warfare against all the surrounding tribes, gradually spread his dominion and is still extending it. Livingstone's Cazembe and the Muata Yamva used to be talked of as the greatest chiefs west of the big lakes. Reclus says that Msidi is now, without doubt, the most powerful ruler in the Sango basin.

An anecdote is told illustrating the shrewdness of this savage potentate. When Mr. Arnot, a while ago, sent word to the chief asking permission to settle in his country as a missionary, some Arab traders who were at his capital told Msidi that all Englishmen were villains, and urged him either to kill Arnot or to turn him back. "Well," said the chief, "I don't know any Englishman, but I do know you Arabs, and you are the biggest liars I ever saw. The Englishman may come, and I will see what he is like."

The chief, for an untutored native, has remarkable administrative ability, and to this talent he largely owes his great success. He has adopted a very curious system of keeping all the affairs of his country in his own hands without bothering himself with details. He has done this by making his 500 wives his officers of state.

He has divided his great empire into many districts, each of which is ruled by a minor chief. Each chief is represented at court by one of Msidi's wives. She sees that all the tribute due from her district is forwarded to the capital, entertains all visitors from the district, and is ready to give Msidi at a moment's notice any information he desires. The result is that without books or secretaries he rules the country in a business-like way, and his name everywhere inspires respect and often fear.

Msidi renamed his country Garenganze. It is west of Lakes Bangweolo and Moco, between the Luapula and Lualaba rivers, and embraces over ninety thousand square miles.

In Corea, a man is not counted as such until he has a wife. Boys and bachelors part their hair in the middle, and it is braided in a strand which hangs down the back. When a boy is married he has the right to cut off his hair, and when it grows again he combs it up into a round, hard knot on the crown. The highbred girls are unseen. They are secluded at seven, and after this are seen only by their brothers, their fathers and husbands. If they come out at all in the street, they come out at night, and their quarters are in the back of the house and apart from the gaze of strange men.

As a last resort, a woman administered horseradish to cure the nightmare.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Boucicault is again to the front in advocacy of clean drama, and hurls a sharp lance against comic opera, horse play extravaganza, etc. The press is blamed for the demoralization of the stage. The legitimate drama regards the later day journalist as its natural enemy. This is because all the recent travesties upon the divine art are "boomed" by journalists who are the "friends" of the projectors of the scheme or some lady member of the company. Journalists do not write conscientiously, but for favor or cause—merit is not the measure. There is no dramatic company at this time that could properly present the "School for Scandal." There are no genuine dramatic critics, because those who are competent are restricted by their journals, and must "write up" or "down" any play or actor, as the case may be, at the will of the aforesaid autocrat of the newspaper—merit is rarely an object for consideration. It is somewhat strange, also, that frequently persons are detailed to "do the theatres," as it is called, who are without the most remote qualification for such work. However, the signs of the times indicate a return to the good old days of legitimate drama and sterling art.

Frederick Warde gave the people of Sacramento a splendid rendition of his masterpiece, "Virginius." Mr. Warde stands to-day second only to Booth as an actor. Mr. Warde has been a favorite ever since his advent in the "Diplomacy" Company. Apropos of the tragedy "Virginius," while Sheridan Knowles is the author of the present adaptation, it is by no means the original conception. The original "tragic comedy," as the unknown author called it, was "Appius and Virginia," written early in the sixteenth century, and was founded upon the same incident in Roman history. The original, containing a mixture of allegory and history, was written in rhyme. The characters of the original conception were: Virginius, Virginia, Judge Appius, Claudius, Conscience, Haphazard, Justice, Rumor, Comfort, Reward, and Doctrina, the several latter named being in the allegorical parts. The author is unknown, the only inscription upon the play being "R. B."

Mad'le Marie Titens, the daughter of our fellow-townsmen, Peter Titens, and niece of the celebrated Mad'le Titens, made her first appearance with Madam Marie Roze in her Grand Opera Company at Skipton, England. The Craven Herald speaks in the highest terms of the young lady. The Dundee Advertiser has the following notice: "Mad'le Titens is possessed of a very sweet soprano voice, not yet developed so fully as it will be, but which is likely to enable her to take high rank amongst operatic vocalists. Her most effective song was Sullivan's 'My Dearest Heart,' and it was so satisfactory to her hearers that she was recalled, when she sang 'Within a Mile o' Edinburgh town,' with an ease and naïve grace that quite captivated the audience."

"The Little Tycoon" is booked for a season in this city. At the first presentation of this comic opera in New York it was not a success, but after pruning and changing in some detail it became the rage for a season. It is not after the style of "Mikado," because it was written some years before that opera. The plot of the opera is a satire upon foreign title worship. The music, it is said, is sparkling and popular.

The New York Tribune says: "Broadway fairly swarms with short, squat, snub-nosed English actors, most of them in search of immediate employment. Anybody believing in the transmigration of species would swear that all the pugs which failed to collar prize ribbons at the late show had taken to the stage."

The old advertising scheme of actresses losing their diamonds does not seem to abate. Age upon this does not tell. The alleged society actress has utilized this cheap means of notoriety, just like the old-timer.

The New York Dramatic News has excluded all mention of the Verona-Jarbeau Company, Imre-Kiralfy and Charles L. Davis companies from its columns, and instructed correspondents accordingly.

The fifth concert of the Artillery Band will be given at the Metropolitan March 25th. Mrs. Marriner-Campbell, Signor Solaro, C. B. Eilerman and Joseph D. Redding will assist.

Ned Harrigan will this summer renew his acquaintance with our people. He will bring his latest success with him. "Old Lavender" is good enough for us.

Ida Benfey, the daughter-in-law of Gov. Waterman, has gained some notoriety in New York as an elocutionist. She is a California girl.

"Monbars," the latest success of Robert Mantell, will be presented at our summer season.

The "Jersey Lilly" is dangerously ill in New York.

Henry Tambzeik, the noted Italian tenor, is dead.

Ed. Harrigan is writing a new comedy.

Next week, "A Hole in the Ground."

Book Chat.

In our last number we mentioned the receipt from W. C. Hendricks, Secretary of State, of a copy of the Governmental Roster for 1889. The volume taken as a whole could be called the "California Blue Book," as it contains in the first part thereof a complete list of all the present officers of every department of the state government, including the various boards, commissioners, clerks and secretaries, together with Adjutant-General, Major-General, and six Brigadier-Generals. The terms of office and salaries are given, of each officer. In addition to this we find a list of all the notaries and commissioners of deeds for other states and foreign countries. The vote by counties at the Presidential elections in 1884 and 1888 is given fully. The Governors of California under the Spanish and Mexican rule from 1767 to 1846 are given. The second part of this volume was compiled and written by Winfield J. Davis, one of the editors of THEMIS, and member of the California Historical Society, and Historian of the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers, at the request of Wm. C. Hendricks, Secretary of State, and presented to the state as a gratuity and without consideration. This contains the governmental roster of California from the organization of the state; also, a history of the great seal of state, and of the seat of state government. It is a complete history of each state office, with terms, changes, incumbents and salaries. The name of each state officer is there, with a brief reference, whether dead or living, and if dead, date of death. The history of the judicial department of the state forms a very interesting chapter, and will be instructive reading to "old timers," as well as new comers to our state. The congressional and legislative chapter abounds in valuable information, and discloses the political history of the state. In this part also appears a roster of the constitutional conventions of 1849 and 1878. Then follows a chapter embodying the history of the twenty-seven sessions of the legislature, and the seats of government at various times, including the names of Assemblymen and Senators, and all the officers of each body from the first session. All the Presidential Electors since 1852 are found in the volume. The history of the great seal makes a chapter that cannot fail to interest the lovers of history. Probably the pages that contain the history of the seat of government and the discovery of gold form the most entertaining reading. In these we find illustrations consisting of accurate cuts of the capitol at Monterey in 1849; capitol at San Jose, 1849-1851; capitol at Vallejo, 1852-1853; first capitol at Sacramento, 1852-1854; capitol at Benicia, 1853-1854; second capitol at Sacramento, 1855-1869; cut representing James W. Marshall's statue at Coloma, also Sutter's mill in 1851. A morsel of early history, showing how hard Hon. A. P. Catlin labored to secure the permanent capital for Sacramento appears in this volume. Early in the session of 1854, held at Benicia, an attempt was made to secure a removal, but the effort was unsuccessful. On February 9, however, Mr. Catlin introduced a bill in the Senate providing that on and after the passage thereof the seat of government should be permanently at Sacramento. After a hard struggle the bill passed, but through the neglect of reading the bill by title after passage, the matter was left open for further filibustering, of which the opponents of this city took advantage. Mr. Catlin fought for four days and nights, and was nearly exhausted, and feared that the obstructionists would ultimately defeat the measure. Finally, after a personal appeal to the leader against the bill, it became a law. So great was the excitement over the measure, that none of the members noticed the peculiar wording of the bill. So Catlin sat quietly in his seat watching the clock, and as soon as the hand passed the hour of 12 M., he deliberately arose and invited the legislature to Sacramento, which was then under the law the seat of government. The members saw the point, and all adjourned to meet at Sacramento as soon as the steamer could carry them there. Upon their arrival a grand jollification was had. The typographical work is fine, and was done by J. D. Young, State Printer. The book is for free distribution.

Professional Chat.

N. Greene Curtis is one of the most adroit attorneys in the State in playing upon the passions, prejudices and emotions of jurors. How does he accomplish this? He never tried a murder case without first obtaining the life history of each juror. The facts thus learned he utilizes in the trial and argument. In the trial of a noted murder case, in a neighboring county, he was forced to take one juror whom he knew to be of strong prejudice against his client, but nothing daunted, he learned his early history in Missouri; how he lived in his boyhood days; the names of his sisters; the old-fashioned well; the long pole with which the bucket was raised; the little cottage; his mother's blessing when he departed for California. All this information Curtis held in store to use in capturing the juror. After making various appeals to the jurors, Curtis was satisfied that he had all but this particular young Missourian, and he remained obdurate. Finally he commenced about his good old mother and the Missouri home; the well with its long lever; the cottage; his sisters; the mother's blessing at parting; all with such emotional fervor, that the juror was soon in tears and completely under his control. This is only one of the instances where such means have been used to secure a verdict for the defense.

The crude and original manner of administering justice in the "days of old, the days of gold," is illustrated by an incident wherein our fellow townsman, W. A. Gett, Sr., and James A. Johnson, late Lieutenant-Governor and Congressman, were the actors. Mr. Gett had bought a drove of pack mules and loaded them with freight for the Shasta mines. He employed a Mexican to assist him, that being about the only help obtainable. Upon the arrival of the pack train at Shasta, the Mexican helper got into some trouble, and was arrested, taken before a Justice, convicted and fined $200. Not having any money to meet this demand of stern justice, the learned Justice ordered one of Mr. Gett's mules to be seized for payment of the fine. Mr. Gett did not relish this to any great extent, and sought some advice. In his search he ran across Jim Johnson, whom he knew in the "States," and who, at that time, was engaged in the dignified occupation of superintending a faro bank. He stated his case to Johnson, who replied that there must be some lawful way to get his mule, "either by habeas corpus or certiorari, or an affidavit of merits—I do not exactly know which"—said Johnson. He fixed up a paper, which he called an affidavit of merits, and with the dignity of a learned professor of law, presented the same to the Justice, who, with equal pomposity, recognized the legal acumen of Mr. Johnson, and, with a lofty appearance of learning, surrendered Mr. Gett's mule.

In reading a history of the Irish Bench and Bar, we are forcibly impressed with the anecdotes, wit and sketches of the many eminent men who in times past adorned both Bench and Bar of the "Old Sod." Some of the most laughable "bulls" are attributed to Sir Boyle Roche, a member of the House of Commons. He excused his absence from an engagement by assuming the House: "No man could be in two places at once, barring he was a bird!" He concluded a long speech with this peroration: "Why should we put ourselves out for posterity? What, I ask, did ever posterity do for us?" At another time, in concluding a speech, he said: "It would be better, Mr. Speaker, to give up not only a part, but, if necessary, even the whole of the constitution to preserve the remainder!" Speaking of the invasion then expected from France, he styled the Marseillaise the "Marshal law men, who, if they come, would cut us into mincemeat and throw our bleeding head on the table to stare us in the face," but the best way to avoid danger was to meet it plump." These old ones are also attributed to Sir Boyle Roche: "Every quart bottle should hold a quart." "Every man should be his own washerwoman." "If ever you come within a mile of my house, my lord, I hope you'll stop there." "The greatest economy is necessary in the consumption of all species of grain, especially of potatoes."

THEMIS is the name of a new Sunday paper published at Sacramento by A. J. Johnson & Co., which is given a good name by the Sacramento press.—S. F. Chronicle.

JOHN F. SWIFT.

The appointment of John F. Swift as Minister to Japan, by the new administration, is complimentary to the people of the Pacific Coast. Mr. Swift is a gentleman of ability, and is a fit representative of our people. General Harrison has shown wisdom in his cabinet and diplomatic selections.

A dispatch of yesterday says: "The Japanese Minister and his wife have arranged for an elaborate dinner in honor of John F. Swift, to be given on the 22d inst. Secretary Blaine and many other distinguished people in official life will be present."

Political.

An election has been held in Sacramento city. THEMIS and the Republican party have been defeated. Our only consolation is that we will come up smilingly and exert our harmonious voice in the next contest. A number of our readers have commiserated with us on this defeat. We feel very much as did E. Black Ryan some years ago. He was the Assessor of this county, ran for reelection but was ingloriously snowed under. His friends tried to comfort him, but the thing got monotonous and he resolved to go up into the mountains where he would be away from any reminder of his defeat. He landed at the cabin of a miner friend, felt that he was outside of civilization and that he was at a place where he could not think, but when he went to his bed the tallow candle he had illumined his room, and about the first thing he saw was a copy of the Sacramento Union, pasted on the wall to keep the wind away. The paper contained an account of his defeat. We will stay at home and meditate. We have no particular apologies to make, but does not our contemporary, the Bee, think it a little cruel to say:

"The saddest thought after the battle is that the position of a local weekly journal was not indorsed by the people."

Our contemporary certainly must know that it pains us to think of the late election; it is cruelty to men to speak to us about it. Why rub it in now in our moments of sorrow?

Major McLaughlin, the trustee elect, served in the army with two of the editors of this paper. They rode side by side at the battle of Tripe Hill, at Santa Cruz; we are of the survivors. We have eaten with our comrade, camped with him. We know that in all reasonable probability his office will not be vacated by death during his incumbency.

Speaking seriously, however, we desire to congratulate Mr. McLaughlin on his election. He has served this people once as Supervisor, and creditably. From our acquaintance with him we have no doubt that his administration of our city affairs will be satisfactory. Mr. Constock, the Fire Commissioner elect, is the present incumbent of the office. He stands high in this community; he has been and will be a capable officer.

Speaking of the indictment of a citizen of this city for tampering with the ballot-box at the recent city election, the Record-Union voices our ideas in its editorial published yesterday. Our contemporary says: "A very serious charge has been laid at the door of one of our citizens, that will arouse community attention and awaken deep interest in the development of the truth. It is charged by the Grand Jurors that at the recent city election the citizen named in the indictment criminally put into the ballot-box in one of the precincts a number of ballots, with the intention that they should be counted as genuine votes, regularly cast. The crimes against the ballot-box are among the most heinous known to our system, for they strike at the portals of the citadel of our liberties. The act that criminally negatives an honest ballot is that of robbery. It robs some citizen of the most sacred right he enjoys—the right to a voice in determining the order and character of the government under which he must live. There is, therefore, no crime that deserves to be more severely punished, or that should be more diligently searched out. Common justice demands that judgment should be suspended in the particular case referred to, until a full, fair and unbiased judicial investigation can be had. The people will not consent that any innocent man shall be punished, nor will they tolerate any weakness of endeavor to unearth crime against the ballot, or to administer punishment to the guilty."

Governor Waterman authorizes the announcement that he will not, under any circumstances, be a candidate for reelection. "My experience of the legislative session," he says, "only confirms me in my determination never to be involved in politics again. My circumstances are such that I can take life easy. My ambition is sated, and there is no inducement—not a million dollars a year—that could ever tempt me to again submit to the annoyances, cares and anxieties of office. I did hope and do hope to leave behind me the record of an honest and upright administration, but it is with no hope or desire to secure another term of office for myself."

LAST NIGHT OF THE SESSION.

The Assembly convened at 7:30 P. M., Speaker Howe in the chair. It was a veritable "last night." Confusion reigned triumphant. All whose pet bills had so far failed to get a hearing were on the floor at once. A motion was made to declare eight bills cases of urgency. After considerable debate amid much ill-feeling the motion was voted down. White's S. B. No. 426, providing for the printing of transcripts and briefs in criminal cases on appeal to the Supreme Court, was taken up and passed. A message was received from the Senate announcing that A. B. 432 had been passed.

A resolution was adopted to the effect that it appearing that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Assembly had the sum of $14 remaining in the contingent fund, that he be permitted to pay the same to the State Treasurer. One member in voting aye said, "Marvellous!"

Speaker Howe at one time remarked, "I think we'd better stop this resolution business and get out of here alive, if we can."

Assemblyman Dibble was called to the chair, and Hersey, of Santa Clara, was recognized upon a question of privilege, and in a neat speech, which was loudly applauded, presented Speaker Howe with a handsome gold watch and chain—the gift of the members. The Speaker responded with much feeling. Will. Acton, a committee clerk, then presented Speaker Howe with a heavy gold-headed cane, the gift of the attachés of the House.

Sewell, of Mendocino, then read a speech containing many good hints on the characteristics and political ambitions of many members, and concluded by presenting Mrs. Leake, the wife of the Chief Clerk, with a set of diamond earrings. Chief Clerk Leake responded eloquently in behalf of his wife.

At 11:45 P. M. a message was received from the Governor, approving a number of bills. In the Senate, business proceeded in much better order, Senator Yell in the chair.

Shortly after 10 o'clock President White took the gavel and announced his immediate departure for the East, cordially thanked the members and attachés for uniform courtesies. Senator Yell was then elected Acting President of the Senate.

The last message was received from the Governor, and no mention made of the Glenn County bill. This indicates that the Governor intends to pocket the bill and thus kill it.

SAMOA.

[By Telephone from San Francisco.]

Late news from Samoa arrived yesterday afternoon late by steamer Bandalia. Everything is quiet in Samoa; the Germans have evidently made a mistake, and all nations agree that the declaration of martial law was a dead letter, and was never in reality recognized by any of the great powers or by Americans.

There is only one guard at the German Consulate. This does not look much like hostility. Business has been resumed. The news by this steamer, through the Samoa Times, announces the arrival of Admiral Kimberly, of the U. S. Navy, who was sent out by the late administration under instructions. Our advices from San Francisco are that affairs are quiet in Samoa, and that there need be no apprehension of a war.

Old Timers.

The visit of W. C. Wallace to this city recalls the fact that in 1854, thirty-five years ago, he was city attorney of Sacramento. At that time N. Greene Curtis was judge of the Recorder's Court, E. H. Heacock was the court clerk, appointed by Judge Curtis, H. W. Harkness was superintendent of city schools, Sam. Deal captain of police. Within the past two days all of these gentlemen have been in Sacramento. What a fund of reminiscences could be opened if these old timers would only get together and warm up a little. Notwithstanding these many years, these gentlemen are still hale and hearty young old men. Each has filled prominent positions of honor and trust, and is indeed part of the history of our State.

There should be no juggling with the wishes of the people of this state at Sacramento.—Gilroy Gazette.

There isn't. They are just calmly ignored.—Bee.

Right you are, friend Bee. There is no place where the wishes of the people are more calmly or deliberately ignored in matters of good government than in our city. State, county and city, likewise.

Wedding rings were used by the ancients, and put upon the third finger, because of a supposed connection of a vein in that member with the heart.

Premature Judgment of Crime.

Recently a man named Harry Holmes, a member of the Salvation Army, was arrested in this city on a charge of rape and incest on his nine-year-old daughter. The charge was revolting. In our issue of February 24th we said: "While all things connected with this case point strongly to the guilt of the accused, it is but proper that the prosecution should proceed with the utmost caution * * * Thus it is the policy of the law, and in the interest of justice, to avoid the clamor of impulse, and consider such cases with extreme caution. The charge being so unnatural, and one which is so difficult to reconcile with a human act, we write these words of caution." That Holmes was of unsound mind we have no doubt. The poor creature starved himself to death in the county jail, and died yesterday morning. He will settle for his crimes before a higher tribunal than the courts established by man. The writer has an office room above the county jail. We had an opportunity to observe the unfortunate prisoner from the window, and to watch his actions; in the hours of night we heard his moans and wails as they came from the cell below us. It has often struck us that society is sometimes harsh, and that some system should be adopted to take care of those who are not endowed with reason to care for themselves. Holmes should have been a public charge; his acts were beneath those of a beast. It is not at all satisfactory that, after the wrong doing of an imbecile wretch has been accomplished, the glimmer of realization of his awful crime bursts into his crippled mind, and he destroys himself in penalty. That men like him are permitted to have custody of children is the fault of our social system. Coroner Clark held an inquest on the remains of Holmes last evening. City Physician Nichols, Jailor Cogswell and others testified. The verdict of the jury was that the man died suddenly at the county jail, March 16th, and that death was caused by voluntary starvation.

Another Case of Liquor for Jurors.

The Chinese murderer, Lee Chuck, has been granted a new trial, and liquor given to jurors forms the principal ground. The court says: In the case of the People vs. Gray, decided by the court in bank, all of the Justices concurring, it was said: "It should be added here that if it is necessary that intoxicating liquors of any kind should be drunk by a juror, application for leave to do so should be made to the court, who can make such allowance as will be proper. Jurors should not be allowed to judge for themselves in this matter. A defendant in a criminal case should not be called on to consent; and in any case when the party consents, if the juror becomes intoxicated the verdict should not stand. The purity and correctness of the verdict should be guarded in every way, that the administration of justice should not be subjected to scandal and distrust." And it was there held that liquors furnished the jury were not suitable food such as they were allowed to have by section 1136 of the Penal Code. The court below should have granted the defendant a new trial on this ground.

Not Confirmed.

It seems that the whip of partisanship was cracked over the senatorial heads by the master hand. Governor Waterman's appointment of Dr. J. R. Laine, which did not intrude upon the term of any incumbent, but was made at the expiration of the regular term, was refused by a strict party vote. It was not pretended that Dr. Laine was not a good, competent and faithful public servant. The same party discipline was invoked in the matter of J. D. Redding and others. This is not in accord with good faith or good government.

St. Andrew's Guild.

Notwithstanding the rain there was quite a large and enthusiastic gathering of the young men of the parish in the basement of St. Paul's church last Tuesday evening, to take steps for the formation of a branch of St. Andrew's Guild in this city. After a spirited address by Rev. J. F. von Herrlich, the rector, a temporary organization was effected with R. O. Cravens as chairman and R. G. Palmer as secretary, and the latter was empowered to write for the charter and other papers necessary for permanent organization of the brotherhood.

A Georgia Mermaid.

There is a maiden lady in this city not far from Elberton who is so constituted that she cannot live out of water but a short while at a time. After remaining away from a bathtub for a couple of hours she commences to faint and almost suffocates, and to procure relief must at once cover her entire body in cold water. She has in her room a pool of fresh water, and in this she spends the greater part of her time, both winter and summer. Otherwise her health is very good.—Savannah News.

SOCIAL.

Oscar Brown made a flying visit to this city last week.

Miss Eva Hinton is visiting San Diego, the guest of Miss Laura Stevens.

J. A. Bruner, brother of District Attorney Bruner, and a member of the Idaho Legislature, is in this city on a visit.

B. Isaacs, merchant at Ione, and one of the Directors of the Agricultural Society of Amador and adjoining counties, is in the city.

Miss Emma Sherman, of North San Juan, returned home Monday, after a visit of several weeks in Sacramento, the guest of Miss Grace Kidder.

The closing party of the Plaisir Club was held at Turner Hall on Wednesday evening last. The attendance, despite the soaking rain, was very large. Robt. T. Devlin and Miss Gregory led the grand march, which was a very brilliant affair. The club has furnished some of the pleasant parties ever given in Sacramento, and its last season was full of success.

The many friends and relatives of Wendell Kerth, the well-known, old-time citizen, tendered him a reception Friday evening, at the residence of his brother-in-law, Louis Nicolaus, at Nineteenth and J streets, on the occasion of his 70th birthday anniversary. A fine banquet was spread for the guests, and Mr. Kerth was presented by his nephews and nieces with an elegant gold headed cane. After the banquet a pleasant parlor entertainment was enjoyed by those present.

The eighteenth annual ball of the Ancient Order of Hibernians took place last night at Armory Hall. It was a grand success, and the large number that attended were agreeably entertained. Prior to the dancing the First Artillery Band furnished concert music. The Reception Committee were: Capt. T. Dwyer, W. J. O'Brien, John West, P. J. Brown, J. B. White, M. Egan, P. J. Hawkins, M. Fenton. Floor Director, D. J. Considine. The Floor Managers were: M. J. Desmond, D. J. Long, Edward Quinn, Edw. McGrath, O. W. McGowan and Charles E. Daly.

Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. B. U. Steinman were tendered a surprise party by a number of their friends at their residence, on I street, between Seventh and Eighth. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Sol. Wasserman, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Pierson, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Cummings, Mr. and Mrs. Heilbron, Mr. and Mrs. G. Politz, H. F. Herbert, Mayor Eugene Gregory and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Judge Armstrong, Mrs. Charles Ross, Mr. Stevenson, Mrs. Hoeve, Miss McKillip and Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Woodson.

Friday evening at Pioneer Hall the Pro Culto Literary and Social Club gave a Bon Bon party in honor of Miss Nellie Cantrell, which was enjoyed by those present. Dancing was indulged in until 11 o'clock, when those present adjourned to the banquet room in the lower hall, where refreshments were served. Warren Floborg, on behalf of the club, afterwards presented Miss Cantrell with an elegant gold Pro Culto pin, which was a surprise to the young lady, who gracefully accepted it with a few fitting remarks. The following toasts were responded to: "Musical Toasts," W. Kellogg; "Social Intercourse," George Clark; "Our Boys," John Hillhouse; "Our Girls," Robt. Wait; "Literary Education," Wm. Larkin; "Pro Culto Club," Warren Floborg; Toast Master of the evening, Stephen I. Hopkins.

An entertainment was given to a large number of masters and misses by Edna Lewis, at 1623 H street, on Thursday evening last. The little people had a most enjoyable time. Gregory, Fred. Allen, Archie Ward, Elmo Cary, Will Howe, Robert Sullivan, Burt Tozer, Ham Hawley, Walter Tozer, Etha Beaumont, Grace Dixon, Cora Mott, Retta Colclough, Mabel Gilman, Iva Hughson, Blanch Twitchell, Nellie Mott, Trudie Madwell, Mabel Johnson, Cora Gilman, Lucy Murray, Laura Turner, Lettie Alsip, Mollie Sheehan, Alice Sheehan, Ida Ing and Edna Carroll.

Newspapers on Federal Appointments

From an interior paper we learn the fact that L. B. Mizner is likely to be appointed Internal Revenue Collector for this district. This will undoubtedly be news for Mr. Mizner. The real information is that Mizner is booked as Superintendent of the Mint. The item in our interior contemporary discloses how little attention is given to facts. Mr. Mizner would not accept the minor position of Revenue Collector.

Findings Reported.

Judge W. C. Van Fleet, the referee named by the Supreme Court to hear and determine the issues in the matter of Sansome vs. Superior Judge Myers, of Placer county, which was an application to settle a bill of exceptions, has made his report and submitted his "findings" to the Supreme Court.

It is said that Frank Pixley wears a charm attached to his watch chain in the shape of a medal, on one side of which is an engraving of the Pope and on the reverse a profile of the devil. River Improvements.

Yesterday there was passed by the legislature a bill organizing a commission of engineers to prepare plans and estimates whereby our members in Congress can be enabled to ask for proper appropriations to rectify the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers. For years Sacramento county has tried to receive proper recognition in Congress regarding these appropriations, with so far no success. The members of the legislature that voted for this measure should receive the thanks of the inhabitants living along the rivers. To the men who voted to sustain and pass this bill, and to the Governor of the state if he signs it, will be accredited the improvement of a highway of commerce which in the past has been neglected. Sacramento county is to-day well pleased. It means the practical accomplishment of what for years has been sought for by our people. A reconnaissance of our rivers was made under the authority of the United States government by Mendall. Afterward Captains Eads, of Mississippi river fame, was brought out, and examined the Sacramento river. Nothing so far has been practically accomplished. With this state law we can collate reliable data to be presented to Congress. Our local Senator and Assemblymen lent all of their influence to pass the bill. Their work in this session will be appreciated by their constituents.

Important Telephonic Connection.

C. A. Fisk is engaged in the construction of a telephone line from this city to the fruit orchards at Freeport and below on this side of the river. In connection with this line a sub-marine cable will be laid in the Sacramento river about 100 feet above the Clarksburg ferry, and that will connect the Yolo fruitmen with the Sacramento market. The cable will be laid to-day about 11 o'clock. The launch "Canvashack" will leave this city about 8 o'clock to-day with the cable, and it will be laid from her decks. The idea of this system is to connect the fruit producers on both sides of the Sacramento river with this city. It is understood that extensions will soon be made that will make the lines of the company reach all of our river fruit country. It is certainly a matter of importance that our fruit producers and exporters shall be brought into direct communication.

For the Militia.

Adjutant-General Drum, of the United States army, advocates that all appointments to the regular army from civil life, be made from officers of the National Guard of each state who can pass the prescribed examination. This is a wise idea and will serve to give an impetus to the militia by opening the doors to permanent recognition.

A Queer Case.

A remarkable case of mistaken identity was recently related by Attorney Paschal H. Coggins before the Medical Jurisprudence Society in Philadelphia, as having come under his personal observation. Two men—John A. Mason, of Boston, and John A. Mason, of Illinois—left their respective homes and went to California in search of health and wealth. They were both wagon-makers. One left a wife and two sons in Boston, and the other a wife and two daughters in Illinois. The Boston wife heard nothing of her husband after three years' absence, and twenty years later heard of the death of John A. Mason, a wagon-maker. She brought suit for his property, his photograph was identified by twenty witnesses, but at the last moment the Illinois wife turned up and proved that the man was her husband, and the later development showed that the Boston pioneer died alone and friendless.—N. Y. Graphic.

The Coggins referred to was a former resident of this city, and at one time the law partner of Creed Haymond. He was also a justice of the peace here, married the daughter of one of our pioneer citizens, and afterward removed with his family to Philadelphia, where he has since resided. He is a son of Paschal Coggins, at one time one of the editors of the Sacramento Union, and who represented this county two terms in the Assembly. Coggins, Sr., ran for Congress against H. F. Page in 1872, on the independent ticket. The case referred to was that of Supervisor John A. Mason, of this city. It was certainly one of the most remarkable cases that ever came up in court, but the statement in the Graphic is not strictly correct. The case was tried before the late Judge Clark. In the contest Hayward & Coggins appeared for the lady contestant, and the late George Cadwalader and W. A. Anderson for the will. It was developed that there were two John A. Masons; that they followed the same trade—carriage-making; and that they came to California about the same time; one, however, by steamer, and the other overland. By a strange coincidence the Mr. Coggins referred to was a passenger on the same steamer with the Mason who came by sea, and he was referred to in the printed passenger list as an "infant." It further developed that the two Masons worked at their trades in the same block in Sacramento city—Third street, between I and J. After the death of Supervisor Mason his sons, grown men, applied for letters on his estate; their issuance was contested by a lady and two grown daughters, who claimed to be the wife and offspring of Mason. There is no doubt that the contest was in good faith and that the lady believed that the deceased was her husband. The testimony, however, developed that there must have been two John A. Masons, and that the husband of the lady contestant had, like many another of the Californian argonauts, disappeared long years ago. It was strange that photographs of Supervisor Mason were identified by his mother and other relatives in Massachusetts, and that the same pictures were identified by prominent citizens of Illinois as being the other Mason. Judge Clark held against the contestants, but said that there was no doubt of the good faith of their contest.

At the Skating Rink.

There was a lively four mile race at the Skating Rink last night, Rogers, Toole and Clinton being the entries. Clinton dropped out early in the race, and Toole and Clark tumbled over one another, giving an easy victory to Rogers. Time, 28 minutes. Clark came in second, a little over a lap behind Rogers. There was a pool up of $75, and hence quite a bit of excitement. Then came a very amusing obstacle race, for a medal, with Curley, Clark, Lewick, Delano, Wallace and Fisher entered for it. They came in as named, after a funny time.

"Shakespeare is Shakespeare" for all Time."

In our next number we will commence the publication of a most learned and interesting article upon the Baconian-Shakespeare controversy, written for THEMIS, by B. Collins, of Chico, California, a scholar and lawyer, and who has made the subject a matter of great study and research. The review consists of four parts, one part will appear in each of our next four numbers. The student of Shakespeare will find much of interest, new and novel in this learned review. The general reader cannot fail to be instructed.

A New Firm.

Messrs. Brand & Campbell, formerly managers of the Orange Vale Land Company, have purchased the real estate business of Weil & Johnson and E. S. The County Inquisition—Great Things Expected—But Little Realized.

The Grand Jury has been in session, with the exception of an occasional recess, ever since last November. At the time of its organization there was a promise of many radical reforms in our local affairs, and the suppression of crime and eradication of some of the festering sores upon our body politic. After many days we find only the old story repeated, that crime and lawlessness exist, ordinances and statutes are violated. But the evidence is not conclusive, or the power of the jury is circumscribed to such an extent that no effective action can be taken and no redress afforded. Great stress has been laid upon the illegal payments of money to clerks and those who have in good faith dealt with the county and rendered services and furnished material at reasonable and moderate rates. While it may be and doubtless is within the province of the Grand Jury to investigate the matters of expenditures, it seems that when it is shown that such expenditures are in the public interest and for the purpose of protecting the most sacred right of the citizen, namely, the election franchise, and within that great broad principle that underlies all governments—public welfare—that a too strict construction should not be invoked. Certainly there is no criminality in any of these alleged shortcomings. The gentlemen who compose this Grand Jury are of our best and most public spirited citizens, and are evidently impelled by motives for the best interests of the people. Yet it does seem that more important matters might have engaged their time and attention. It is a rare thing where a body of such august proportions and powers are found engaging in apologies and excuses for its action.

A Retroactive Ghost Joke.

At Des Moines, Iowa, some one without sense or judgment played the stale joke of enacting the part of a ghost. The fellow frightened a farmer's team which ran away, very nearly killing his wife. The farmer secured a shot-gun and quietly "laid" for the ghost. After several nights the ghost again appeared, when the farmer filled his ghostship with a couple of ounces of buckshot. The ghost cried out, "My God! don't shoot any more." The ghost is not known, as it seems desirable to keep the matter quiet. This is a just retribution for such silly jokes.

A Good Man.

Among the names mentioned for Register of the United States Land Office we find nearly all the interior papers of this land district give the most cordial indorsement to Ed. F. Taylor, the former incumbent, who was deposed by the Democratic administration. Without any reflection upon the other gentleman named in this connection, we say that Hon. Ed. F. Taylor has few equals as a faithful public officer. His administration of the land office during his incumbency was beyond criticism. No better man, could be selected for this post of trust and honor.

At 1 o'clock to-day, from Firemen's hall, under the auspices of Sacramento Typographical Union, No. 46, the funeral of James O'Sullivan will occur. He was a native of Ireland and came to this country during the Mexican war, in the famous Stevenson regiment. He was a journalist of ability, and was connected with several prominent weekly journals in the mining counties. Afterward he was chosen a member of the constitutional convention of 1878.

The reports of the breaking of levees on the Sacramento river above us rather intensifies what we state in this issue editorially in relation to the insecurity of the levee defenses of this city. We had better be on the lookout.

John McFetrich, whom almost everybody in Sacramento knows as one of the brightest of newspaper reporters, was lying dangerously ill in his room on M street last evening, and doubts were felt for his recovery.

The fine weather last night brought out crowds of ladies and gentlemen, who paraded the streets until a late hour. J and K streets had much the appearance of Market street, in San Francisco.

Sacramento is perhaps the most quiet city of its size on the continent. With a small police force, with the residence portion comparatively unprotected, order is maintained; law observed.

Ordinance No. 21 of the Board of Supervisors, granting to the Folsom Water Power Company the right to construct booms upon the American river, appears in our advertising columns.

Weather.

The highest signal service temperature during the past week was 67° on Monday; the lowest being 44° on Saturday. The total rainfall for the week was 4.76 inches, making 4.92 inches for this month, 5.40 inches for the year, and 14.86 inches for the season, as against 10.06 inches to an equal date last year. The barometer at 8 last night was rising, and wind northwest.

Something New.

The depot of the Remington typewriter, the standard and best machine made, is at 1007 1/2 Fourth street, the only place in town to obtain supplies. Mrs. Irene S. Banton, the lady in charge, is also agent for the Stenograph, the wonderful little shorthand machine, and has formed a class. She gives a series of trial lessons to test the system. Call and see her, for we can recommend her work.

ORDINANCE NO. 21.

THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF THE COUNTY of Sacramento do ordain as follows:

Section 1. Said corporation shall be responsible for all damage that may result to the county of Sacramento, or any of its property, on account of the construction or maintenance of said boom, or booms.

SCRAPS FROM POETS.

Full Fledged and Alleged.

The World's Way.

At Haroun's court it chanced upon a time
An Arab poet made this pleasant rhyme:

"The new moon is a horseshoe, wrought of God
Wherewith the sultan's stallion shall be shod."

On hearing this his highness smiled and gave
The man a gold piece. "Sing again, O slave!"

Above his lute the happy singer bent
And turned another graceful compliment.

And as before the smiling sultan gave
The man a shekah. "Sing again, O slave!"

Again the verse came, fluent as a rill
That wanders, silver-footed, down a hill.

The sultan, listening, nodded as before,
Still gave the gold and still demanded more.

The nimble fancy that had climbed so high,
Grew weary with its climbing by and by.

Strange discords rose, the sense went quite amiss,

The singer's rhymes refused to meet and kiss.

Invention flagged, the lute had got unstrung,
And twice he sung the song already sung,
The sultan, furious, called a mute and said,
"O Mista, straightway whip me off his head!"

Poets, not in Arabia alone,
You get beheaded when your skill is gone.
—T. B. Aldrich.

Tea Gowns.

Now floats the tea gown into use,
Elaborate, costly, neat, but loose;
A rustling plush of twilight gray,
Lined with shot silk of opal ray,
From neck to feet the front should float,
With beaded agrafes at the throat.
Should mat be worn (a coarser kind),
A demi-train should float behind;
Embroidered gold on satin white
The front, drawn in with smockings tight,
Or what if silky Pompadour,
Lace trimmed, with Watteau pleats before,
While dainty frillings trebly deep
Adown each side with ribbons creep;
And flowers in bouquets here and there
Teach Art with Nature to compare?

—St. James Gazette.

Pettifoggers and Tricksters.

William E. Chandler, in his address before the Grafton and Coos Counties' Bar Association, made use of the following, which is most appropriate in this state:

The work of driving out of the ranks ignorant and dishonest practitioners is no pleasant task, but it should be faithfully and effectively performed, and there should be established and maintained the highest possible standard of professional integrity and honor.

In this connection also may be remarked a great change of conditions. Formerly, when lawyers were fewer, membership of the bar meant something; it was of itself a guarantee to clients, and insured to the lawyer the confidence of the community. Every court was easily able to keep an eye upon its attorneys, and knavish men were promptly discredited and ejected. But, as lawyers have multiplied, the mere fact of membership of the bar means less, particularly in our large cities; pettifoggers and tricksters are not so easily detected and so promptly expelled as formerly, and many a client's cause is lost, or he is mercilessly swindled, by nominal members of the bar who ought never to have been admitted, or, having been admitted, should long ago have been driven out of the profession. In our large cities bar associations have been formed, membership in which is an assurance of capacity and character, and to which unworthy lawyers do not succeed in gaining admittance. These associations, to some extent, protect lawyers against each other, but they do not guard the public at all. What is needed is a system of far-reaching surveillance over all lawyers who are on the roll of the court; instant and courageous complaint against all who violate professional ethics in the slightest degree, and the public exposure and speedy expulsion of every rascal. The courts will sympathize with the spirit of the work, and will always do their duty, but they can seldom originate proceedings. The work of purification must depend mainly on the bar itself; and its most prominent members, however crowded with business, should give time, attention and countenance to this most important task of establishing the fact that membership of the bar is a sure proof of legal knowledge, professional skill, and, above all, of personal integrity beyond suspicion.

The trial of a lawsuit usually amounts merely to a trial of skill between the lawyers.

HUMOR.

When colored barbers quarrel they are liable to razor row.

Can a man be said to pay as he goes if he sleeps on "tick?"

When a man snores in his sleep, is the sound vocal or instrumental?

If a dog can be placed on a scent, how many dogs can be placed on a dollar?

Celery is said to soothe nervousness. This applies with an S, to nervous employes.

The ties that connect most business men with the public—advertise.

The apple Eve lusted for and ate at last must have been a pineapple.

A Detroit lady was recently admitted to the bar. It was her father's. She got a glass of beer and left.

A Michigan grocer is willing to admit that honest tea is the best policy, but when it comes to coffee, he doesn't believe in running the thing in the ground.

The minister who divides his discourse into many heads will find it difficult to procure attentive years for all of them.

Cowper says that "the tear that is wiped with address may be followed, perhaps, by a smile." If it is a woman's tear the perhaps is unnecessary—you can always dry it with a dress.

While reading a few chapters of Noah
Webster's entertaining novel, we learned that when they embalm a man they fill him up with aromatic spices. Now we know why a man chews cloves—he's embalming himself.

Dickens Carnival.

The Dickens carnival has been postponed.
The date will be fixed in the future. Here is a literary carnival:

"David Copperfield" was an "Uncommen-cial Traveler," he was also a "Dickens."
One day he concluded to take a trip to "Mugby Junction" and make a stay at "Mrs.
Lirriper's Lodgings."

It was "Hard Times," so David pilfered
"Somebody's Luggage," which he opened with "Great Expectations." It contained "Pictures from Italy," "Picnic Papers,"
"Pickwick Papers," and "The Mudford
Papers." Those he thought to sell at "The Old Curiosity Shop," owned by "Dombey & Son," but "The Three Detectives" were already at the shop, so David was taken to "Bleak House" and the luggage returned to the owner, "Barnaby Rudge," one of the "Two Idle Apprentices."

David was confined in a cell with "Oliver Twist," "The Hallowed Man," connected with "The Mystery of Edwin Drood."

He told David "A Tale of Two Cities" and sang "A Christmas Carol." "Master Humphrey's Clock" had struck the hour of 12, and
"The Chimes" were ringing in the new year, when David was released from prison. He resolved to begin "The Battle of Life" anew, for he found there was "No Thoroughfare" for one who leads a roving life.

He went into business with "Martin Chuzlewit" and "Our Mutual Friend," "Nicholas Nickleby."

I met him last June at a picnic on "Tom Tiddler's Ground." He told me of his marriage with "Little Dorrit." (You will find the romance in any "Sketches of Young Couple.") "The Cricket on the Hearth" at his home is a merry one.

Valnikos.

A charming young student of Gruk,
Once tried to acquire Volapuk;
But it sounded so bad
That her friends called her mad,
And she quit it in less than a wuk.
—Milwaukee Sentinel.

The international language called Volapük (pronounced more nearly vo-la-peek than vol-la-puck) is designed only for international use, and not for communication with foreigners in one's own country, until perhaps some future age, after it has become common. The cities and villages of Europe are now so well supplied with Volapük clubs, bureaus, etc., that one can write a letter in this language to any scientific or literary person, or even merchant, in that country, and receive a reply in the same language. If the party written to does not himself already understand Volapük, he is convenient to one of these bureaus, or to some individual Volapükist, who will gladly translate for him, free of charge, for the sake of the cause. This inventive language is several times easier to learn than the easiest vernacular.

A Standing Query.

"How is it," asked Thackeray, on one of his most characteristic pages, "that the evil which men say spreads so widely and lasts so long, whilst our good, kind words don't seem somehow to take root and bear blossoms? Certain it is that scandal is good brisk talk, whereas praise of one's neighbors is by no means lively hearing. An acquaintance grilled, scored, deviled and served with mustard and cayenne pepper, excites the appetite; whereas a slice of cold friend, with currant jelly, is but a sickly, unrelishing meat."

Royal Weeds.

There never were, I think, so many royal widows in the regal circles of Europe in existence at one time as there are at present. Beginning with Queen Victoria, the Empress Eugenie and the two German Empresses, Augusta and Victoria, there are now Queen Christina of Spain, the Duchess of Albany, and, latest of all, the Grand Duchess Stephanie, whose aunt, the mad Empress Carlotta of Mexico, has never put on widow's weeds, as she is in daily expectation of the arrival at her present home of the Emperor Maximilian. What a brilliant destiny that unfortunate prince threw away when he left the charming shades of Miramas to run after the will-o'-the-wisp grandeur of a visionary empire in the New World. He would have been now, by the death of his nephew, Prince Rudolph, the heir to the Austrian throne, and, beloved as he was, he would have been rapturously hailed as the future Emperor by the nations under the sway of Austria. Napoleon III did his most fatal work when he lured the intelligent, amiable Maximilian from his conjugal happiness and the brilliant possibilities of his future, to work out his own sinister designs, which were not for the aggrandizement of the unfortunate Archduke, nor even for the regularization of French claims in Mexico, but which were simply covert acts of hostility against the United States. "I have carved you an empire out of a block of silver," was the remark of Napoleon to Maximilian when the latter came to take leave of him. It was not an empire but a sarcophagus that the crowned Mephistopheles had hollowed out for his luckless guest, and not from a block of silver, but from one of granite—not in sunny Mexico, but in the dim funeral vault of the Hapsburgs.

Don't Treat Jurors.

In a recent criminal case in Michigan the Superior Court of that state held it was misconduct for the prosecuting attorney to furnish liquor and cigars to members of the jury during the trial, and for so doing the verdict of conviction was reversed and case sent back for a new trial.

In very many important criminal trials in this and adjoining counties, nothing is more common than the extension of such courtesies to members of the jury by counsel on both sides. If the rule laid down in Michigan should be invoked in California, there would be many verdicts reversed. This treating business is a custom that would be more honored in the breach than the observance, even among individuals, not to mention sworn court officers.

Edmund Yates says: "It is significant that the Germans have recently thought it worth while to detail to their American Legation a technical attaché with the prescribed duty of watching new experiments in the implements and means of warfare." Yes, significant to England, perhaps, or to France, or Russia, or Austria. But the fact has little significance for this country. Nature and circumstances have placed the United States beyond all fear of foreign spies. We are always glad to sell the armed powers of Europe the very latest triumph of Yankee ingenuity in the line of modern weapons.

At one of the recent Moody revival meetings on the Pacific coast, the customary request was made that those suffering from any particularly heavy burden should stand up and ask for the prayers of the assembled multitude. After a few moments' silence, a tall, meek-looking man arose, and, in a voice choked with emotion, asked that the prayers of the congregation might be offered for his mother-in-law. Instead of praying, the congregation first began to titter, and finally roared with laughter.—N. Y. Tribune.

The woman who is of any worth does not love the trifle, or the flatterer, or the weakling; she loves the man whose strength she can admire, whose insight makes her tremble while she feels that it reads her secret thoughts, and who is of the serious integrity that will not degrade her or him by the base bribery of lying words; who is, at the same time, of the heroic and affectionate nature that moves her enthusiasm and that captivates her heart.

March was the first month of the Roman year, and named Martius from Mars, the god of war, from which the English name of the month is derived. Our Saxon ancestors gave the month the name of Lenet-monat, or length month, because of the lengthening of the day at this season. The French revolutionists styled the period commencing Feb. 19 and closing March 21, Ventose, the windy month.

A "cat reception" is the latest form of entertainment among the young girls of New York. It resembles the ordinary five o'clock tea—only each one brings her cat along, newly washed and decorated with her favorite-colored ribbon. The girl having the prettiest pet receives a prize, and the merits of the various animals are critically discussed.

The custom of tolling the bells of steamboats while passing Grant's grave on the Hudson river, has been adopted by a few boats, in imitation of the custom among steamboat men on the Potomac when passing Washington's grave at Mount Vernon.

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, MARCH 24, 1889.

No. 5.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.) Editors: Winfield J. Davis, W. A. Anderson, Geo. A. Blanchard, Elwood Bruner.

Recently we called attention to a number of unardonable errors in the History of the United States and of this State, compiled and issued by the State Board of Education. We are not calling attention to the faults of our public text books because we oppose the policy of such publications, for the writer, while in the legislature, was an enthusiastic supporter of the enabling and appropriation bills to put into effect the constitutional amendment sanctioning the publication of school books at the state printing office. These appropriations were very liberal; they were made in 1885; the compilers of these books have had ample time and facilities to do their work perfectly. From the very casual examination we have made of the books, and the criticisms that have been made in our hearing by gentlemen and ladies better qualified to judge of such matters than we are, we have concluded that in very many respects the work of compilation has been performed in a very unsatisfactory manner; it is not at all creditable to the compilers. If it is the work of practical educators, our respect for practical educators has somewhat fallen. The State would have derived more advantage by enlisting a few practical mechanics, farmers, merchants and professional men to compile a series of text books from which our children could receive an education after reasonable study, and without having to wear their brains out in learning abstruse matters which are of no earthly benefit to them now, and never will be, even if they live to be centenarians.

We have before us a well-worn grammar, the property of an 11-year-old friend of ours. He has been wearing his brain out on it; it amounts to absolute cruelty to the child. In the introduction of the book it is stated: "Part I of this book is made to be used in the schools of this state, with pupils of from 11 to 14 years of age." Part I starts out in the first lesson with "Ways of Grouping Words." The lesson is worded in language that no ordinary child between the ages stated can reasonably comprehend. Lesson 3 draws hair-line distinctions between a "sentence," a "clause," and a "phrase;" and on page 9 of the work the precocious pupil is given twenty-seven sentences and asked: To classify them as sentences, clauses or phrases; to select from the list seven clauses which will become sentences when the first word in each is dropped; to select four phrases that form parts of clauses or sentences; and to select five phrases, five clauses, and five sentences from the last lesson read in the Reader. Lesson 5 deals with declarative, interrogative, imperative, exclamatory, affirmative and negative sentences. Lesson 8 treats learnedly on the subject of predicates, and such terms as Word, Grammatical, Verb, Entire, and Logical predicates are explained in a manner that will confuse any adult of fair education. Our space does not admit of us following these lessons up, and pointing out more of their absurdities, but we advise such of our readers as have children studying this book, to examine it, and we will venture that the popular verdict, rendered on a basis of hard common sense, will condemn it as being almost cruelty to inflict such mental torture on children of tender years. The review questions of Part I commence at page 55. Here are a few of a large number of questions: What is the complement of a verb? Show the difference between a complete and an incomplete verb?

What kind of verbs take complements? What kind take object complements? What is the attribute in a sentence? What are adjective adjuncts? Give an example of an infinitive having an adverbial modifier. We will venture that not one out of fifty adults who have received a modern education can answer a majority of these review questions.

At best grammar is a difficult study—one of the most perplexing that is encountered in the acquirement of our education. Text books on that subject particularly should be as much simplified as possible, and there is no justification in placing before a child a book which cannot be understood by an adult of ordinary education. As a rule the text books of to-day on the fundamental branches of education are inferior to those used fifty and even twenty-five years ago. Less words were then used, but the matter was presented so logically and simply that the pupil had little difficulty in acquiring, in a comparatively short time, the result that is now gained only after years of study and mental torture. In some of the works of the state series it would almost seem that a studied effort has been made to prepare unsatisfactory books, and it almost indicates that there may be some truth in the intimation that the fight of the private school book publishers against public text books has not ended. It is to be regretted that the legislature did not look into this matter and institute a thorough investigation. We believe that the power yet remains with the governor to cause a scrutinizing inquiry into the matter. We think that Governor Waterman is a well-meaning man, and if these things mean an attempt at crippling the will of the people as expressed by the passage of a constitutional amendment, he, of all other of our citizens, will be the one most anxious to expose it. The people have by popular vote demanded the publication by the state of school books for their children; they have lavished a great amount of money to accomplish this end. Very many members of the legislature of 1885 are satisfied that had it been possible to defeat the will of the people, parties interested in that direction would not have scrupled to resort to any means to accomplish that end. We know that the gentlemen under whose supervision the text books have been compiled have acted in the very best of faith, but we do say that with the time they have had and the money they have had at their command, their work, so far as we have observed it and so far as we have heard public expression concerning it, merits but little praise.

There is an element among the American people who find fault with everything just for the sake of being contrary and unreasonable. It is utterly impossible for anyone to say at this time what President Harrison will do, or what power or influence will be exercised by Secretary Blaine. As Chief Executive of the greatest nation on earth, President Harrison and his chief minister of state should receive the respectful treatment and consideration of all true Americans. Mr. Harrison is not the President of any party, but of the whole people. He has scarcely assumed the functions of his great office, and has not done anything that could be possibly construed into an offensive act by any person, before the most rabid and vituperative assaults are made upon him in print and by caricatures which picture him and his cabinet as the vilest of creatures, bent upon theft, arson, murder and everything that is bad. Seeing these things, what could those who are unfamiliar with our form and system of government think? It would strike the foreigners in the most unfavorable light and lead them to conclude that we are a nation of vagabonds and thieves. Pick up any of the leading Democratic papers in the United States and the first object that strikes the eye is a large caricature either of the President or the Secretary of State in the attitude of perpetrating some great fraud or in the commission of some lawless act. This is all wrong. While the papers which indulge in this line of action may attract the eye of some, it will serve to repel others, and of a better class of people. No true lover of America or American institutions can find it in his heart to approve these libels upon our fair name and fame. It is not a question of partisanship now—that question has been settled by the arbitrament of the ballot. The principle which actuates all Americans has been settled and we should bow to the will of the majority. It is not right to keep up this running fire at this time when no possible cause exists. No matter of what political faith our President may be, he is the Executive of the great American nation, and must be respected as such.

Stanley Matthews, one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, died on Friday last, at Washington, after a lingering illness. His death was not unexpected. Judge Matthews was one of the brainiest men of the nation. Coupled with his brains was that broad, common sense consideration of all questions, which should characterize a judicial mind. It is these liberal-minded men we need upon the bench, from the ordinary Superior Judge to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Federal Court. Some attorneys when they are so fortunate as to be elevated to the bench forget the fact that they are only advocates after all. Some lose sight of the fact that they once appeared as counsel for clients who are appealing for justice. Some think it necessary to display their legal lore, or rather want of it, by hair drawn conceptions and what they are pleased to call nice distinctions of points of law, disregarding the open and broad question of justice between man and man.

" * * * * * For Justice,
All place a temple, and all season summer."

A judge should be a priest of Justice; a court of Justice a temple from which Justice itself should never be expelled. We need more such judicial minds as that possessed by Justice Stanley Matthews.

Literature might be compared to the formation of the earth's surface—the alluvium, the gravel or other hard substance, and the granite upon which the others rest. In literature we have the light and superficial, the literature of fashion, which serves the purpose of a day and then passes from mind, except where immoral lessons are taught, and these always remain. This class comprises the cheap romance and later day sensational novels, coarse rhyme and coarser wit. Then we have a more enduring class of literary work, but still not for all time, such as magazines, and many productions of romance and fiction; but these pass from memory and are sunk in the cemetery of forgotten lore. But there is a granite formation of literature as firmly established as the pillars of the universe—the old Greek and Latin classics—the modern classics, such as Shakespeare, Milton and Dante. There are also other particular works that are destined to be perpetuated in the minds of men, such as Dickens, Thackeray, Scott, Swift, Lamb, Goldsmith, Cervantes, Balzac, and which are, so to speak, written upon tablets as enduring as marble. Many bright gems have emanated from the minds of Holmes, Aldrich, Harte and Hay. It often occurs in the literary world that some apparently insignificant little effort takes a firm hold upon the great public heart and brings the author into prominence. The "Heathen Chinee" boomed Bret Harte; and that famous little dialect poem, "Banty Tim" elevated John Hay into literary note.

On the first of April a change will occur in the editorial management of the Record-Union, S. E. Carrington, the present managing editor, having resigned. He will be succeeded by E. B. Willis. Mr. Carrington has been in charge of the journal for several years, and under his administration it has maintained its rank with the leading newspapers on the coast. The paper is one of the earliest established in the State, and has for many years exerted a powerful influence. Mr. Carrington purposes visiting the east for three or four months, but will reside among us permanently on his return. Mr. Willis is a brilliant journalist, thoroughly drilled in the business. He has occupied important editorial positions in this city, on the Chronicle and Bulletin of San Francisco, on the Herald and Star of New York, and other leading journals in the east. He is an indefatigable worker, and we have no doubt but that he will discharge the duties of his new position creditably. Gen. T. W. Sheehan and Mr. Willis will have the entire management of the paper—the former devoting his attention particularly to the business department, while the latter will exercise immediate supervision over the editorial department.

Stephen A. Douglas, Jr., the son of the illustrious statesman who made that memorable contest with Abraham Lincoln for the United States Senate, and won, is a candidate for Presidential favor for the position of United States Attorney for the District of Illinois. If there is anything like the sparkle and brains of the "Little Giant" in the son, he deserves recognition for his father's sake. After the death of Stephen A. Douglas, President Lincoln—who held him in great esteem, and, it is said, would have called him into his cabinet—took especial interest in the two sons, Robt. M. and Stephen A., Jr. General Grant, when he became President, also looked after the young men and provided for them. Stephen A. Douglas, Jr., is reputed to be an excellent lawyer and a very clear-headed man.

SHAKESPEARE-BACON.

Recent Skeptical Literature—Donnelly's Cipher a Failure—Shakespeare is Shakespeare for all Time.

[Written for THEMIS by B. Collins, of Chico, Cal.]

[The revival of the Baconian theory has prompted us to give to the public the able and careful research of Mr. Collins, who is a learned and eminent scholar and lawyer. The exhaustive character of the work compels us to publish it only in parts. To-day we present Part I, and will continue the publication until these convincing arguments are complete.—EDS. THEMIS.]

PART I.

In these times of unparalleled push and activity, but few opportunities, if any, present themselves for that retirement which is thought to be indispensable for efficient literary labor. The following unmethodical production, it will be seen, was not gotten up in some "deep solitude and awful cell, where heavenly, pensive contemplation" is said to abide. Doubts are entertained about the propriety of placing it before the world of letters wherein so many critics and writers abound, singularly remarkable for ingenuity and learning. The single object of the writer is to show, if possible,

"How far a modern quill doth come too short," however plausible and brilliant it may be, in its efforts to establish, as a truth, a fact which the recorded and traditional evidence of nearly three centuries declare to be otherwise.

The question lately resprung by Ignatius Donnelly, concerning the authorship of the dramas and other writings ascribed to Shakespeare, may already have lost much of its consequence to the casual reader, but the claim so boldly put forth by a writer of such accredited ability that Francis Bacon is the author of them, and that the name William Shakespeare was only appended to the writings as a convenient nom de plume to deceive and mislead the public as to who the real author was, is a postulation which will not be received by those who care to examine for themselves, and to whom the investigation made by Mr. Donnelly is full of vital interest.

The subject is an important one, and its presentation would be a surprise to men of letters if it were the first; but in this respect it lacks the flush and spring of novelty. Several efforts have heretofore been made to establish the truth of the proposition, but the evidence adduced was so puerile, so wanting in authenticity, that it received no credence, and scarcely rippled the current of public opinion. The world had been schooled to believe that one William Shakespeare wrote the plays and poems to which his name is attached, and that belief was not to be removed nor shaken without demonstration. We are, however, now advised that demonstrative proof is now at hand, and that "gentle Shakespeare," whom we have delighted to consider Nature's poet laureate, is to have his brow stripped of the laurel that has encircled it for nearly three centuries, and are to be convinced that Ben Jonson, his contemporary, intimate friend, brother dramatist and eulogist, was mistaken when, immediately after Shakespeare's death, he wrote of him, that—"He was not born for an age, but for all time."

Though Mr. Donnelly has much literary capacity, and has shown much ingenuity and persistency of research, we cannot, from the facts that have been committed to print, arrive at the conclusion with him that he has established his theory. He claims that he has made out his case from evidence existing in the dramas themselves. That is, that he has found in Shakespeare certain characteristic words, expressions, poetic smiles and metaphors, which are identical with or closely resemble those found in the works of Bacon, and that the style of writing or composition is similar. In addition to this, he claims to have discovered a cryptogram or hidden fact which incontrovertibly shows that Bacon was the real author. He cites no external evidence, however, such as the acknowledgment of his authorship by contemporaneous authors; by any well defined, open claim of his own while living, or to any friend privately. Nor does he attempt to prove the claim by producing a single line of any of the works in the handwriting of Bacon.

Among the literary remains of Francis Bacon there has never been anything found to indicate that he had been a covert playwright. His own family, kindred or friends, political or personal, never produced a copy, a rough sketch, or a fragment of any play in his own chirography, or in that of any one else bearing his sign manual. On the contrary, the MSS. of his own works were scrupulously preserved. It is not shown that he ever had in his library a copy of Venus and Adonis, of Lucrece, of Hamlet, of King Lear, or any of the thirty-seven plays claimed to be his; and the presence of which could not have injured his reputation, inasmuch as they were published under the name of William Shakespeare, who was then universally believed to be their author. Bacon could have preserved the original manuscripts or copies thereof, known to none but few. They would have furnished undoubted proof of his authorship, and obviated the necessity, if any existed, of hermetically sealing up this fact. The celebrated edition of 1623, published three years before his death, is not shown to have been in his possession, and from the history of which there is nothing to lead us to think that he had any solicitude about or connection with, near or remote. On the contrary, there is direct, unimpeachable evidence that the plays included in this edition were written by Shakespeare. It was published by Isaac Jaggard and Edward Blount, and edited by John Heminge and Henry Condell, who were Shakespeare's contemporaries, and they gave it to the world as containing his productions. None of Bacon's biographers claim the plays for him. When this remarkable man, illustrious philosopher, author, statesman and jurist, had "shuffled off this mortal coil," and when there could be no longer any reason for concealment, no one, to whom (if ever to any) had been confided the fact, saw proper to raise the veil of secrecy and disclose the truth. Hobbs, who was an original thinker and an admirable writer, and who was a very intimate friend—a Boswell—of Bacon's, nowhere hints that he was a dramatist. Neither does Dr. Rolley, who frequently acted as Bacon's amanuensis, say anything about his being a poet. Aubrey, born before Bacon's death, and who wrote, among other works, "Memoirs of the English Poets," fails to include him as one of them. It may be urged that this kind of evidence is only of a negative character, and does not prove anything; but when we consider the fact that he had no reputation as a writer of dramas in the country where and when he lived, and that no author, respectable or otherwise, living in his time, ever charged him with being a playwright, is a circumstance so strong that it carries with it the force of conviction that he was not. There is not a single evidential fact or circumstance showing that he was. Tradition itself is silent.

In his zeal to support his theory, Mr. Donnelly advances premises from which he deductively reaches certain conclusions, which must make against him as well as for him. He says:

"While of the more than seventy editions of his (Shakespeare's) various works published in his lifetime, there does not exist a single volume known to have belonged to him. And yet the writer of the plays was very conscious of the value of his writings."

The latter part of the above extract is certainly true. But will it not equally prove that Bacon did not write the plays, since none of the original manuscripts or copies thereof were found among his literary remains? Bacon was competent to judge of their real value. He did take the precaution to preserve the MSS. of other literary compositions of far less value belonging to him, and it is safe to conclude that he would have done so with the dramas, had he written them. Did a single copy or volume of the seventy editions grace his library which he left behind him at the time of his death? If not, according to Mr. Donnelly, it is conclusive that he did not write the plays. Mr. Donnelly must be aware of the fact that the only publications of Shakespeare which he personally supervised were his metrical compositions of "Venus and Adonis" and "Lucrece." His other compositions were not written to be read, but to be performed or acted at the theatres, in which he had moneyed interests. It was to the interest of the joint owners of the Blackfriars and the Globe that copies of plays which they purchased and owned as property should not be made and distributed abroad, though many copies, in a mutilated form, were surreptitiously obtained.

Shakespeare, it is said, did not write for fame alone, but for the acquisition of wealth as well, in both of which the world knows how successful he was. He died in 1616, and it is quite probable that all the manuscripts that could be collected, as well as any printed copies of his work he may have left, were turned over to Jaggard and Blount, who published, and Heminge and Condell, who edited the editions of 1623. In fact these persons did "collect" them for the purposes of that publication, they being scattered here and there, and never having been collectively in the possession of Shakespeare or anyone else.

D'Israeli informs us, in his "Curiosities of Literature," that "All our old plays were the property of the actors, who bought them for their own companies. The immortal works of Shakespeare had not descended to us, had not Heminge and Condell felt no sympathy for the fame of their friend. They had been scattered and lost, and perhaps had not been discriminated among the numerous manuscript plays of that age."

If Bacon intrusted the original manuscripts to Shakespeare (and he must have done so to some one), to be copied by him for the use of the theater in which he was a joint owner, would he not, "being conscious of their value," have required their return? Or, knowing that they would become the property of the actors after they passed from his hands, would he not, before parting with them, have taken the precaution to secure copies, or have entered of record somewhere the fact that he had disposed of them? The fact could have been securely concealed in some obscuring crypt. It is remarkable that not a shred nor trace of any of the plays have been found connected with anything Bacon ever had or owned. Would there not, in his vast aggregation of written matter, (even if none of the plays in their entirety had been found) have been unearthed some tragic speech; some sonnet; some half finished poem; some corrected stanza, perhaps of Venus and Adonis, or the plot of some projected tragedy. And would there not, in fact, have been picked up by his legal representatives and friends

"Much future ode and abdicated play."

There was not. He seemed to be utterly oblivious to the fact that an edition of the plays was to be brought out in 1623. Three years prior to this he supervised the publication of "his last and greatest work," "Novum Organum," which we are told was the result of a "life work." If he could find time in 1620 to look after the publication of this work, he could have, in 1623, when he was no longer troubled with a press of State duty, found time to have seen somewhat after the "writings," in which he must have known there was "great value." The publishers and editors of that edition were men of intelligence, who had had daily intercourse with Shakespeare, and could not be mistaken about who the author was. They must, during an acquaintance and business intercourse at the Blackfriars, lasting for years, have witnessed some evidence of Shakespeare's ability to write the plays. Had he possessed no capacity in that direction, the fact would have been known to them, and the plays contained in the 1623 edition would not have been published as those of William Shakespeare. The fact of authorship could not have been kept a secret. It was not so kept. The fact was entered in the records of the Registers; was known at court to "Eliza and to James;" it was blazoned on bulletin boards and theatrical bills; was known to members of parliament; to the halls of justice; to authors; to courtiers and noblemen of refinement and culture; to actors, and to all who attended theatres, even to the "groundlings of the pit." The author was fully identified and known, and was honored and esteemed as such throughout a period of twenty-five years—the time consumed in writing the plays. Shakespeare enjoyed the reputation of authorship in the days when he lived; has possessed it ever since; and a generous public, who have been delighted with and instructed by his matchless creations, will not permit it to be dirked to death by literary assassins. The universal voice of the civilized world has proclaimed Shakespeare the author of the immortal plays bearing his name. But now, after the lengthened sweep of three hundred years, distinguished by the effulgent genius of this illustrious character, we are asked to credulously accept Mr. Donnelly's statement that he has, like Champollion, found a key that unlocks a hieroglyphical mystery, wherein he discovers the fact that Francis Bacon is the real author; that he has, like Heracles, who recovered Alcestis from the Stygian shades, penetrated the recesses of a darksome crypt and borne from thence a tell-tale cipher that carried with it proof beyond the possibility of doubt.

The following are the reasons presented why Bacon considered it prudent to conceal his authorship of the plays:

"His social position was high enough to give him a right to expect royal preference, and this would have been retarded and perhaps withheld if he had been known to draw a revenue from the writing of plays.

Writing of plays was not altogether an honorable occupation, and Queen Elizabeth would hardly have believed that a play-writer would be a good lawyer or statesman."

In this Mr. Donnelly draws heavily upon his imagination for facts. The Elizabethan age of literature was made illustrious by the ability and genius of its numerous writers. The Queen was one of the foremost and most liberal patrons of literature, and she was shrewd enough to fathom the fact that her reign would be made famous by the poets and dramatists, rather than by the legal abilities of the Cokes, Bacon and Audleys. She was excessively fond of and encouraged both private and public dramatic exhibitions, and frequently attended them. The exhibition of the plays having the countenance of the Queen, the writing of them could not have been considered a dishonorable occupation. Most certainly one having the ability to write such plays as were produced in the latter part of her reign would not have incurred her displeasure, but would rather have found it a passport to her favor and to public position, if he was as ambitious, greedy and importunate for place as Bacon is known to have been. The theater was honored by the presence of the Queen, and the players received her applause. She was a friend of the stage, and did not, like the haughty Lord Bacon, "despise men of Shakespeare's profession." They were called the "Queen's Players," and were by her licensed to play. Throughout her long and conspicuous reign she licensed the theaters, and this was also done by her successor, James I. In fact the Queen assisted in 1589, and again in 1599, a company of actors to go to Scotland. They were warmly received by James VI, and were liberally rewarded by him. If, then, the public representation of the tragedies and comedies was honorable, by what stretch of the imagination, or upon what score of propriety, could the writing of them be held to be dishonorable. In 1589 Bacon was made a member of Parliament, and in 1590 Counsellor Extraordinary to the Queen. He was in a position to know—did know—the Queen's views about theatricals, and whether the public avowal of the authorship of a play would have provoked her dislike, and whether to the extent to retard his promotion or cause his removal. The writing of plays would "hardly" lessen one's fitness to be a "good lawyer" any more than the writing of "essays." The fact does not lie in the name of the composition, but in showing the mental bent and inclination of the writer. In 1597 Bacon published under his name his famous "essays," but instead of injuring him in the esteem of the public or that of the Queen, he received, as he was entitled to, the praise of all. Here was an open, published authorship, followed by an augmented, instead of a lessened reputation. His "essays" brought him a "revenue," but were not the means of depriving him of position.

Book Chat.

Those who knew the late George Cadwalader intimately were aware of his fine literary attainments. Much of the learned counselor's leisure time was given to literary pursuits. The writer of these lines was associated with Mr. Cadwalader for more than eight years, and during that period assisted him in very many choice productions of a literary nature. Long before his sudden and untimely death it was the purpose of Mr. Cadwalader to collect his various manuscripts and arrange them in book form for private distribution, friends only to be the recipients of the results of his leisure hours' labor. One particular epic poem comprising ten or twelve cantos, was a remarkably fine, and indeed classic production, and was entitled "Cross Currents." We remember various passages which are replete with poetic fervor and fancy. The invocation ran thus:

Hail! ancient river, Charon ferryman!
Siren's straits through which Ulysses ran;
Most turbulent main of the buccaneer,
Father of Waters, by De Sota unveiled,
By all your arch demous mankind's assailed.

Then followed the heroic poem. What we started out to say in these lines, and by placing them in our "Book Chat," was for the purpose of directing the attention of Mr. Cadwalader's children to this matter, and inspire them to collect the select emanations from their father's brain, and give them to the public as valuable additions to the literature of the land. The writer knows that many fine productions existed at the time of Mr. Cadwalader's departure from this city, and he has every reason to believe that they are now among his papers. There are very many grand thoughts of such eminent men as Jos. W. Winans and Geo. Cadwalader that have never been published, and which would be most valuable acquisitions to the literary world. It would in reality be a literary mine, to find and utilize the many good things Jos. W. Winans has written in his solitude and hidden from the light of day.

Lipincott's Magazine, for April, is at hand and contains Amelie Rive's new novel, "The Witness of the Sun;" also, the usual miscellany. We have not had time to review the work of Mr. Chanler, but will devote attention next week. Can be had of H. C. Megerle, Fourth street.

There was laid upon our table the March number of Outing. There is a large amount of excellent reading for those who love outdoor sports, such as hunting, fishing, coaching, etc. Can be had from H. C. Megerle, Fourth, J and K streets, Sacramento.

It is rather surprising that our authors do not take advantage of the rich field for romance afforded by the happenings in the Spanish and Mexican era in this country. The late Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson gathered a rare harvest in this field.

General Lew Wallace declares that "Ben Hur" will not be dramatized. He is writing a new novel similar to "Ben Hur," the scenes of which are laid in the Oriental country two centuries ago.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

"A Hole in the Ground." As far as the play, if you can call it such, is concerned, it might as well have been called anything else with as much consistency. It is, indeed, a jumble of nothing in particular, and a lot of every-day nonsense generally. But no matter what we may say about a higher standard, it is certain that this character of amusement catches the bent of the majority of theater-goers, and is patronized when the high art and genius of the legitimate drama will fail to realize any profit for managers. Mr. Hoyt, in this line of plays, has simply addressed himself to a popular taste, and thrown in a thin plot to enable several clever character artists and pretty women to employ their specialties. The author being a keen observer of events, has embodied a goodly amount of satire and "hits" at railroad employes, drummers and hotels. George Richards and Frank Lawton were the two prominent features of the play. Mr. Lawton is a very clever whistler.

Speaking of whistling reminds us of a very handsome and dashing young lady, Miss Wiley, sister of Mrs. Captain Poole, whose husband was for many years one of our river captains and in command of the "Yosemite." Well, this lady was a most accomplished whistler, and often astonished as well as entertained companies of friends at social gatherings. There was not an operative air that she could not whistle in the clearest and most exact manner. Her powers in this accomplishment were greater than Mr. Lawton's. At that time, however, no one ever thought of introducing such a feature upon the stage. We only know that if the lady is still alive, and would whistle as of old for the public, she could eclipse anything we have yet heard. We believe Annie Pixley first introduced whistling in the drama.

Josef Heine gave a very entertaining concert on Monday evening at the Metropolitan. It is remarkable that one totally blind can become such a master of the violin; or, indeed, of any music. Mr. Heine is a superior violinist, and has absolute command of that instrument—can make it talk music. One of his original selections, which he calls the "Cradle Song," was written in Salt Lake and inspired by a dying child. While plaintive, the deep melody touched the heart. A majority of his numbers were original. Aside from his power over the violin and tin flageolet, he possesses great vocal talent. His imitation of Brignoli and Mrs. Kellogg was excellent, as well as amusing. The baritone on the house bills failed to appear. Miss Gertie Jones supplied the number. Right here let us suggest to our favorite little songstress that her vocal attainments would show to much better advantage in genuine melody—some good old-fashioned song—rather than those selected for the occasion. Mrs. Heine assisted as pianist. Miss Heine was too ill to do herself justice, which fact was painfully apparent. We regret to say that the patronage of this worthy troupe was totally inadequate for such a performance.

The story of Shylock and Antonio seems to date from the age of Amurath the First. A Turk lent a Christian trader 100 crowns, on the condition that if the debt was not paid at a certain period the defaulter should forfeit two ounces of flesh. This was in strict conformity with the Turkish maxim, "Money or skin." The debtor failed. The Moslem shylock stuck for his bond. Amurath decreed that he might exact the penalty; but with the understanding that if he took an atom more or less than his due he should suffer in a similar manner. There were no vexatious stipulations about shedding blood, as appears in the Venician affair.

Richard Mansfield has at length brought out his great presentation of Richard III., in London. From accounts, art and dramatic ability have given place to that mania of managers—scenery. The scenic effect is the first consideration in this case, and the great powers of histrionic art are laid in the back ground. Some critic says that Mansfield's representation of Richard in the camp scene was like the character of "Mr. Hyde." The greatest Richard was Barry Sullivan, who recently died, and whose demise was scarcely noticed by the press, or by his brother artists.

"New and original drama," means a cold steal from somewhere. "Free list entirely suspended," means house papered from floor to roof. "Immense success of the new drama," means change of bill next week. "Received with unbounded applause nightly," means a dead failure from the start. "The fair star's triumph was instantaneous and cyclonic, Foll Shingle," means price $1 a line, in advance, in the business office. "The genial and energetic business manager," means that the g. & e. b. m. has treated somebody to a lunch, or sent him matinee tickets for his wife.—To-Day.

The Vienna lady fencers have created a broil in San Francisco, by accusing some members of the fencing club with insulting them. The accused parties retort with a card in the papers denying the accusation. Certain it is, that no gentleman would offer an insult to any lady—actress or society lady. There are sapheads, dudes and fools, who pose as gentlemen, who might say or do acts tending to offend. A true lady, however, would not notice such affronts more than the barking of a dog or the chattering of a monkey.

Actors were excluded from the Tuxedo Club, but it seems that poker is one of the accomplishments of members of this select club. That Mr. Lorillard is an expert with cards, his little sittings with Mr. Thorndyke Rice, of the North American Review, are matters of local history. It seems a little strange that actors should be excluded, while gambling is considered an accomplishment.

That bright, handsome and pleasing little artist, Ada Glasca, of Couried's Opera Company, has been displaced, temporarily we hope, by one of those females of the alleged society order, who has experienced much of the follies of life, and who now desires to flame as an actress. Her name is Betina Gerard. There are few, indeed, that can equal Ada Glasca.

A new French play is threatened, called "Revoltee." The heroine is a woman who disregards and objects to the prejudices of society. This evidently means a few steps beyond Sardou—a total disregard for conventionalities. Its success upon this basis is assured.

Chicago Herald: Two tramp actors hopping along the ties of a railroad. "We're in hard luck again, Billy." "I should say so. There's only one combination going that will ever get me on the road again." "What's that Billy?" "Fun in a Pullman."

It is claimed that Roland Reed has dropped into the vacancy occasioned by the demise of John T. Raymond. The vacancy still exists. It would take a combination of Reeds to fill that space. There was but one "Col. Sellers."

Grace Hawthorne now wants to branch out in Paris. To do the little woman justice, we say that her rendition of Camille in this city, a few years ago, was very far above the average. The lady has merit.

Among a lot of bric-a-brac, in New York, it is said there is an interesting memento of David Garrick, being the watch he wore. Its date is 1743, and is of a style entirely unknown at this time.

Professional Chat.

Everybody remembers witty, jovial Frank Gross, lately deceased. Well, when Frank assumed the duties of clerk of the Supreme Court the entire bench was democratic, with the exception of Justice Myrick, Frank being a staunch republican. Shortly after the reorganization of the Court, the justices made some order relating to the duties of the clerk, which he took to be personal; and particularly was he incensed at Judge Thornton's apparent interference with his official duties. Frank thought the matter over, and the more he thought the more was he impressed with the idea that the judges, particularly Judge Thornton, were doing him a personal injury with deliberate design. This idea was intensified by the apparent indifference of the Court to Frank's position. So, burning with indignation, he, in his solitude, framed a scathing speech which he intended to deliver to the august judges at the earliest opportunity. He pictured to himself the withering sarcasm he would hurl at Judge Thornton, against whom he held the greatest resentment. The time came sooner than Frank expected, when Judges Thornton and McKinstry came into Frank's private office, and one, in a stage whisper, said: "Frank, old boy, do you know where we can go and get some good beer?" This unlooked for query knocked all Frank's grand speech out of his memory, and he thought it strange that these gentlemen, whom he supposed had done him a personal injury, could come and make such a social proposition. He escorted the judges to the desired locality, and while gulping the beer, remarked about his intentions and how he proposed to annihilate the judges. This was a surprise to the judges, who had not the slightest idea of any act or intent to injure the good fellow. A hearty laugh all around followed this mistake. Frank often told the story to boor companions, and how he intended to just annihilate Judge Thornton. He said it was possibly a lucky thing that he did not make his great speech, as the judges, being innocent of any intent to harm him, might have adjudged him in contempt and punished him severely.

While the late Judge J. B. Crockett was on the Supreme bench there were many amusing jokes at his expense, occasioned by his unusually large nose. The old fellow was quite near-sighted, and in his judicial labors was greatly assisted by his daughter, who was, when off the bench, his almost constant attendant. At times, to add to the proportions of his facial protuberance, a little pimple developed, upon which he kept a small piece of court plaster. During his temporary infliction the judge happened to notice a small round object, just the size of his nose plaster, lying on the floor of his judicial chamber; thinking the piece belonged on his nose, he picked it up, moistened it with his tongue, and pasted it on the end of his nose, and proceeded to take his seat upon the bench. A loud burst of laughter greeted the old judge as he in his dignified manner took his seat, when it was discovered that the supposed plaster read "Warranted 300 yards." He had picked the label which had fallen from a spool of cotton, evidently dropped from his daughter's sewing. The foud old Judge enjoyed the joke as much as anybody else.

Judge Hale, of Placer county, has for many years been one of the leading lawyers of northern California, and more than once he has been honored with legislative office. The judge is a Republican and four years ago was nominated by his party for the office of Superior Judge. During the campaign two old Placer county pioneers got together and discussed politics. Both were Republicans, and they finally agreed that it was their duty to vote the straight ticket. Then said one: "No, there is one man I'm going to scratch on my ticket, and I guess you will, too." "No," said the other, "I'm going to vote the straight ticket." "What," said the other, "don't you remember that hot day in July, twenty-four years ago, when the sun was boiling down and you and I were on the jury, and Judge Hale talked four mortal hours to us, and we swore we'd get even on him if we ever got a chance? I tell you this is the first time I've had a chance, and I'm going to scratch him from my ticket." "You bet, that's so!" said the second, "and I'm with you," and they clasped hands over the bargain.

There was a destructive fire at Denver Friday night. It reduced to ruins the fine new shops of the Chicago Lumber Company. Fraudulent Insurance Companies.

For a number of years many of our people have been made the victims of insurance and alleged endowment schemes, which are held out with such fascinating showings. The advocates of these swindling ventures ply their vocations and present the lurements in such a manner that people who otherwise are sound and careful business men are induced to invest their funds in these bunko concerns. Only a few years ago a couple of these visionary schemes were organized in this city and included among their members some of our most prominent business men. The bubble soon burst, however, and the lambs were shorn by the sharpers. Now we read of the existence of some other so-called endowment and investment associations which promise improbable results. It seems to us that these transparent frauds are so apparent that any reasonable man could at once see through the swindle.

Was it a Safe Robbery?

At 2 o'clock this morning, two young men who are employed by the railroad company to go the rounds to awaken the engineers and firemen whose trains depart before day-break, heard, while at the corner of Second and M streets, a noise something like an explosion to blow open a safe. They imagined that it came from the office of the lumber yard. The matter was reported to Special Officers May and Brady, who made an examination, but could find nothing. These same young men discovered the cracking of Schumley's safe, about a week and a half ago. While the officers were returning, they found a drunken man lying on the sidewalk at Third and J streets. He said that he had been attacked by two men, robbed of $60, and they had broken his leg. He was assisted to the City Hotel, and was there identified as a roomer.

Select Literary Entertainment.

At the Sacramento Business College last evening an entertainment was given by the pupils before a large audience. Professor Atkinson stated that this was the first of a series of entertainments to be given at stated times, the object of which was to give young ladies and gentlemen an incentive to self-culture and development; that an important feature of each of the entertainments would be a business talk by some prominent business man, and the other exercises would consist of vocal and instrumental music, essays, recitations and original speeches. He dwelt upon the necessity of the latter, as there was no accomplishment which was so much neglected as that of speaking in public, and that a man who was able to stand before an audience and express his thoughts in a forcible and pleasing manner was a power for good amongst his fellow men if his cause was just and his motives pure. He spoke of the danger of superficial accomplishment; that the beauty and grace of oratory lay not in its smooth and rounded periods, its gentle cadences or its graceful circumflexes, but in the outflowing of thought in the realm of the useful, the beautiful and the true. He bespoke the encouragement of the audience, and then announced the following programme, which was admirably rendered: Piano solo, Cachoula caprice, Raff, Miss Vina Barrett; recitation, "Look Aloft," Master James Summers; essay, "Intellectual Culture," Olion A. Hoit; song, "Fly Forth, O Gentle Dove," Miss Ruby Merkeley; a business talk, Frank Miller, Esq., cashier National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co.; Mr. Miller's remarks were highly instructive and from a practical standpoint; oration, "Practical Talent," Richard G. Hart; recitation, "Order for a Picture," Miss Emilie M. Connelly; instrumental duet, cornet and piano, Mr. Whitney and Miss Clark; address, by James W. Anderson, Superintendent San Francisco public schools. Professor Anderson favored the audience with a history of his early reminiscences in Sacramento and drew a parallel between the times then and the present, showing the marked degrees of improvement. He also spoke of the usefulness of a good substantial business education.

No Crime To Steal "Drift Wood."

A good story is told on a certain young member of the bar of Sacramento, who is known more familiarly among his acquaintances as "Billy."

A suit had been commenced in the Justice Court at Davisville by the People in their majesty, in which a Chinaman was the defendant, and the crime charged was larceny of stove wood. The evidence showed plainly that the defendant was guilty; that the wood was the property of the prosecuting witness, and that the Chinaman had been arrested with it in his possession, he having a load of the wood in two baskets. Billy, in an off-hand way, asked the prosecuting witness if the wood had not been submerged in water, and did it not show a deposit of the late overflow on it. Mr. T., the prosecuting witness, admitted that such was the fact. The arguments proceeded and waxed warm. The only point made in favor of the Chinaman was that he thought when he took the wood that it was "drift wood." The jury acquitted the defendant. The prosecuting officer was indignant and at the bar of the only hotel in Davisville asked the foreman how it was they acquitted the defendant. He received the following reply: "You d—d fool, do you think a Plainfield jury would convict a man of stealing 'drift wood'? Why, we haul our fire wood ten miles." The judgment must have been correct.

Departure of a Pioneer.

F. N. Mott, a pioneer citizen, will leave for New York to-morrow evening, destined for Far Rockaway, to visit his old home where he was born. He will remain until June 1st, and will return by the S. P. route, stopping at Tulare and Fresno; reaching Sacramento by the middle of June. This will be Mr. Mott's third trip to the Atlantic coast since he has been a resident of this State. He sailed from New York, February 3d, 1849; came around Cape Horn, and arrived in California July 21st following. His circle of acquaintances and friends in this city and other counties is large, and they wish him a pleasant trip.

The Weather.

The highest signal service temperature during the week was 69, on Thursday and Friday. The lowest was 41, on Tuesday. Total precipitation, 1.32 inches, making 6.24 inches for the month, 6.72 inches for the year and 16.18 inches for the season, as against 10.06 inches to an equal date last year. There was one of the severest thunder and lightning storms on Tuesday night that has ever been witnessed in this city. There were twelve flashes of zigzag lightning and the same number of rumbling, rattling, rolling thunder, which gradually died away as the storm passed over the city.

Map of Sacramento City.

We are in receipt of a new official map of the City of Sacramento and vicinity, compiled and published by Jas. E. Grant; drawn by J. C. Boyd, civil engineer. The map has been, by order of the Board of Trustees, declared to be the official map of this city. Included within this work are maps of Highland Park, Oak Park Addition, and the town of Washington, on the opposite side of the Sacramento river. Upon the map are illustrations, showing cuts of the "Capitol," E. B. Crocker's Art Gallery, new Post Office, new California State Bank, and Grammar School building, 16th and J streets. It has been known among lawyers, and those who have been desirous of adjusting street lines and boundary lines of blocks and lots, that former maps are not to be relied upon. This is the first official map since 1854. The various lines of street railways and proposed street railways, sewage pipes, fire limits and ward boundaries are shown.

The Colusa Sun says: "Hon. A. H. Rose was in town yesterday, and we asked him how much grain had been drowned out by the break above town, and he put it at 30,000 acres. He thinks our estimate, made elsewhere, too high as to acres, but he says the damage is fully half a million dollars." "An old man, whose name we did not learn, employed to watch the levees on the Blodgett place, discovered the water going through a squirrel hole. He first put his gun coat into the hole, then his boots, and a pair of blankets he took from a tramp, and held it until he could get help. This is the kind of metal to get to watch the levee." "There is no doubt that a squirrel is responsible for the break in the Hamilton levee and the consequent loss of at least 50,000 acres of wheat."

The following programme was rendered, and all first-class in character: Instrumental duet by Misses Ida and Lillie Ivens; recitation, "Farmer Stebbins at Ocean Beach," Miss Maud Jones; vocal solo, "The Huntsman," Mrs. Geo. Smith; tableaux and song, "Baby's Asleep," Miss Alma Dunn; instrumental solo, Miss Ida Ivens; recitation, "The Vagabonds," Mrs. E. W. Hale, and in response to an encore, "The Polish Boy," vocal trio, "The Buzzing Bumble Bees," Messrs. Irvine, Martyr and Landis. The instrumental solos of Miss Ida Ivens, and the recitations of Mrs. E. W. Hale were specially meritorious. Mrs. Hale showed herself to possess elocutionary powers which many professionals might well envy.

The young ladies of the Congregational Society entertained very happily and socially a large company of people in their church parlor Friday evening, at what was denominated a "chocolate tea." In addition to a social reunion the following programme was rendered: Piano solo, Miss Barrett; tableau, "Bashfulness," reading, Miss May Connelly; tableau, "Evangeline," vocal solo, "Longing," Mrs. S. W. Leake; tableau, "The Close Friends," reading, Miss Mamie Waterhouse; tableau, "Innocence," piano solo, "Orfa Polka," Miss Knox. After these exercises refreshments were served.

The Pro Culto Literary and Social Club had its regular meeting at the home of Miss Edith Utter, Second street between P and Q, last Friday evening, and elected the following officers for the ensuing term: Stephen Hopkins, President; Luther Weber Vice-President; Geo. Clarke, Secretary; Frank Conn, Treasurer; William Kellogg, Marshal; Warren Floberg, John Vogelsang, Robert Wait and John Hillhouse, Executive Committee.

A pleasant surprise was tendered to Miss Bertie Rode Friday evening at her home, 1,117 P street. Those present were Misses Nellie Harris, Celia Ryan, Clara Wentworth, Fannie Walker, Nita Cosby, Hattie Flynn, Allie Flynn and Masters N. Harriss, Charley George, Arthur Minford, Clarence Hunt, Charley Murry, Charley Rode, Arthur Katzenstein, Charley Murdock, Bert Katzenstein.

A Jack Straw party was given Thursday night by Califa Parlor No. 22, N. D. G. W. It was very largely attended. There were dancing and refreshments. Prizes were awarded as follows: First prize to gentleman, Mr. Lute; first prize to lady, Miss Dunlap; booby prize to lady, Miss Fanny Foster; to gentleman, Mr. Hoyt.

The Bainbridge Normal Literary Society gave a public entertainment last night of unusual merit for amateurs, the chief features of which were a vocal duet by Mrs. J. C. Bainbridge and Miss Noyes, a recitation by Miss Mamie Bainbridge, and a very life-like drama by pupils. A very attractive and creditable entertainment all through.

Mr. and Mrs. Eli Dennison, of Oakland, arrived in the city last evening.

Miss Kittie R. Heyman is visiting friends in this city.

California wines have been introduced in the Union Central Club in New York. Last week 22 cases of our wine were delivered to the club, and received high prices. If the club use this wine, it will open a fine market, for it is said that they use $300,000 worth per year.

Yesterday the State University at Berkeley celebrated, by "Charter Day" exercises, the 21st year of its existence. The exercises were elaborate and interesting. Harry A. Melvin, of the senior class, President of the day, delivered a brief address. The oration was by Rev. Horatio Stebbins.

A very enjoyable meeting of the Indiana State Association of California was held at Odd Fellows' Hall, Oakland, Friday. Secretary of State W. C. Hendricks, Rev. Drs. Dille and J. M. Thompson, Rev. Mr. Garver, Assemblyman Dibble, Colonel J. H. Woodward, D. W. Standford and others made addresses.

A meeting of the Bar Association was held in the Supreme Court-room at San Francisco yesterday afternoon, to consider the resolutions drawn by a committee of the association in honor of the memory of the late Hall McAllister. The resolutions, drawn by seven of the ablest lawyers in the State, were elaborate and well written.

In last night's S. F. Report there was published a two column and a half interview with Private Secretary Boruck. He states that he and the Governor are fast friends, and declares that he has no intention of resigning. He gives what he claims to be the inside motives that have prompted the newspapers to attack himself and the Governor, and furnishes a list of the gentlemen outside of the office from whom the Governor has taken advice.

LITERARY ASSOCIATION.

EDITORS THEMIS: The writer of this wishes to heartily indorse a suggestion advanced by you some ago time pertaining to the formation of a literary association in Sacramento. The suggestion is a timely one, and the writer sincerely hopes the literary people will utilize it to their benefit, mentally, morally and socially. There are in some quarters numerous self-nominated, self-elected philosophers, who can in the extremity of their discernment, discover great obstacles in the way of business success for those who taste the sweets of literary pleasures and literary pursuits. These pseudo-philosophers seem to be possessed of remarkable longevity of life, for the writer cannot recall the death of a single one. Perhaps with that phenomenal tenacity of purpose so characteristic of these would-be iconoclasts, they actually exert some influence with death, and thus secure prolongation of life. These cheap philosophers, the writer has observed, are men who put a generous premium on their own intelligence and a correspondingly generous discount on the intelligence of others. These wisecracks can be found in nearly every community. They believe they are on the earth on a mission of duty, and that duty is to point to poor, unsophisticated humanity the sunken rocks in the sea of literature. The philanthropic motive which impels them to act, considered as a motive only, is, like all other philanthropic motives, worthy of some applause. The fault is, their ruminations and wallings are misconceived and unnecessary, for fine literature, humanized as it is, is the safest and most rational source of relaxation and pleasure the business man, be he young or old, can find for his enjoyment when the exacting duties—or better, tyranny—of business is over. For some, fine literature has no charms. It does not require a particularly keen-sighted person to discover that in those who go to make this element there is a boundless Sahara of illiteracy and grossness; while on the other hand, they who worship at this shrine are shrouded in a mantle of independence of thought and a marked delicacy of mind no influence can dissipate, no mutations in time can ever dislodge. There is something satisfactory, something signally tangible, in a love for wholesome literature. It gives you a glimpse of another world inhabited by an unorganized federation of literary people, a people who can find unalloyed pleasure in the society of incomparable Homer; who love the music of "burning Sappho," and the "Theban eagle," as they chant "Æolian charms and Dorian lyric odes;" who find pleasure in listening to Theocritus and Moschus as they sing their rural ditties, "tempered to the oaken flute," and who can with pardonable pride look down with honest disdain on those who pay servile homage to ephemeral pleasures which neither ennoble nor edify. The application of mind necessary to banish chaos and prepare one's soul to enjoy literary pleasures, properly requires that thoughtful reflection and study our argus-eyed philosophers kindly inform us is highly detrimental to business. The writer doubts the truth of this. The writer of this is a farmer. The avocation referred to perhaps calls out fewer faculties of the mind than the average business, yet the writer will testify from observation that the farmer who segregates an interval of time each day for the perusal of good books, who, in fine, stakes his prospective success on the broad basic principle of study, reaches successfully the desired goal years before the man who rigidly adheres to the formula laid down for his ultimate success by our hard and exacting philosophers. The writer hopes the moralists referred to will not prevent the organization of a literary association in Sacramento. The writer hopes the movement will go on. He hopes another Bohemian club will arise from the suggestion of THEMIS.

CHESS DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY L. F. GRIFFIN.

"The game of chess is better known throughout the world now than any other aesthetic human invention. It is the first thing and the only thing thus far to gain admittance into the poets' parliament of man, the federation of the world." It is the first language to spread around the globe, none the less expressive for dispensing with words, and none the less intelligible for its unerring appeal to reason and mental concentration, rather than to the diplomacy of the tongue. The communion of two minds at chess is not subject to the limits of language or nationality. Some knowledge of so universal a pastime should be regarded as a necessary accomplishment to all."—Cook's Synopsis, page 145.

The match between Mr. Wm. Steinitz, of New York, the world's champion chess player, and Herr Tchigorin, the Russian champion, recently ended in Havana. Mr. S. scored ten games to his opponent's six—one drawn. Mr. S. introduced a new feature into the defense of the "well-knowned" and "well-worned" "Evans Gambit." 6 Q to K B 3 has never been played before in a serious encounter, as far as our knowledge extends. The fifth American chess congress will soon come to a head. The minimum sum of five thousand dollars has been subscribed. New York City will be the field of battle. Among the entrants to above, who have never participated in a world's tourney before, will be Mr. Albert B. Hodges, of Nashville, Tenn., the brilliant young "Murphy of the West," and Mr. J. W. Showalter, formerly of Laredo, Texas, better known among chess players as the "Texas Tiger." Chess is on a boom in Sacramento. One tournament has been brought to a successful termination, and another is on the tapis, with ten entrants, at the Sacramento chess, checker and whist club. Messrs. Manson and Wheeler, two expert chess players of San Francisco, visited the club rooms recently. The match by telegraphic correspondence between Mr. Jos. D. Redding, of San Francisco, and a committee of players from the C. C. and W. Club, will soon be ended. Mr. Jos. D. Redding stands as the champion of the Pacific Coast, but we think this game is an instance of Samsou falling among the Phillistines. We append the score:

Anything but Humor.

Young Man (to office boy)—Give that humorous article to the editor, please, and ask him if he can read it right away.

Office Boy (returned with humorous article)—De boss returns the article with thanks. He says he's all upset with the mumps, and prob'ly won't be able to read anything funny for a week.—Harper's Bazar.

A Sad Refrain.

Thoughtfully a poet raised the foaming mug to his parched lips and was about to become a less thirsty mortal when he was arrested in the act. "Pay first, drink last," murmured the bartender, with his hand on the mug and his eye on the poet. "Ah! it was ever thus I have seen my fondest hopes decay! I never smelt the hop in beer, but I have been asked to pay."

Scribuler—What do you think of my "Tale of Poverty," in the last Bazar?

Cynicus—Very well carried out. It was poor from beginning to end.

"Do you expect to keep Lent, Mr. Gray-boy?"

"Oh, yes, sorter half keep it; that is, my better half keeps it."

Unloved and Alone.

The sea dove some twin shadow has,
The lark has loves in fields of grass,
The wild beast trumpets back his vow,
The squirrel laughs along his bough;
But I, I am as lone, alas!
As you white moon when white clouds pass;
As lonely and unloved, alas!
As clouds that weep and drop and pass.

O maiden, singing silver sweet,
At cabin door, in field of corn,
Where woodbines twine for thy retreat—
Sing sweet through all thy summer morn,
For love is landing at thy feet
In that fair isle in seas of corn;
But I, I am unloved and lorn
As winter winds of winter morn.

The ships, black-bellied, climb the sea,
The seamen seek their loves on land,
And loved and lover, hand in hand,
Go singing, glad as glad can be;
But nevermore shall love seek me
By blowy sea or broken land,
By broken wild or willow tree—
Nay, nevermore shall love seek me.

Crime Increasing.

It is shown by reports from the police authorities of twenty-seven American cities that crime and immorality are on the increase. * * * The first remedy that suggests itself as an outgrowth from the conditions which confront us is an organized effort to awaken the moral faculties all along the line through the public schools, the only direct channel of access to the plastic natures of the young who will rule the country hereafter. It is the duty of all good citizens, whether they call themselves Christians, Protestants, Catholics, theists, atheists, agnostics, theosophists, or what not, to waive differences of opinion on the theoretical creeds or dogmas, and to unite in an effort to reach a common basis of elementary moral instruction. Fitness to impart moral training should be a condition of every normal school diploma. No man should be permitted to teach at all who is not fitted to teach morals to the young. The other great teacher of the American people is the newspaper. It is quite time that the daily press more generally recognized its responsibility for influencing the moral tone of the public. There should be less pandering to unhealthy and vicious tastes; but negative reformation will not suffice. Every newspaper in the country should take more frequent occasion to enforce conclusions favorable to morality in an attractive way, and to inculcate a keener sense and a more general practice of the distinction between right and wrong.—New York Press.

The Literary Society.

"Oh, Mrs. Watts, you should join our literary society without delay!"
"Should I?"
"Yes, indeed!"
"But why?"
"Because we study and learn so much. Last meeting we took up Carlyle's quarrels with his wife."
"It must have been interesting."
"Very. At our next meeting we shall investigate the private life of the poet Goethe and his love affairs."
"How instructive!"
"Yes; and we have found out everything about Poe's dissipation and disreputable conduct, and purpose soon thoroughly to investigate the immoral actions of Voltaire."
"Indeed!"
"Oh, there's nothing like a literary society to increase one's culture. You ought to join."

Wind Waves.

A close observer may have noticed that although we have had the wind steadily in the southeast—the regular rain quarter—yet it has not rained steadily. It would rain for a few hours, and then, though cloudy and threatening, it would not rain for a number of hours. We are told by those who have made meteorology a study that wind moves in waves, like the sea, only the waves are very large; that when the lower part of the wave is passing over the earth it rains, provided the wind be in the right direction, but when we are under the crest of a wave it then sweeps by without rain. Since this fact has been brought to our notice, we have observed that this is invariably the case.—J. C. S., in Colusa Sun.

A Very Peculiar Ghost.

The people residing in the neighborhood of Brushy Ridge are greatly exercised over the reappearance there of what they claim to be a genuine ghost. It is said to be as large as a red fox, and has four legs and a pair of wings. The strange and oddly-shaped "spook" can both walk and fly, and makes hideous cries at all times of night. The people of that locality are so terrorized by the unnatural being that they cannot be induced to venture from their homes at night.—Indianapolis News

In Shape for Publication.

Young Lady (to editor)—I see, Mr. Shears, that you published my article?
Mr. Shears—Yes; we used it; but we had to cut it down a good deal. We had the boy who runs the adjective killer at work on it nearly all day.—Harper's Bazar.

The question of bimetalism has just been discussed in the German Parliament. A suggestion was made that if England led the way Germany would follow. To this Herr Bamberger, a great financial authority, was strongly opposed. Germany's prosperity, he said, was due in a great measure to her gold standard. The secretary of the treasury said the question was not at all political; it was a question of expediency. We could not promise that if England led the way Germany would follow. If England should take that course Germany would be compelled to consider the question; but she must reserve for herself liberty of action. It is quite clear that bimetalism has not yet found favor among the financiers of Fatherland.

The alligator of the south, like the buffalo of the west, is likely soon to become extinct. The slaughter of the alligator for its hide, like the slaughter of buffaloes for their hides, has been so great that it will only be a few years before the lonely lagoon of Florida will have lost its last survivor.

The Duke of Newcastle has just married Miss Candy. She is sweet, and the duke has the "sugar," so they ought to be reasonably happy.

A Keokuk man committed suicide yesterday after having his photograph taken. He probably saw the proof.

Frauds in Literature.

Referring to an article on actresses, which recently appeared in the North American Review over the signature of Mary Anderson, a writer in the London Globe says:

Upon being brought to book by the inevitable interviewer, Miss Mary Anderson gave an explanation which throws a useful light on the manner in which articles are written for American magazines. It appears she did not actually compose the essay; she only adumbrated the ideas in conversation with a "literary" friend, who put them into shape for her. No doubt she signed the document, but she was in a hurry, she says, and had no time to read it carefully. So that was how she made her debut in literature.

There is too much of this kind of thing being done in America. Some three or four months ago I had occasion to ask Mr. Blodin about an article which appeared over his signature in a prominent American magazine, and he declared that until then he had never heard of it. That he never wrote it, any one acquainted with his broken English must know. Some prominent Americans have a literary man attached to their household, as other people have their grooms or butlers. At the present time there is pending an action in the law courts, in which Mr. James McLaughlin sues Mrs. Kelly, the widow of the "Tammany king," for $200,000, in round numbers, for literary work done. This work appears to have been mainly the composition of speeches which Mr. Kelly delivered.

It is indisputable that a certain amount of "ghost" work goes on even in English literature. The "double" writes, and his employer signs; but that is a natural consequence of the manner in which work is now-a-days crowded upon any man with a name. A story is related of one well-known novelist, which, let us hope, is exceptional. If told, as he often is, that a certain novel included among his works is poor, he coolly answers that he never read it; he signed it for the sake of a poor fellow who had just come up to town to begin the struggle, and who thought if he could get a distinguished man's name attached to his novel he might get some money for it.

Very likely he remembered the story of the young minister who raised £200 by publishing a volume of sermons by "W. S." In this case, however, there was no deception; they were by Sir Walter Scott, written by him when his young friend was so shaken at the prospect of preaching before the Presbytery that he could not write his trial sermons. So Scott kindly scribbled them off for him, and let his name be employed to sell them afterwards. It was one of those kindly things which still attach people to the "Shirra" with something akin to personal love.

Burdette Chips.

"You take a basin of water, place your finger in it for twenty-five or thirty seconds, take it out and look at the hole that is left. The size of that hole represents about the impression that advice makes on a young man's mind."

"Don't depend too much on your family—the dead part, I mean. The world wants live men; it has no use for dead ones. Queen Victoria can trace her ancestors back in a direct line to William the Conqueror. If you cannot get any further back than your father you are better off. Your father was a better man in his time than old William. He had better clothes to wear, better food to eat, and was better housed."

"If you are a diamond, be sure that you will be found out. Check, brass or gall never gets ahead of merit."

"I love a young man who is straightforward. Ask for what you want. If you wish to marry a rich man's daughter or borrow five hundred dollars from him, ask him for it; it amounts to the same thing in the end. It is always better to astonish a man than to bore him."

"Remember that in the morning of life come the hard working days. Hard work never killed a man. It's fun, recreation, relaxation, holidays, that kill. The fun, that results in a head so big that a tub could hardly cover it, is what kills. Hard work never does."

"Those who come after us will have to work just as hard as we do. When I shovel snow off my sidewalk, if, perchance, I take a three-quarter piece off my neighbor's walk, I put it back, because, if I didn't, I should be doing him an injustice."

"You can't afford to do anything but what is good. You are on dress parade all the time."

"Don't be afraid of pounding persistently at one thing. Don't be afraid of being called a one-idea man, or a crank. If you have one idea, you have more than most men have. It takes a smart man to be a crank."

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, MARCH 31, 1889.

No. 6.

We know how badly a man, or a woman either for that matter, hates to be called a fool, and hence we are fully aware of how dangerous it will be to say aught against "booms;" yet in our judgment they are such absurd, undisguised public frauds and snares to catch the unwary, that, at the risk of being dubbed moss-backed silurians, or any other kind of what-is-it, we will say that we do not believe in booms. What is a boom? "A bar across a river; a rush, a roar;" so says Webster, and as he speaks of it in the sense of rafting logs down a stream, a commercial boom may be likened to it. A rush, a roar, a hip and a hurrah among real estate vendors for a season, and then a return to the ancient condition of the locality—peace, quiet and inactivity. A goodly sum added to the bank account of the lucky speculator; a lot of land in the hands of the man who started in with small means, which he advanced as his first payment, and his indorsed notes to secure the balance that will keep him forever after poor to pay, and finally a foreclosure suit and plenty of Anglo-Saxon swearing at the idiot who invented the boom, to fittingly close the craze. And then the community shakes itself, rubs its eyes and wakes up to find itself just where it was before the incubus seized it. Need the fact be illustrated? If so, visit the deserted streets of San Diego, and, returning, stop at Los Angeles. They are examples of what the boom has done for those villages, and what they have of a permanent character, as a result of that speculative fever that has struck more than one locality in California and knocked it silly.

And our own community is not without its visitation in that respect. We have said that to denounce booms hereabouts would not be gratifying, although if we had not had one, we would be inclined to laugh at others who had, just because of the fruitless enterprise. But we must not scold; it is human nature for every man to take care of himself and look after his own mighty dollar, no matter what may be the public loss.

Yet, is this the way to build up and foster a place? To aid in bringing together a thriving, industrious and a permanent population of work people? Hardly. A great writer on political economy says: "The inhabitants of a town, though they frequently possess no lands of their own, yet draw to themselves, by their industry, such a quantity of the rude produce of the lands of other people as supplies them, not only with the materials of their work, but with the fund of their subsistence." A small quantity of manufactured produce purchases a great quantity of rude produce. A trading and manufacturing country therefore naturally purchases with a small part of its manufactured produce a great part of the produce of other countries; while, on the contrary, a country without trade and manufactures is generally obliged to purchase the manufactured produce of other countries.

What Sacramento wants most of all, and wants badly, and only wants to make a genuine and lasting "boom," is a general manufacturing spirit, that will invite here a population of laborers and their families. That she has the room and the facilities and all else necessary to achieve success in that line will not be doubted. She has, passing on two sides of her, a water power that only the great Merrimac, of New England, can equal; she has great area of territory upon which to erect vast structures for operation by steam power; she has also the best clay on the coast out of which to manufacture bricks of all kinds; she has, north and east of her, vast pasture lands, upon which graze hundreds of thousands of cattle and sheep, whose hides and wool, and tallow, and horns, and hoofs could be made into hundreds of the articles of commerce that find market at every door; she is united by rail with the great pine forests of the Sierras, whose timber passes us, on the road to other and more enterprising places, to be turned into every shape the ingenuity of man has conceived for his comfort or convenience, and she is encircled on all sides by the world's huge granary—that store-house that sends out annually its millions of quintals to furnish bread-stuffs for the universe. Yet, with all these advantages, where are the signs of enterprise that should illustrate such a community's wealth?

Go to our railroad depot or freight sheds, and one will there see ample evidence of an absence of thrift on our part. The hides that come from the cattle north and east of us pass our doors, on their way to Benicia and other places, to be tanned and turned into leather, to be returned here to our retail dealers; mowers, reapers, harvesters and other agricultural machinery are sent through by rail from Stockton, Benicia and elsewhere to supply the north and east counties; the paper mills at Santa Cruz fill orders for the state in every direction; boots and shoes are brought here from far away; brooms, brushes, buckets and baskets could be made right here, and give employment to hundreds of hands—men, women, boys and girls, and they would require homes; and consequently, real estate, with comfortable but cheap cottages, would assume a healthy impetus that would benefit all, and not the avaricious few, as is always the case with the boom spasm. We cannot see what good the 1887-8 boom has accomplished for Sacramento.

In the case of Lamb against Reclamation District 108 (73 Cal. 125), the Supreme Court of this State determined a principle, which, if sustained by the federal courts, is far-reaching in its consequences. It determines, substantially, that the natural channels (called sloughs) through which the waters of the Sacramento at high floods naturally escape to low lands on either side may be closed by land owners in self-protection against the waters of such floods; and that if the increased volume of water retained in the channel shall injure the owner of other lands his damage is absque injuria, and his only remedy is to construct defensive works and thereby protect himself. This would seem to involve the idea that the owner who could build the highest and strongest levees might turn the surplus water on his neighbor and ruin him. It introduces the old common law notion of wager of battle, with this difference, that the battle must be waged with capital—i. e., he who can build the strongest levee wins the fight. Courts of law are organized to settle rights of parties concerning property interests on a basis of reason, and it is seldom that courts relegate the litigants to a general struggle for ultimate settlement of the controversy. It is quite probable that no amount of leveeing from Redding to Rio Vista can ever be made to carry all the water at high floods in a single channel. Consequently there must be breaks, and adjoining lands must be overflowed. It should not be left to might to determine where such surplus water should escape and whose land should be overflowed. If this matter were settled, either by nature in keeping open the natural channels for the escape of surplus water, or by the law of the land, everybody could accommodate himself to the condition in which he finds himself. But if the matter be left to chance, or to be altered from time to time by enterprising land owners, no one can be safe.

There is at present a long expanse of levee on the south side of the Mokelumne river, protecting a large amount of land west of the railroad, and south of that river, from the waters of the Cosumnes and Mokelumne rivers. This, at present, forces the water north, injuring a large body of land north of the Mokelumne river, the water finally falling into Suisun bay. The owners of land in Sacramento county so injured might build a line of levees on the north side, which would confine the water to a narrow channel, and render the defense on the south side of the Mokelumne useless. The line on the north side would be shorter than its rival, and the natural flow would be south, through lands in San Joaquin county, thus rendering it comparatively easy to maintain supremacy. But this strained condition of conflicting interests is not a healthy one, and it should be altered by placing such matters in the hands of some public authority. The city of Sacramento constructed its levees and raised the business streets sufficiently high to protect itself from a condition of things existing in 1862. But is it sufficient if all the waters are confined in the channel in front of the city at high floods? It is comparatively easy for property owners along the Sacramento river on its right bank to construct levees that are higher than our own; but it is not so easy for us to raise the whole city, and it would certainly injure our business localities on and near Front street to be compelled to build a levee higher than the grade of the streets.

This paper desires to call attention to this state of affairs, with a view to secure a public opinion which will be sufficiently enlightened to foresee the evils indicated, and provide against them. We venture to suggest that public opinion and authoritative action should be addressed to these two points: 1st. That the matter of providing for the disposition of the surplus water of the Sacramento in time of high floods should, by statute, be placed in the hands of a board, one member of which should be a thorough engineer. 2d. That such board provide for the escape of waters when the river reaches a certain height, thus harmonizing conflicting interests.

The time will soon arrive when the Board of Police Commissioners will be called upon to select the officers on our police force. Much of the lawlessness that has prevailed in this city can be directly charged to the incapacity of some of the persons who have been given places on the force, and in that matter the responsibility falls upon the commissioners. The legislature has increased the force, but no addition in numbers will avail for effectiveness unless the selections are made of men who have reasonable qualifications to perform the important duties incumbent upon peace officers. The rule has been that every ward boss in the city has insisted on having his man or men on the force; the political scruff do not take into consideration the matter of competency—they want to get their man in. They would not hesitate to insist on the appointment of an ourang-ou-tang on the force if they had any assurance that the ape would acknowledge that his elevation was due to their influence. In the presentation of such a candidate we are not to be understood to reflect on the innocent beast, for if he were moderately educated, he would perhaps display intelligence approaching that of some of the men who have worn stars in times past. The people who pay the taxes, who have property to be guarded, and whose lives are worth preserving by law, do not present candidates for policemen; they repose their faith in the commissioners, and expect that their selections will be judiciously made.

We speak with plainness of this matter, because we know the influences that are most active and interested in the formation of the force. The commissioners are not blind to the existence of the state of affairs to which we refer. The law requires each applicant to be endorsed by twelve free-holders and tax-payers. Such an endorsement can be procured for any person in half an hour; people will sign anything in the way of a petition.

We suggest that the Board has now an opportunity to select for this people a first-class force—a force that will command public respect and confidence; one that will restrain and punish crime. If they do that we will have less property stolen, fewer outrages on the persons of our citizens by garroters, gambling will become a thing of past history—it may prevent the murder of some of our people. There is no difficulty in finding honest men who will make intelligent and efficient officers. It is for the commissioners to seek them out. They should meet in private, lay politics aside, and make their selections with that care that the owner of an extensive business picks out his trusted help. If an applicant is unknown, or of doubtful ability or integrity, the signers to his petition should be summoned before the Board to tell what they know of him. The people do not apparently take much interest in the selection of police officers, but when it is developed that "sticks," and sometimes corrupt men, are put on guard, they are not at all slow in showing their indignation. A good man is cheaper than a poor one.

Benjamin F. Tracy, the Secretary of the Navy, was one of our first American orators that made an innovation upon the delivery of orations. In the famous Beecher trial, Mr. Tracy, for the defense, went to the jury with a carefully written argument, and in fact oration, from which he read, not trusting to memory for anything. At first there was much adverse comment upon this as being a decadence in oratory and eloquence. The great lawyer knew what he was doing, and that the jury before him in the case was but a small part of the great jury of the world, and it was to the latter he was making his great speech in defense, and committed it all to writing that there could be no possible mistake or misconception of what he said and intended to say. Such efforts are no decadence in eloquence or oratory.

A Louisiana court has followed the rulings of our Supreme Court, and set aside the verdict of a jury in a murder case, because the jury were allowed the indiscriminate use of intoxicating liquors during its deliberations. This seems to be the line of action in many States. The courts hold that men under the influence of intoxicants are not in a condition to render a proper verdict.

The word "taboo" has always been misunderstood. Usually when we use the term it is for the purpose of ostracizing the particular object under consideration. Thus as we say we will "taboo" a certain article or person, meaning that we will exclude it or him from our consideration. The word is borrowed from the Polynesian islanders, and means sacred, inviolable, holy. When we declare a thing or person "tabooed," we therefore mean to shield it or him from what is profane, and to dedicate the same to sacred or holy purposes. It is not uncommon to hear the expression, "we will 'taboo' a certain person or thing," meaning to convey the idea, that we will simply cast them from our minds and thoughts. The converse of the proposition is the true one, for we are actually saying, "we will make them sacred and holy." There are many words in our language that we use which express the exact opposite of what is intended.

The disastrous hurricane at Apia, on the 16th inst., involving the destruction of three American and three German war vessels, besides sixteen merchantmen, will probably put a damper on the Samoan troubles.

SHAKESPEARE-BACON.

Recent Skeptical Literature—Donnelly's Cipher a Failure—Shakespeare is Shakespeare for all Time.

[Written for THEMIS by B. Collins, of Chico, Cal.]

PART II.

Elizabeth died in 1603, when James ascended the throne. Bacon was on the most intimate terms with the new ruler, for James knighted him, in fact, before he was crowned. Why should this illustrious and now powerful lord, pinnacled in fame, be now afraid to acknowledge publicly the offspring of his tragic muse, begotten in privacy. Why be afraid to rush sweating hot from the press with his "quartos" or "folios," when the King himself was proud to lash a sprained Pegasus throughout his realm? If the King could publish his "Essay of a Prentice in the Divine Art of Poesy" without interfering with those duties due from him to the state, would he have thought his newly-made knight less a "lawyer" or counselor, or less devoted to him, if he had made it known that he also was a devotee of the "divine art?" No; it would only have linked them more closely together, cheek by jowl, a fellow-feeling making them wondrous kind.

What a splendid opportunity was here presented to Bacon to disclose his connection with the plays. Here was a chance at last, a blessed opportunity to proclaim his authorship, to be relieved from a dependence upon a hidden cipher, which was but the doubtful, dusky way through which he hoped to reach immortality. Now was the time to blot the name of Shakespeare from their title page and imprint thereon his own. He did not do it. There was absolutely nothing to prevent it. His neglect to do so has not been accounted for. Why refuse to declare himself the author when his fellow poet, the King, had conferred honors upon him, and when he was in a position to wholly disregard carping critics and malevolent detractors. Is it not strange that he should still prefer that the truth as to the authorship of the plays should remain involved in darkness; and, being "conscious of their value," should be content that the fame and imperishable laurels they would add to his name should rest dependent upon the uncertain unraveling of a riddle? Why longer leave this wondrous fact to slumber in enigma, scarcely daring to hope it would ever reach the light? We have heretofore explained why Shakespeare did not dispose of the plays by his will—being sold, they were not his to thus dispose of. Can any explanation more plausibly be given why Bacon did not? Why did not Bacon dispose of them by "will?" He knew that his will would not meet the gaze of any one until after he had been laid in "cold obstruction," where adverse criticism could not pierce the ear, and when the hope of "preferment" would be swallowed up in death.

There was no necessity for keeping the name of Bacon a secret if he was the author of the plays. The reasons given for it are insufficient, and must therefore be rejected. The facts above set forth are sufficient of themselves to show that he was not the author, though there are others still more potent. A man so wise as Bacon, holding the influence and power he did, being such a veritable "Hotspur" in the pursuit of worldly distinction, so ambitious for literary eminence, and knowing that his Queen and patron was delighted, entranced, with the magical creations his mind so well conceived and his pen so deftly drew, he would not have hesitated to declare to the world that the plays which drew such admiring and applauding crowds were the emanations of his genius. He would have flung away all ambition for place, and most likely "hung up philosophy" besides, in preference to having the fact sunk in the dark gulf of concealment.

The author of the "great cipher" is the possessor of an exuberant fancy, which, like space, seems to be illimitable. It being his own, he scruples not on occasion to use it. From it he evolves conditions, facts, premises, conclusions and proofs, and parades them as real, existent, though they are no better supported than the "baseless fabric of a vision." Here is a sample:

He (Bacon), however, was forced to write for the stage to increase his scanty income, and it is an exceedingly curious fact that all the plays were produced during the struggling period of Bacon's life, before the time when he was 40. As soon as Bacon obtained office and his necessities ceased, the plays stopped, though Shakespeare, still in the prime of life, lived at Stratford ten years longer.

There is extant no reliable evidence that Bacon was ever in want, or was the victim of a "scanty income," or was "forced," through necessity, "to write for the stage." And are we to conclude from this that he did not write the plays through choice, from any impulse of nature or taste for the business, but through a want of money only, and that they would never have been written had he been supplied with sufficient means to provide for his necessities? The truth is, Bacon was in office and in receipt of remunerative fees from an extensive law practice before he ceased to write as above stated at 40 (?). There are strong reasons for believing from biographical sketches, as the following will show, that he was not troubled like Falstaff with a "consumption of the purse," and that his coffers, like King Henry IV's, did not sound—

"With hollow poverty and emptiness."

Nicholas Bacon, father of Francis Bacon, was a lawyer and a statesman; was appointed solicitor to the court of argumentations in 1537, when 27 years old, and held the place for nine years. In 1546 was given the office of attorney to the court of wards, and held it for seven years. In 1558 was appointed lord keeper of the great seal by Elizabeth, and held the office about twenty years, until his death in 1579.

Francis Bacon, son of Nicholas, was born January 22, 1561. When 12 years old was sent to the University of Cambridge. After quitting Cambridge went to France, but returned in 1579, in consequence of his father's death. In 1582, when 21, was admitted to the bar; in 1589, when 28, became a member of Parliament; in 1590 was made counselor extraordinary to the Queen—a high distinction for one so young. In 1594, when he failed as a candidate for the office of solicitor-general, the Earl of Essex made him a present of an estate, near Twickenham, worth £2,000, a sum which was then equivalent to about $50,000 of our present money. He was in office until the accession of James, 1603, when official honors fell thick and fast upon him. We find from the above facts that Nicholas Bacon was in office about thirty-six years, and conclude that he must have left an estate sufficient to meet the necessities of his family for some considerable time after his death. The court of wards, to which Nicholas Bacon was promoted, was one of both profit and honor, and if resistance to temptation was not an ever present, ruling virtue in the possessor, very rich returns for official services were to be had. Hugh Audley, an admirable lawyer, a practical philosopher and noted usurer (perhaps, therefore, not a dramatist) "purchased his office at that remarkable institution, at the court of wards," and held it throughout the reign of James. When asked the value of this new office, he said that, "It might be worth some thousands of pounds to him, who, after his death, would instantly go to heaven; twice as much to him who would go to purgatory, and nobody knows what to him who would adventure to go to hell."

It will be seen from the preceding citation of date that the first official position that Francis Bacon held was in 1589, when he became a member of Parliament. From 1579 to 1582 he studied law, and since no plays were written for the stage between these dates, under the nom de plume of "Shakespeare," Bacon must have supplied his necessities from some other source, by other means than play-writing. If, however, he then wrote anything available for stage purposes there could not have existed, at that early period of his life, any reason for not publicly acknowledging its paternity. From the time he was admitted to the bar until 1589, there was no play presented to the public purporting to have been written by William Shakespeare. At that time there were three published: Love's Labors Lost, The Comedy of Errors and Love's Labors Won, an early form of All's Well that Ends Well. From 1582 to this time, 1589, seven years of Bacon's "struggling period," he must therefore have got on either by what he received from his father's estate or by an income from his professional practice; or by both. It is the more consistent to think this than to conjecture that he was a dramatist in disguise contending against adversity. The Queen could not have forgotten the arduous services and faithful counsels of his father, and would be strongly inclined to facilitate the advancement of one in whom, in his youth, she took great interest, and was in the habit of calling her "young lord keeper." In any event, when he was made counselor extraordinary, in 1590, there could no longer have existed a "forced necessity to write for the stage." In 1593, "Venus and Adonis" was first published, and if written by Bacon he received the one thousand pounds given by the Earl of Southampton, to whom it was dedicated, and this handsome gift would have ended his necessities. In 1594, the Stationer's Register shows that it was republished, and he must have received quite a return from the sales; and this, taking in connection with what he received from Essex, the same year, the income from his practice and his official salary, with what might have remained of his father's estate, he could not, at this time, have been in want, unless he wanted the earth, or that his necessities were as vast as the stomach of Polyphemus was insatiable. Still Bacon wrote on until 1601, when he arrived at 40, at which time the stream of emolument became so turbulent and swollen that the grim specter vanished—"dissolved into thin air."

Recurring to the last quotation it will be seen that the author of the "cipher" says:

It is an exceedingly curious fact that all the plays were produced during the struggling period of Bacon's life, before the time he was 40.

This is a mistake on the part of the author, through inadvertence or otherwise, or he has designedly made the assertion in order to shore up his theory. If all the plays were written before Bacon was 40, they were then written before 1601. It has been shown by the best critics who lived at the time the plays were written, and substantiated by those who have come after, that, judging from external and internal evidence, nineteen of the thirty-seven plays were produced after Bacon was 40, as follows: The Taming of the Shrew, 1601; Pericles, 1602; Hamlet, 1602-3; The Merry Wives of Windsor, 1903; Measure for Measure, 1603-4; All's Well that Ends Well, 1604; King Lear, 1605; Timon of Athens, 1605-7; Macbeth, 1605; Julius Caesar, Antony and Cleopatra, and Troilus and Cressida, 1606-8; Cymbeline, Coriolanus, and Othello, 1609-VIII; Winter's Tale and the Tempest, 1611; Henry VIII, 1611-13. Including Venus and Adonis, and the Rape of Lucrece, there were produced eighteen plays and two poems within twelve years, beginning in 1589, the date of the first published play, and ending when Bacon was 40. We are assured, however, by Mr. Donnelly that the entire thirty-seven were composed during this period.

If Shakespeare wrote them he was engaged, aside from his other duties, in business affairs, from 1589 to 1613, a period of twenty-four years. Within the twelve years occupied by Bacon in their composition, if he wrote them, he also furnished the one hundred and fifty-four sonnets, the "Passionate Pilgrim," his essays, perhaps his work "Of the State of Europe," and sketching his great work the "Instauration of the Sciences." In addition thereto his professional and official duties required his attention. All these labors required a vast amount of reading, research and patient investigation. No intellect, however strong, sagacious, comprehensive; however well stored with ancient and modern learning; however eminent and advanced in the arts, the sciences and literature; however gifted, could have mastered, accomplished so much in a time so limited. Though "myriad minded" much laborious thought and close attention would be required to examine the varied subjects in detail. The old and the new would require comparison, and where they clashed demonstration would be necessary. A weary round of manual labor would be indispensable, with but scant relief from "tired nature's sweet restorer." Historic, philosophical, scientific, poetic and literary works of every character, volume after volume would have to be examined and reexamined. In the composition of any work of any importance, a diverse field of facts must be explored, embracing everything that may shed a ray of light upon the subject. Notes must be made with comments and references; then the first, rough sketch; then the review with infinite erasures and additions; and then the work of elaboration must be begun, and step by step carefully and cautiously continued until the finish; and even then a final review must be had before it leaves the weary hand of the writer. 'Tis folly to claim that a single individual could have accomplished so much, giving largely of his time to state affairs, as well as to professional and private duties. Bacon himself says he transcribed his De Augmentis twelve different times. Donnelly says:

As soon as his (Bacon's) necessities ceased, the plays stopped, though Shakespeare, still in the prime of life, lived at Stratford ten years longer.

This assertion cannot be reconciled with the statement that the plays were all written before Bacon was 40. If Shakespeare lived at Stratford only ten years longer, then he died in 1611. The records at Stratford and his monument show that he died in 1616. If Shakespeare was really at Stratford for ten years after the "necessities ceased," Bacon must have been 46, instead of 40. Probably it was intended to be said that Shakespeare did not go to Stratford until ten years after Bacon was 40; if so, that would have been about true, but it would be a statement of a mere fact, without point or applicability. It is claimed that the author of the plays

"Had read, in the original, all the chief authors of Greece and Rome. * * * That he was as familiar with the philosophic writings of the ancient world as with the romances of France and Italy."

Book Chat.

"The Witness of the Sun," Amelie Rives-Chanler's latest novel, is before the reading public. The sensation created by "The Quick or the Dead" will add to the desire to read the last production, from pure curiosity. It matters little what adverse criticism there may be, and not even if "The Witness of the Sun" is absolutely without merit or a violation of all the conventionalities of society—immoral, sensual and lewd—still the morbid impulse for something new or sensational will obtain, and the book read by all classes, from the simpering boarding-school Miss to the solemn curate. Should the book be as unclean as that flash literature that floods our news stalls, and which is corrupting our youth of both sexes, still it would be found in the society parlor and cloister, as well as in the gilded palace of infamy.

We believe great and beneficial lessons are and can be taught through the medium of fiction, and that the novel can clothe events otherwise prosy in flesh and blood, so as to amuse and instruct. We have read "The Witness of the Sun," and are not disappointed. Judging from its predecessor, it is what could have been expected—unreal, pointless, sensual. While pretending to be pure in thought and scene, it leaves only conclusions of sensuality to be drawn by the reader. "Spirit love;" "Ghosts of kisses;" "Multiply his love by every snowflake that has fallen in Russia and it will not equal his;" "Married love is like champagne with the sparkles out;" are some of the author's coined expressions.

The plot is laid around four characters, Vladimir Nadrovine, a young Russian author, who wrote a book for which he was banished by the Czar; Madame Nadrovine, his mother; Ilva Demarini, a beautiful Italian girl, and her father. Vladimir meets Ilva when she is but 10 years old. She is phrenomically precocious, and gives expression to such sentiments as "Married love is like champagne with the sparkles out," "Some Greek gods are very ugly; there is one in the Vatican with a broken nose that is quite hideous," and she reads Ariostos poems. (This child must have been one of those the compilers of our State series of school grammars had in mind when they gave the public that remarkable production we referred to in our last issue). Vladimir is deeply impressed with the beautiful and precocious child. Seven years intervene, when they again meet. She has developed into a winsome woman, and is pictured as an angel of beauty and goodness.

Vladimir is deeply in love with her and she with him. He coins an endearing name, Doushka, for her. While he is represented as all that is pure and noble in man and she an angel of propriety, their rapturous love scenes are suggestive of the greatest sensuality. He places a magnificent sapphire ring upon her finger, which bears the inscription, Eslo sol testis, which translated is, "The Witness of the Sun," and which forms the title of the story. This unalloyed happiness and love continues for a brief time. At this point Madame Vladimir makes the discovery of her son's love, through the medium of Lotta, another extremely precocious child, and resolves to separate the lovers for some motive that does not appear in the story, but is suggested by the intimacy between Madame Nadrovine and Count Demarini, Ilva's father. In fact the only deduction is that there was a criminal intimacy between them. The Count visits Madame Nadrovine.

While Ilva's father and Madame Nadrovine were closeted together, Vladimir and Ilva were having a most rapturous love scene, which can leave only one conclusion upon the reader's mind. This is some of the description: He says, "Will you give me your lips as a sign that you have given me your heart?" She did not answer him, but neither did she attempt to draw away. He felt the slight, quivering arms press him a little closer, and then he bent his face upon hers. She sank down weeping from that controlled yet masterful caress, the tears of a young girl who feels that she has given her past and future irrevocably into the hands of another, and who knows that she can never be entirely her own again in this world or in any world above. "I— I love you more than ever. But there is something gone. Something that cannot be the same. We can never live over the last half hour again. Oh, how awkwardly I say it! I feel the same, yet different. It is like these roses in my belt. They are roses, but their stems have been broken; they have been gathered." With this scene they part.

Vladimir goes to his home with the purpose of telling his mother of his love, and quietly approaches her apartments. Here he makes a discovery, having surprised his mother in a compromising position with Count Demarini. She explains that her apparent liaison was to so enrage her son that he would challenge to mortal combat and kill the Count. She having devolved that plan to sever the affections between he and Ilva. Vladimir becomes frantic at this, and immediately challenges and kills Demarini. He forsakes mother, Ilva and the world, becomes a monk, and of an order that holds no converse with womankind. His mother tries to avert this resolve but to no purpose. She contracts a contagious fever by design, hoping to have Vladimir come to her and break his religious vows, but without accomplishing her purpose he leaves her to die.

Shortly after he has taken these vows and become a member of this religious order, he is detailed upon a sick call. He meets Ilva and his fortune is put to a crucial test. She appeals to his love, his manhood, his honor, his duty to her as more sacred than his religious vows. He knows he has wronged her and he wavers. Just then little Lotta is caught by the quicksands on the beach and is about to perish, when Vladimir rushes to her rescue, throws her to a safe distance, but he is himself drawn under by the treacherous sands. Ilva sees this and rushes to him, and enclasped in each other's arms are swept under by the approaching tide. "The sun had been the witness." Thus runs the story. You close the book with the thought, Is this all? There is not the semblance of a moral lesson. The only impression that can possibly remain is that of the frailty of character—of virtue when beset by rapturous love. In some communities there are men who are ambitious of being considered "bad." Mrs. Chanler's books, without being very bad, bear the impress of the desire to be considered "bad" just for the sake of sensation.

Professional Chat.

In the early days in Plumas county, a man was arrested for murder, tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged. The case was taken to the Supreme Court on appeal. Pending the appeal the District Court convened in another county. Finally the upper court rendered a decision affirming the judgment, and directing that the defendant be resentence to death. In those days the Sacramento Union was about the only paper that circulated in that then remote county, and whatever appeared in its columns was taken as being a fact beyond doubt. The issue containing the Supreme Court decision arrived at the county seat; the Sheriff read it and concluded that the case had been finally settled. Walking into the jail with the paper he addressed the prisoner with, "Well, the Supreme Court has affirmed the judgment in your case; it's printed in the Sacramento Union." "Is it?" asked the condemned. "That's rough, but I guess I'll have to stand it." "Well," said the Sheriff, "when will it be convenient for you to be hung? You have been in here a good while on expense to the county, and the sooner the thing is over the better." "There is no use being in a hurry," said the prisoner; "give a fellow a chance to get ready." "How will the first of next week suit you?" asked the officer. "Oh, what's the use of all that hurry; call it the last of the week." "Well, we will split the difference and call it Wednesday afternoon," said the Sheriff. This was acquiesced in by the party more directly interested, and at the appointed time he was taken out and hanged. At the opening of the District Court in the county the following term, Judge R. H. Taylor, who was then on the bench, inquired from the clerk if the remittitur had been received in the case from the upper court, and being advised in the affirmative, said, "Mr. Sheriff, bring up the defendant for resentence." He was surprised when the Sheriff innocently informed him that the law had been fully satisfied, and that the criminal had been sent beyond the reach of the courts of earth. That was probably the first instance where a newspaper innocently caused the hanging of a man.

Several years ago during a session of the Supreme Court in San Francisco, Judge McKinstry was as usual in his place upon the bench. The Judge was also the owner of some ranch property in the charge of a foreman. It occurred that his agent came into the city for the purpose of delivering to the Judge a large amount of money, we think $1,000, which he had collected. The agent sat down in the court-room to await an opportunity to speak to the Judge. The Judge noticed his agent sitting in the room, and the spirit of mischief, which was largely developed in the good-natured Judge, seized upon him, and he quietly called the bailiff and told him to tell his agent to advance to the bench and communicate what he desired. The agent came forward, the proceedings of the court not having been disturbed, whereupon he took the sack containing the $1,000 from his agent, at the same time saying in an audible whisper, "Which side did you say; the plaintiff or defendant?" The members of the bar and Judges on the bench at once saw the joke, which was the signal for a hearty laugh. The poor agent retiring in confusion at his purposely-misunderstood position.

Rather a serious joke was played on the bailiff of a district court in one of the northern counties a few years ago. The Judge was a gentleman of great dignity; the bailiff was a green granger, who never having had any previous court experience, was easily imposed upon. At the time for the opening of court the Judge did not appear, and after the lapse of some ten minutes one of the lawyers suggested that the bailiff call the Judge at the door. He did so. In a few minutes his honor appeared, angry and dignified. Taking his seat on the bench he inquired, "What person shouted out my name in the corridor a few minutes ago?" The bailiff meekly admitted that he had done the shouting, and the Judge sharply notified him that if he again used his lungs in that way he would be sent to jail.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Sol Smith Russell is alone on the stage in his peculiar line. His dry humor and witty sayings are almost epidemic with the audience. A Poor Relation was presented for his first night to a good house. It is a framework around the star, there being, with the exception of "Scollops" and "Dolly," little for the other members of the company to do. Miss Osburn as "Scollops" is a soubrette of marked ability, and one who promises to brighten the dramatic firmament as a star. The little "tots" were a source of much amusement for the auditors. Bewitched was given on the second appearance, and was greeted with a good house. Bewitched has some funny situations, which are made funny only through the humor of Mr. Russell. The idea upon which this play is based is similar to that of Little Puck, and is the humorous side of occultism or superstition. This belief is utilized to cause hilarity and ridiculous situations from an application of the magic power. The most perfect of this line of plays is The Palace of Truth, which, a number of years ago, was presented here.

The closing concert of the Artillery Band was given Monday night to a very large and delighted audience. The singing of Mrs. Marriener, the harp playing by M. Solano, the cornet solo by Mr. Eilerman, and the handling of the baton by Joseph D. Redding were excellent. Wm. R. Orsmy was the recipient of a gold-headed cane from the band, as a token of appreciation for his management of the concerts. We trust that another season of these concerts may be given.

Our singers and musicians should devote themselves to melody; not that difficult strain that is demanded by your so-called classic music. Orpheus drew melody from a sea shell and charmed the devil. The public is Mephistopholic inclined and exacts melody.

It is said that concerts for the benefit of homeless dogs are given in London. Some dogs are almost human in their intelligence, and are the truest friends of mankind. Why should not a homeless dog receive attention?

Alexander Dumas père was apt to be boastful at times. Thus he once observed at an evening party: "I always keep a hundred louis d'or at the disposal of my friends." The very next morning a "good friend" called to borrow these hundred pieces of gold, but Dumas, who was not to be caught napping, answered with a smile: "Ah, my dear fellow, you didn't quite understand. To be sure, I always keep a hundred louis at my disposal for my friends, but if I were to lend you the amount they would no longer be at my disposal."

REVISION OF THE ELECTION LAWS.

Important Work by the Legislature—How Ballots will be Counted—A Death-Blow to Bogus Tickets—Miscellaneous Laws.

The late legislature passed some important and excellent laws in regard to the conduct of elections. Our laws upon that vital subject were supposed to be almost perfect when the codes were adopted; there was then brought about something like system out of what had been an almost chaotic state of affairs. The codes wiped out printed curved lines, pasters, narrow margins and flimsy paper, tape-worm tickets, and other devices to deprive the voter of an opportunity to change his ballot, and to identify him as having voted a particular ticket. Time, however, has demonstrated that further safeguards are demanded to check fraud, and guarantee to the citizen his civil rights. The ingenuity of the depraved elements in politics had reduced ballot-box manipulation almost to a fine art, and in very many instances, even in this city, the will of the people had been thwarted by the grossest and most criminal frauds. It is encouraging that the tendency of the legislation of this day is to throw all possible safeguards about the ballot-box, and our legislators have had the benefit of the expressed views on the subject of the ablest thinkers of the country in papers in our leading reviews and magazines. We append a digest of the laws just passed in this state in relation to elections.

The sections of the Political Code relating to the counting of ballots at elections, and ascertaining, recording and returning the results thereof, have been extensively changed. It is provided that after the lists are signed the ballots must be taken from the box, one at a time, opened by a member of the board, and as taken out placed in separate piles, according to their respective headings or vignettes, in the following manner: All scratched ballots of each separate party must be placed in a separate pile; all unscratched ballots of each such party must be placed in a separate pile; and all undesignated ballots must be placed in a separate pile in like manner. Then the number of ballots in each pile must be carefully, correctly and distinctly counted aloud by a member of the board, in the presence of the board and bystanders, whereupon an official record must be made by each clerk of the total number of ballots in each pile, specifying its party designation or that it is undesignated. Then all unscratched ballots must be strung upon one string by a judge, in such manner that all unscratched ballots of each party shall be in direct succession and immediate proximity upon the string; all such unscratched ballots shall then be securely bound together by the string and replaced in the ballot-box. Then, immediately after, each pile of scratched ballots and of undesignated ballots must be separately secured intact by twine, and replaced in the ballot-box. Immediately thereafter, one, and only one, such pile of scratched ballots must be freed from the twine without removal from the box, and the ballots must be taken out, one at a time, by one of the board, and each name erased read aloud, and each clerk must write down each name erased, and keep the number of erasures by tallies opposite each respective name as so read. Immediately after all the erasures shall have been so recorded, the names substituted for such erased names must in like manner be recorded and tallied. The ballots must then be restrung in their order on another string, and thus each scratched ballot in its order, and each pile of scratched ballots in its order, must be freed, canvassed and strung upon the same string in such a manner that all the scratched ballots of each political or other party shall be in direct succession and immediate proximity upon the string. Then the undesignated ballots must be freed from the string without removal from the box, the ballots taken out one by one, read by a member of the board, and each name tallied by the clerks. Each of these ballots shall be strung as soon as read upon the same string with the scratched ballots. All rejected ballots must be strung on the same string. The string must then be securely fastened, and the package replaced in the ballot-box. Then the total number of ballots of each political and other party, the names erased, and the number of erasures of each name, the names substituted and the number of substitutions, the total number of undesignated ballots cast, must be written out plainly by each clerk, and prominently posted in the room and on the front of the building, and a triplicate sent to the office of the county clerk.

In preparing the returns each clerk must write down each office to be filled, the name of each person running, and opposite each name the total number of scratched and of unscratched ballots of each party on whose ballots such name originally was printed; then must write down the number of times such name was erased on the scratched ballots, and then the number of times it was substituted upon the scratched ballots; also the number of times the name appeared on undesignated ballots. Each clerk must then ascertain the net vote of each person from this data by deducting from the total number of scratched and unscratched ballots the number of times the name was scratched, and adding the number of times his name was substituted, and the number of times it appeared on undesignated ballots. Such net result must then be recorded and certified.

The law in relation to vignettes on election ballots has been changed to provide that the vignette or inscription must be filed in the county clerk's office prior to ten days before election day; and there is added to the law:

"And it shall be taken as the intent of any person or elector casting a ballot having such vignette and inscription, or such imitation, copy or counterfeit thereof, to have cast the regular ticket of such party adopting and preparing said regular ticket, and the same shall be counted as the complete regular ticket, except as to the names erased or inserted upon said ticket, if done in writing."

Ballots must hereafter be six inches in width, instead of five, as heretofore.

Heretofore the compensation of election officers and clerks has been fixed by the Supervisors. The new law provides that each such officer and clerk shall receive not to exceed $10 for his services.

When a new Great Register is ordered by the Supervisors the registration shall commence one hundred days before a general election, and shall continue for eighty-five days thence next ensuing, when registration shall cease. The old law closed the registration thirty days before the election; hereafter it will continue to within fifteen days of the election.

The Board of Supervisors shall establish precincts before each general election, and each precinct shall be limited to not more than two hundred votes, as nearly as can be ascertained. No new precinct shall be established at which more than two hundred votes will be cast. The former law placed the limit at three hundred and fifty votes for each precinct. At the last general election, held November 6, 1888, the total vote of Sacramento city was 6024. Taking that vote as a basis we will have at the election next year thirty-one precincts in the city, and some three of the county precincts will have to be cut up. We at present have but fifteen precincts in the city. Of course, as our population increases the number of precincts will be enlarged.

The section providing that the Supervisors shall designate the place or house within the precinct where the election must be held has now this proviso:

"But in no event shall any place be selected for holding an election that is in a saloon or other room or place where vinous, spirituous or malt liquors are sold or dispensed, nor shall any place be selected for such purpose that is connected with a saloon or other room or place where vinous, spirituous or malt liquors are sold or dispensed, by any door, window or other opening."

The Supervisors shall appoint for each precinct of resident tax-payers two inspectors two judges and two clerks, to be selected respectively from the two opposing political parties which cast the greatest number of votes at the next preceding general election. The inspectors and judges shall constitute the election board. The board shall canvass the votes and must be present at the closing of the polls. The members of the board shall relieve each other in the duties of canvassing the ballots, which may be conducted by at least half of the whole number; but the final certificate shall be signed by a majority of the whole. No person shall be eligible to act as an officer of election who has been employed in any official capacity in the county, or city and county, within ninety days next preceding any election. No person shall be eligible to act as a member of any election board, or as a clerk, who cannot read and write the English language. Any person acting as a member of any election board, or as a clerk, who cannot read and write the English language, and any person who refuses to act upon such board, or as a clerk, after proper notification of his appointment, who is otherwise eligible, unless good and sufficient cause for such refusal is shown, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be subjected to a fine of five hundred dollars; and upon failure to pay said fine, shall be imprisoned in the county jail for the period of one day for each dollar of said fine.

Hereafter the polls must be opened at sunrise and kept open until 5 o'clock P. M. Heretofore the polls were opened at 6 o'clock A. M., and closed at 7 o'clock P. M.

It is also provided by the new law that: "A voter who erases a name upon a ballot, and substitutes no name therefor, shall write the words 'No vote' after such name so erased, otherwise the name so erased, if it can be ascertained from an inspection of the ballot, must be counted, and the fact thereof must be noted upon the ballot, and such note must be signed by a majority of the election board."

NEW LAWS.

The following is a digest of some of the more important laws that have been passed by the legislature, changing our penal laws, and effecting material alterations in matters of moment. We have heretofore published a list of the laws appropriating money for the improvement of the public institutions in this county:

The time for the meeting of the presidential electors at the state capitol is changed from the first Wednesday in December to the second Monday in January after their election.

Sections are added to the Penal Code providing that every person who, under promise of marriage, seduces an unmarried female of previous chaste character, is punishable by five years in the State Prison, or not more than $5,000 fine, or by both; but the subsequent intermarriage bars the prosecution, provided such marriage take place prior to the filing of the indictment or information.

Section 532 of the Penal Code, relative to obtaining money or property by false pretenses, is changed so that the offense is punishable in the same manner and to the same extent as for larceny of the money or property so obtained.

A new section is added to the Penal Code, making it a misdemeanor, for any one who fraudulently obtained from any club, association, society or stock improvement company, a certificate of registration of any animal in the Herd Register. To give a false pedigree of any animal is also made a misdemeanor.

Another new section is added to the Penal Code, making it a misdemeanor for anyone to obtain food or accommodations at an inn or boarding-house without paying therefor, intending to defraud; or to obtain credit for food and accommodations, or to abscond and surreptitiously remove baggage without paying the bill.

The 9th of September is made a legal holiday and non-judicial day.

Five hundred dollars are appropriated to remove obstructions in the American river at Salmon Falls, so as to allow the free passage of fish up the river and its tributaries.

A new section is added to the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that, after one year from the issuance of letters on an estate, any heir, devisee or legatee, after certain proceedings, may receive his share of the net proceeds of the estate. It means, in brief, that beneficiaries of estates may get a portion of their shares without having to wait until the final closing up of the administration.

Provision has been made for the establishment of an Industrial School for boy criminals near Lone city. The institution will be under the supervision of the State Prison Directors.

Authority is given to the board of supervisors, or other governing authorities of cities and towns in which fire departments exist, to provide a fund by general tax for the relief of aged, infirm or disabled firemen, provided such disability be caused by injuries received or exposure while in service. No person is entitled to this benefit who has not served in the department at least 15 years, except he is injured in the actual discharge of fire duty.

Provision was made for the establishment of a State Reform School for juvenile offenders in Los Angeles county.

The state and county taxes must hereafter be paid at the court-house, unless the supervisors, by order made before the first Monday in October, direct their collection in the various townships, in which case proper notice must be given.

The law formerly stood that a girl of 10 years of age could consent to rape; the legislature has now changed it to 14 years. This law is designed to reach such cases as that of Domentini, who was convicted in this city recently, and whose defense was that his victim, 12 years of age, had consented. The legislature could with good conscience have made the age still greater.

It is made a misdemeanor for any person who, after receiving notice that a person named in the notice is addicted to the inordinate use of liquor, to, within 12 months after the receipt of such notice, furnish such person any intoxicating drinks. The notice must be in writing, and may be given by any adult member of the family of the person addicted, or by any adult relative. The law does not apply to prescriptions by physicians.

The Weather.

The Signal Service reports for the week ending Saturday March 30th, shows the highest temperature as being 72 degrees on Saturday; the lowest, 49 degrees, on Sunday, Monday and Friday. During the week there has been .01 of an inch of precipitation. The weather during the past seven days has been one of perpetual spring and eternal sunshine, and at the same time our patriotic brothers east of the Rocky Mountains are suffering with the chillblains, frosted feet, and other concomitants of a variable climate.

The remains of Major W. H. Holmes will be buried with military honors at San Francisco to-day.

TERRIFIC HURRICANE.

Destruction of the American and German War Fleet at Samoa—Appalling Loss of Life.

The following dispatches from Auckland, from Admiral Kimberley to the Secretary of the Navy, were received at Washington yesterday morning:

There was a hurricane at Apia on March 16th. Every vessel in the harbor is on the shore, except the English man-of-war Caliope, which got to sea. The Trenton and Vandalia are total losses. The Nipsic is beached. Her rudder is gone and she may be towed, but the chances are against it. Will send her to Auckland, if possible. The Vandalia lost four officers and thirty-nine men, among them Captain Cornelius M. Schoonmaker, her commander. The Nipsic lost seven men. All saved from the Trenton and Vandalia crews are here on board the Nipsic. All the stores possible were saved. The German ships Adler and Olga are total losses. The Olga was beached and may be saved. The German losses were 96. It is important to send three hundred men home at once. Shall I charter a steamer? Can charter in Auckland. Lieutenant Wilson will remain in Auckland to obey your orders. Fuller accounts by mail.

The following dispatches were received from Washington yesterday:

It is the opinion of Admiral Harmony, who is familiar with the Samoan Islands, that the English man-of-war owed her escape to the fact that she had steam up and was enabled to push out to sea. The number of vessels lying in the small harbor was a source of danger to them individually, for if one dragged anchors she would probably collide with and carry away another ship which might otherwise hold securely. The news of the disaster created a profound sensation at the navy department. Everybody, from the Secretary down, freely expressed regret. Secretary Tracy could not see cause to condemn any one. The officers in command of the vessels are competent men, and doubtless adopted all the proper precautions against the disaster, but these hurricanes, which assume cyclonic proportions, are simply irresistible, as was proved by the extent of the loss of vessels.

The following dispatch has been sent by the Secretary of the Navy to Lieutenant Wilson for Admiral Kimberley, care of the American Consul at Auckland:

Take such steps with regard to the Nipsic and the wrecks, and sending the men home, as you may deem proper. Full power is given you. The Monongahela sailed for Apia February 21st.

Lucky Sacramento County.

The Supreme Court handed down a decision yesterday reversing the judgment of the lower court, which decided for Byam in the case of Byam vs. Cashman et al. The case, which is somewhat complicated, is substantially as follows: In 1885 Cashman et al. brought suit in the United States Circuit Court praying for an injunction restraining Byam from committing certain acts, and filed a bond of $10,000 to secure Byam from loss in case the temporary injunction, if granted, should not be made permanent. When the case came up for a preliminary hearing Judge Sawyer dismissed it for want of jurisdiction. Byam then attempted to recover damages under the bond, and the Superior Court held he was entitled to them, a judgment which the Supreme Court declares is not equitable, as the temporary injunction was never issued, and hence remands the case for a new trial in accordance with these views.—S. F. Call.

This case was tried in the Superior Court of this county. H. S. Byam had leased a hydraulic mine at Michigan Bar, and was enjoined in a suit brought in the name of George Cashman, but the county of Sacramento was the real party plaintiff, and on that ground the Cashman case was lost in the United States Supreme Court. Byam then sued Cashman and his bondsmen on the temporary injunction bond, and recovered $1,000 damages and $247 costs—practically against this county. It is this judgment that is now reversed. As we understand the matter this practically ends the case, and Sacramento county escapes the payment of $1,247 and Supreme Court costs.

Georgie Woodthorpe Company.

Next week that sterling little actress, with a fine company, will play at the Chumie Opera House with a change of piece each evening. Her plays will be: Monday, "Two Orphans;" Tuesday, "M'liss;" Wednesday, "May Blossom;" Thursday, "Little Detective;" Friday, "Among the Pines;" Saturday, matinee, "Fanchou;" in the evening, "Golden Giant." In the latter Willie Deal, the son of Captain Samuel Deal, will assume the role of "Jack Mason," a leading character of the play. F. A. Cooper is manager of the company.

STOCKTON VICTORIOUS.

Sacramento's Base Ball Team Defeated—
But an Interesting Contest.

A very large gathering witnessed the first league game in Stockton, yesterday afternoon, and were well pleased with the excellent playing. A number of Sacramentoans accompanied their team to the Slough City, and, though largely in the minority, they made what little effort they could to cheer the boys in their desperate efforts to win. The Stocktonians evidently had saved up a little lung-power from the enormous supply which they carried to San Francisco with them last Sunday but were not called upon to use, for they yelled loud and long over the many brilliant plays of their club.

At precisely 2 o'clock the Sacramento club entered the diamond and commenced their warming-up exercise. Their manly appearance and gentlemanly manners brought forth a stirring cheer from the crowded grand stand. After practicing fifteen minutes the gong sounded and the Stocktons appeared in their gaudy colored uniforms, and were also greeted with cheers. At 2:30 o'clock Umpire Sheridan called game. Captain Behan, of the Stocktons, having the choice, took the first inning. Hen Moore was the first batter up, and knocked the ball to first base. In this inning Hapeman proved how closely he could watch the pilfering base runners of the Slough City nine. Behan was given his base on balls, and stole to second; then came Stickney's turn, and he was allowed a base on balls. Young Hapeman, who seemed to take no interest whatever in the base runners, turned toward second as if to throw the ball to that base, when, by a clever movement, he reeled and threw to first, catching the runner napping, and, with the assistance of Krehmeyer and McSorley, making a neat double play. No runs were scored in the first inning, but in the second, after two men were out and a runner on third, McSorley erred on a ground hit which came to him, and the Stocktonian reached the plate safely.

Nothing further of interest occurred until the eighth inning, when Howard made a terrific line drive far into the right field. Sylvester, after an exceedingly long run, was there, and captured a most difficult fly. This catch brought forth cheer upon cheer from the spectators. It was acknowledged by numerous base ball enthusiasts to be the most wonderful catch they had ever witnessed.

For the Sacramentos, O'Day at second and Newbert at shortstop played excellent ball; but the honors of the day belong to Hapeman and McLaughlin for their great battery work. Hapeman is certainly a marvelous pitcher for his years. They are all ball players, and will be acknowledged as such by public and players before the season is far advanced.

For the Stocktons, Sweeney accepted all of his fourteen chances, and Moore, Howard, Selna, Baker and Fairhurst were as near perfect as could be. It is most certainly a very strong nine, and will prevent any of its opponents from having a walk-over for the pennant.

Following is the score:

BASE BALL NOTES.

At San Francisco, yesterday, the Oaklanders were defeated by the San Franciscos, by a score of 7 to 5.

Krehmeyer, our big and genial first baseman, says he will never be happy until he gets a base hit every time he comes to bat.

The Sacramentos will try conclusions to-day with the Oaklanders at the Haight-street grounds, San Francisco.

Sam. P. Jones lectured last evening to a full house at the Congregational Church, for the benefit of the improvement fund of the Seventh-street M. E. Church. His services were donated. His subject was "Character and Characters." Mr. Jones starts East by way of Los Angeles to-morrow.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The spring races, under the auspices of the Capital Turf Club, will commence on the 6th of May and conclude on the 10th.

It is now stated that the transfer steamer Solano will not be laid off for repairs, but that the needed repairs will be made to her during transit.

Jesse Titus, one of the clerks at the Golden Eagle Hotel, has resigned his place to accept a responsible position tendered him by the State Board of Harbor Commissioners.

A. J. Rhoads, who was recently suddenly prostrated by an attack of rheumatism, is rapidly recovering, and if his improvement continues will be on the streets in a few days.

John Miller, who succeeds Fritz & Miller, in the undertaking business in Odd Fellows' building, will be found the most satisfactory man to deal with, for as a funeral director he is unexcelled.

It is anticipated that the question of the validity of the laws under which the late city election was held will be raised in the Superior Court in the case of C. H. Eldred. A. L. Hart represents the defense.

Just before quitting work on the new wharf at the foot of K street last evening, the pile-driving hammer slipped, became detached and fell into the river. It may cause some delay in the work before it is recovered.

The funeral of Alfred, youngest son of Henry and Hannah Stribble, will take place from his parents' residence, H street, between Eleventh and Twelfth, to-day, at 2 o'clock; thence to new Catholic Church, where funeral services will be held.

The first coursing match of the season will take place on the Whitcomb ranch to-day. The hares are said to be numerous and strong. A number of excellent hounds have been entered in the contests, and each race will be from start to finish. The match will be under the direction of the Alta Coursing Club, a local organization.

It is seldom that a member of the California legislature is known to return to the State moneys he has received from the government and not entitled thereto. Such a case has come to light in the person of Philo Hersey, a member of the Assembly from the county of Santa Clara who, on March 16th, paid into the State Treasury $4, excess of mileage received for a trip to Agnew's station.

A motion was made before Judge Armstrong yesterday morning in behalf of L. N. Billings, indicted for the murder of young Lighthall, for admission to bail. Mr. Johnson relied on the testimony given before the Coroner's jury. The Court held that in cases of murder, after indictment or holding, the matter of the admission to bail could only be reached by habeas corpus. Such a writ will be issued, returnable Tuesday next, at 10 A. M.

The last legislature passed a law authorizing the Supervisors to appoint some competent person to properly inter indigent soldiers of the rebellion, at a cost of not to exceed $50 per interment. There will be a lively fight over this appointment before the Board in this county. J. W. Reeves, the Commander of Summer Post, G. A. R., is understood to have received the endorsement of the members of the Grand Army generally. John Miller relies on the Democratic complexion of the Board of Supervisors, and it is understood that he has a strong pull.

Charles C. Goode, a well known printer of this city, died at New England Mills on the 28th instant, at the early age of 33 years. He had been in business here for several years, a member of the firm of Goode Bros., printers; and at one time was an editor and publisher of the Snuday Capital. He stood high in this community as a man of integrity, and his circle of friends was large. His funeral will take place from the residence of his brother, James L. Goode, No. 1131, north-west corner Twelfth and E streets, this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The officers and members of Sacramento Typographical Union No. 46, will meet at Fireman's hall, at 2:30 o'clock to-day, to attend the funeral. Honorary members of the Union are especially invited to attend.

The New and the Old.

The Restaurant de France, under the management of Lonis Payen, has been a household word for many years. On Monday next the old proprietor will turn the business over to Adolph Becker and Lucien Faure. Mr. Payen and the Madame have earned their good name, and Adolph has been so long one of the chief assistants that there can be no doubt of future success under the new proprietors. All the patrons of the famous resort of epicurians will remember the accommodating Adolph, who seemed to study the wants of the customers, and in the future when he and his partner become its landlords, will remember him and bestow a generous patronage upon them. Mr. Faure is known as a cook of the highest order. The reputation which the restaurant has earned in its twelve years' existence in this city, will doubtless be sustained by the new management.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

The Grand Parlor N. S. G. W. will convene at San Rafael April 15th.

The nomination of Murat Halstead to be Minister to Germany has again been rejected by the Senate—25 to 19.

The announcement is made that the decision in the Chae Chang Ping case will not probably be made much before the 1st of May.

J. Matt Aubrey, who recently eloped from Chicago with the daughter of Chief Justice Fuller, is a cousin of Frank Aubrey of Marysville.

The United States Senate yesterday confirmed the nomination of Hon. L. B. Mizner, of Benicia, Minister to the Central American States.

Major Reno died yesterday at Washington from the effects of a surgical operation. It will be remembered that there was some severe criticism of this officer at the time of the massacre of General Custer and his command.

The Supreme Court has decided that a communication from a husband to a wife, not in the presence of any other person, does not constitute a publication within the meaning of the law of slander. Judge McFarland rendered the opinion of the Court.

President Harrison yesterday appointed Hon. M. M. Estee, of Napa, one of the ten delegates to the conference between the United States and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo and the Empire of Brazil, to be held in Washington in 1889.

The annual joint meeting of the trustees of the State Normal Schools at Chico, San Jose and Los Angeles will be held at Chico on April 9th, for the purpose of mapping out a course of study to be pursued at the three schools. The trustees of the Chico Normal School have appointed Professor E. I. Peirce, of Pasadena, principal of the school.

A new building has recently been constructed as a portion of the railroad works, opposite the depot and in the rear of the boiler shop, in which will be located the spring manufacturing department and the brass foundry. The old quarters of the spring department will be added to the blacksmithing department, and it is probable that the old brass foundry will be merged in the copper shop.

It seems almost like "carrying coals to Newcastle" to take wheat from California to Australia, but that is being done at the present time. Owing to the partial failure of the Australian wheat crop, grain is now being sent from San Francisco there in considerable quantities. The ship "Reaper" sailed for Sydney on Thursday with 41,776 centals wheat, value $64,753, and the British ship "Brynild," 1,409 tons, and the American ship "Gatherer," 1,436 tons, are now at Port Costa loading wheat for the same port.

Election of Policemen.

A meeting of the Board of Police Commissioners was held in the private office of the chief of police, lasting from 8 to 10 o'clock last night. All of the Commissioners were in the room, and the police office was packed with the gentlemen who assume that they control the politics of the city. The contention in the secret meeting of the Commissioners was as to what increase should be made to the force. The majority of the Commissioners favored an increase to twenty-three, but the last tax levy before the passage of the late law would only produce about what would be needed to pay the quota of policemen as it is at present—fifteen. The matter of the number of officers on the new force was not settled, and the Board adjourned to meet at half past one to-morrow. After the adjournment the Commissioners left separately, but not alone—the anxious politicians rather hung on to their coat tails, waiting to know what had been done. The scenes of last night intensifies what we say editorially, that the members of the Board of Police Commissioners should make their selections without the influence of the class of men who forsook their business, if they have any, to attempt to shape the complexion of the police force last night. It will not seriously be said that they were representative of our people. As we intimate, it is for the Commissioners either to surrender to the small politicians of this city or to independently subserve the public good by selecting a police force of honest and capable men.

CHESS DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY L. F. GRIFFIN.

Contributions to this column are cordially solicited. All communications pertaining to chess should be addressed to L. F. Griffin, box 402.

The Sixth American Chess Congress was opened on the 25th instant, in New York City. Experts from all parts of the world gathered to worship at "caissa's shrine." The following was the result of the first round of play:

Taubenhaus, of France, won in seventy moves of McLeod, of Canada. Blackburn, of England, won in twenty-six moves of Major Hanham, of New York. Lipschütter, of New York, won of Pollock, of England, in thirteen moves. Günsburg and Burns, both of England, played a drawn game. Max Weiss, of Germany, defeated Burille, of Boston. D. G. Baird, of New York, defeated Judge Martinez, of Philadelphia. Gossip, of Australia, drew with Mason, of England. Bird, of England, drew with J. W. Baird, of New York. Teligorin, of Russia, and Eugene Delmar, of New York, adjourned their game until next day.

The many prizes in this tourney aggregate more than five thousand dollars. We will give our readers a selection from the best played games as the scores are received.

The Sacramento C. C. and W. Club received a visit from Mr. J. D. Redding, of San Francisco, on the 25th instant. We select for publication the following game, played against Mr. L. F. Griffin:

EVANS GAMBIT.

Redding, white.	Griffin, black.
1—P to K 4	P to K 4
2—S to K B 3	S to Q B 3
3—B to B 4	B to B 4
4—P to Q S 4	B takes P
5—P to Q B 3	B to B 4
6—Castles	P to Q 3
7—P to Q 4	P takes P
8—P takes P	B to Q S 3
9—P to Q 5	S to Q R 4
10—P to K 5, (a)	S to K 2
11—P to K 6	Castles
12—B to Q 3	P takes K P
13—B takes K R P, chk. (b)	K takes B
14—S to K S 5, check	K to K S 1
15—Q to K R 5	R to K B 3, (c)
16—Q to K R 7, check	K to K B 1
17—Q to K R 8, check	S to K S 1
18—S to K R 7, check	K to K B 2
19—S to K S 5, check	K to K B 1

Drawn game.
(a) This is the wrong move; 10—Q B to Q S 2 is proper.

(b) An unsound sacrifice, which should loose the game.

(c) Here black plays badly and allows white to draw the game by perpetual check. 15—R to Q B 4 would have annihilated all of white's chances.

The following moves, in addition to those published last week, have been played in the Redding vs. Committee telegraphic match:

Redding.	Committee.
34—Q to Q B 5	Q to K B 5, check
35—K to K S 1	Q to Q 3
36—Q to K S 5	P takes P
37—P takes P	K to Q S 1

The following neat defense to the knights game of Ruy Lopez was first played in a London tournament, six years ago, by Mortimer, of England. There are many players on the Pacific Coast who are unacquainted with this variation, as the writer can attest from practical knowledge:

White.	Black.
1—P to K 4	P to K 4
2—S to K B 3	S to Q B 3
3—B to Q S 5	S to K B 3
4—P to Q 3	Q S to K 2
5—S takes K P	P to Q B 3
6—B to Q R 4	Q to Q R 4, check
7—S to Q B 3	Q takes K S

And white has a lost game.

The Feminine Desire for Respect.

Every woman is most pleased and most grateful if she inspires in the male contemporaries the sentiment of respect. To any woman love without respect, admiration that cannot stand the light of day, is like salt rubbed into a wound, it hurts more than it helps. She may content herself with it, locking the secret in her own heart and smiling as if she were all gladness, but the sense of humiliation rankles deep. Any friendship or any relation that is not built upon mutual respect cannot last, and the woman knows this. With every woman the desire to be honorably regarded comes first. No woman ever quite loses this ambition, or, if she lose the ambition, no woman ever grew so hardened that she was not touched by any act that denotes a respectful cognizance of herself and her sex. I have seen a very sad and tremulous smile come about painted, wanton lips in a street car because their owner was treated simply and courteously as a woman.—New Orleans Picayune.

A strange accident has befallen a young lady of Cherveux, France. She was playing with a little child on her lap, when she suddenly threw back her head and remained motionless. A hairpin had penetrated her skull. She never recovered consciousness, and expired a short time afterward.—Indianapolis News.

Mademoiselle Directoire.

Sing I the Tosca hat and gown
The nez retroussée, charming frown,
The dainty gloves, correct and chic;
The eyes demure and glancing down,
A sight to set agog the town—
The girl that twirls a walking-stick!

The coat-tails flapping long and wide,
The jaunty waistcoat tucked inside,
And peeping forth the lace mouchoir;
And some may smile and some deride—
I sing with wonder and with pride,
La Demoiselle Directoire!

A picture she, none can dispute,
From stunning hat to little boot,
Enough to move the dead or quick;
Before this vision I am mute—
I yield my homage—I salute
The girl that twirls a walking-stick!
—Edith Sessions Tupper in Life.

Choice of Employments.

The law that governs in the choice of employment is imperative. We may manufacture political economies denying this law, and forbidding it to be taught in our colleges and universities, but the law will operate notwithstanding; just as the law of gravitation will operate in defiance of all legislation to the contrary. Men will flock to those employments they find or deem most profitable, most respectable, and most congenial. Philosophers may prate and poets may sing of the delights of the farm and the independence of the farmer; expatiate on the green fields, the waving corn, the finely foliaged trees, the bracing atmosphere. They may revel in the imaginings of milk, cream, and butter, pure and fine flavored from your own herds, wool from your own flocks, eggs fresh every morning from your own hens, the choicest of lamb at command, and a fatted calf for every returning prodigal; vegetables crisp and nice every morning from your own garden; apples, pears, peaches and plums of the choicest varieties from your own orchard, and all the smaller fruits in richest profusion. You sit under your own vine and fig tree, nothing to fret you nor any one daring to make you afraid. No tax-gatherer, no mortgage, no breachy cattle, no sick horses, no untimely frosts, no persistent droughts, no destructive rains, no rheumatism or other ills that flesh is heir to everywhere else. Of the farmer they say:

He is monarch of all he surveys,
And his right there is none to resist.
He is happy as lambskins at play,
And December is pleasant as May.

Notwithstanding, his boys will crowd into the cities, his girls will teach school, and leave the old folks to the enjoyment of all these blessings solitary and alone.—Milwaukee Journal.

The Democracy of this city and county are happier than their brethren elsewhere. They have a majority both of the Board of Supervisors and City Trustees.

She answered with generous tear;

The old Duke of Wellington used to indulge in an oath, "I don't care a one two penny damn." This was a totally disproportionate oath to his greatness. Judge McFarland's oath is "Damn the world by quarter sections." This is not certainly open to the objection made to Wellington's oath.

Early California Punishments.

It may not be generally known that in the early history of California other crimes than murder were, by statute, made punishable by death, but such is the fact. On the 14th of April, 1852, George Tanner was tried in the Court of Sessions of Yuba county for the crime of grand larceny, in having stolen flour, potatoes, etc., of the value of $400. The verdict of the jury was "Guilty of grand larceny, punishable with death." The defendant appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed the judgment, and the prisoner was executed July 23, 1852. Chief Justice Murray delivered the opinion of the Court, and he evidently did not concur with the principle of the law, for after setting forth the statute, he used the following language:

"It is not our purpose to discuss the policy of this law, although we regret that our legislature has considered it necessary to thus retrograde, and in the face of the wisdom and experience of the present day, resort to a punishment for less crimes than murder, which is alike disgusting and abhorrent to the common sense of every enlightened people."

A monster of mammoth proportions has been unearthed in a sand bank near Livingston, Banner county, Nebraska. The proportions of the jaw may be imagined from the report that two well preserved teeth measured eight inches in length and four in breadth, and weighed seven and one-half pounds. With such equipments the mammoth must have been an eloquent and effective member of prehistoric legislatures. What a valuable acquisition this would have been to our California legislature.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, APRIL 7, 1889.

No. 7.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

While it is universally conceded that secret organizations accomplish much good, yet to the outside world there sometimes appears a smattering of surface garnishment and an apparent display of assumed grandeur that invites adverse criticism from skeptics, and a proportionate respect and admiration from the enthused initiated. Notwithstanding the outward appearance of tinsel, gorgeous parades, significant implements and symbols, there remains the intuitive and stubborn fact that some potent influence causes the members to come together for a purpose that betokens good for themselves and their associates. When we consider the character and personnel of the members of any particular society, we are enabled to form a correct estimate of the purpose of the organization, its main and primary objects and the policy upon which it is maintained. Thus, by the aid of our reasoning faculties and observation of the various surroundings, we realize the benefits of con-fraternal institutions, and appreciate their influence in the communities in which they exist.

The "father" of all—the Masonic order—exemplifies fraternity, secrecy and grandeur in representing the greatness of Solomon, whose wisdom electrified the people of the world; whose nobility of character and of action entitled him to emulation by those who followed him. Other societies have adopted the devotion of Damon and Pythias, the prowess of the nobler Indians, the rugged habits of the Druids, the record of David and Jonathan, etc., as the tenets to instruct and cultivate the minds of the initiates to a proper conception of the duties that men owe to each other as citizens and brothers.

The order of the Native Sons of the Golden West, however, claims a greater and more modern prestige than the repetition of those principles which enter into the make-up and progress of all other societies, for its foundation is the State of California, its progenitors the noble pioneers, and the future welfare of the State is to be in the hands of her native born. Could any heritage be more congenial, any record more satisfactory, any outlook more flattering? Other societies may prosper under the influence of traditions, the stories of antiquity or the memories of ancient theories, but the order of Native Sons of the Golden West lives upon the essence of true California heroism, pluck and energy; and as the State grows and strengthens, so will the order progress and enlarge in proportion to the advances of civilization.

The Native Sons are to follow in the footsteps of the men who laid the foundation stones of this state. Their fathers builded well. The pioneers of California were the cream pick of the older states; they transformed a wilderness into a garden; they were actors in a history unparalleled for interest in any other age. These men are passing away. The history of their lives should now be preserved. The authentic history of their lives and of their deeds should be collected and perpetuated by their offspring and successors—the Native Sons—whose ambition it should be to take the initial steps in furnishing the official records of the men whose every energy was spent in placing California upon the high plane she now enjoys, and through whose medium this organization secured successful prestige. None are more entitled to the honor of doing this grand work than the Native Sons, and none more capable of doing credit to the subject than those who are so endeared to the fraternal associations which closely unites the relation between the history of the state, the pioneers and their order.

What greater benefit could the Native Sons accomplish than to collect the authentic history of their sires, and of the days in which they lived? As we infer, the events of the bear flag revolution cut a prominent figure in the order. We venture that the Native Sons have generally very meager data relating to that important epoch. Why should they not now collect it, while men are living who participated in those stirring scenes? The Grand Parlor is about to meet at San Rafael. We suggest that that body take action looking to the appointment of a general committee on early California history, and that in each subordinate parlor a local historical committee be appointed to collect data in their immediate localities. The pioneers, such men as General Vallejo, General Bidwell, the survivors of the bear flag party, and the later comers—the men of 1849—could be thoroughly interviewed, and authentic data could be collected and preserved. If there could be a joint action of the Native Sons all over the state, within a year the archives of the order would be of incalculable value, and the historian of the future will be enabled to have before him the statements of men who participated in events important and interesting in our state history. These statements could be taken in short-hand, cut down in comprehensive narrative, triplicated on a type-writer, and copies deposited in the state library, the Grand Parlor and the local parlor, after being read over, corrected and signed by the narrators.

This is truly a matter of importance. As it has been a very few volunteers have engaged in the collection of historical data. As these men die off their collections may possibly find their way into junk stores, or pass into unappreciative hands. There has been, so far, no organization for this purpose, unless we except the California Historical Society. Properly this duty should fall on the order of Native Sons. They owe it to their brave fathers. If they accomplish this line of work it will be a credit to the order, and the benefits will be harvested even after age shall have whitened their locks.

While speaking in former issues of the doubtful success of the state series of text-books, we have only been able to generalize, as space nor time has not allowed special criticism, and it would be unjust to find fault with such compilations, gotten up under expense to the state as the new school books have been. But it is no unkindness, no cynical fault-finding with the compilers, that can be attributed to a just and disinterested examination of those text-books that are placed before the pupils of the state for their tuition. The children are defenseless, and should not—nay, must not—be imposed upon, either by design or through the ignorance of those paid for the labor of compilation. Besides, the amount so liberally allowed biennially by the state should insure at least as nearly perfect a system as human brains can afford.

And just here a pause may be made to pay a just tribute to the mechanical work of all the series. The paper upon which they are printed is of the best; the type is clear and easy to the eye; the illustrations are evidently by the best of engravers, and would do credit to the oldest publishing houses, while the stitching and binding give evidence of the strength and durability of the books, and are a monument of laudation to the state bindery.

But as to the text—or rather and more properly speaking, the methods of its arrangement—what will we say? However, in this case it is easier to teach by example, so we will cite attention to a few examples of the conditions that confront the student as he takes up, say the Third Reader. Let him open it at random, as we do while writing, and take the very first lesson, "America, national hymn; S. P. Smith, 1808, Massachusetts." Then immediately follows the queries: What do you know of this author? Was he a lawyer? A clergyman?" And in parentheses the reader is told to see Cyclopedia. Then four lines of verse are quoted, and the pupil asked who wrote those lines about Mr. Smith. Now here is a perfect snowdrift of bewilderment for the pupil before he is even permitted to read Mr. Smith's production, "My country! 'tis of thee," etc. He must at once confess his entire ignorance of any acquaintance with that Mr. Smith, or with any of his numerous family; and before the entire school must also admit he does not know whether Smith was a shyster who peddled his services about a police court at $2 50 a case, or whether he hammered the cushion of a pulpit in one of the outlying districts of Boston. So, as far as the pupil's information goes, poor Smith is withered and dead; at least S. P. Smith, the author of that hymn. But why demand of the pupil a biography of one of the tribe of Smith, since that pupil is only called on to read a lesson, prepared for him, or supposed to have been, to drill him in articulation, intonation, pronunciation, emphasis, etc? Why worry a boy or girl to find out all about old man Smith; for the compiler says he was born in the early part of the century; at least it is the presumption that the figures 1808 stand for the year of his birth.

But that is not all. Some kind friend of Smith's wrote some verses about him—it would be unkind to call them doggeral—and the compiler of this Reader asks the innocent pupil who it was? What difference does it make to any one who wrote the stuff? Does it not look like a catch question to stupify the pupil? But the compiler, in brackets, invites the pupil to see Cyclopedia. Now, how is that pupil to see the Cyclopedia mentioned? If there is one in the school library, how long would it take him to hunt up the title "Smith," and then distinguish which of that family is wanted? But that is not all, for the next question is, "Where is Massachusetts?" Now here is a question in geography, and is entirely irrelevant and immaterial, and has "nothing to do with the case." Again, "who were the pilgrims?" Well, they were fine old gentlemen, but they are out of place here, as that is a question in history and this is a reading exercise. Then the compiler goes entirely out of the text to get a clincher, and asks the young reader who wrote the line, "The Groves were God's first Temples!" Now what difference on earth does it make who gave vent to that effusion? Will it make that boy or girl read any better to find out the author's name? And, again, would it not be just as proper in that connection to ask him or her if he or she believed in infant baptism?

But suppose the pupil is asked to find answers to those questions, or any of them, and report next day, what is the result? Some of them, who have parents or relatives who possess the requisite knowledge or know how to direct them to obtain the information, may be able to make a slight show in the class, whereas some of the brightest pupils of the school may make a sorry appearance, because they are unfortunate in not having parents or relatives who are able to aid them in the research.

The very next lesson is Bishop Heber's gem, "Life, a Mighty River," which, left by itself, is a fine selection for a reading lesson. But when the compiler interjects such questions as, "Can you tell what this author chiefly wrote? Sermons? Travels? Hymns? What well-known hymn or hymns did he write?" of ten and twelve-year-old scholars, he is getting them into a muddle by asking them for a biographical account of the bishop that necessitates the reading of his life. It is also asked what is meant by the "River of Life," a query that borders on the metaphysical and abstruse, only fitted for older heads. In almost each reading lesson where questions are asked the scholar is required to "see the Cyclopaedia." Is this a free advertisement for that reference work, or is it deemed essential to good, correct reading that each scholar should have a cyclopaedia by his elbow as he reads in class?

We are told by Mark Antony that Brutus was ambitious. So he was, but it is very doubtful if his ambition ever made him aspire to write the possessive of his name "Brutus's," as it is to be found in page 233 of the Third Reader, and that in a title line, "Brutus's Address." This may be a typographical error, but if so it is repeated in the contents of the book, and it is to be hoped that construction of the possessive case will be corrected by the teacher.

In what he is pleased to call "Language Work," the compiler of this book requires some peculiar and severe work at the hands of the young reader. For instance, he exacts that the pupils express the meaning of the following in their own language: "The chastened radiance of the gloaming," leaving out the words "chastened radiance" and "gloaming." What twelve-year-old child knows what is meant by the phrase just as it stands, and until understood who can fashion the meaning into other words? In Scott's Battle of Beal'an Duine, page 244, the class is required to tell what pictures are seen in certain verses of the poem, and to enable it to be done the pupil is required to locate the objects in a diagram of the mind, an imaginary picture or panorama, as it were. How many children of the Third Reader age know what the imaginings of a poet are? How many can tell what is had in view by the poet, clothed with all the indulgence humanity has allowed him since the days of the muses or the period when Pan played upon the shepherd's reed?

Our Superior Judges should exact a higher order of intelligence in applicants for naturalization. It often occurs that the candidate for citizenship is absolutely without the slightest knowledge of our system or form of government—in fact lacking in knowledge of any form of government. Only a few weeks ago we witnessed the process of admitting an applicant to the great rights of American citizenship, who could not speak or understand our language. Now, how could such a person say that he was attached to our form of government? He did not, and could not understand what was meant by the question. It was an impossibility for him to have read or understood a single line of our constitution. The manner of admitting citizens has been entirely too lax, and a stricter rule should be adopted. A reasonable understanding of what is required of a good citizen should be made the standard. One of our greatest dangers can be attributed to the large unintelligent voting class.

It is positively astonishing, not to say amusing, to hear people talk about a better water supply for this city. There is not a city in the world that would not give millions for the natural and pure water that nature has brought to our doors. Here is a river, supplied from the snows and springs of the mountains with the purest, sweetest and best water that is known, yet there is a clamor for something else. Strange that the greatest objection to the river water emanates from medical gentlemen, who are doubtless honest in their convictions. A prominent brewer and wealthy citizen remarked during a discussion of the question: "These doctors don't like Sacramento straight, because it is too healthy—don't cause sickness enough." While this was in the nature of a jest, it does seem that the medico's reasons are simply science run mad. Since hydraulic mining has been suppressed we have clear, pure water the greater portion of the year. Those who may have a preference for well water can avail themselves of the opportunity, but we have stood the river water in the times when there was great pollution from slickens, and now, when it is comparatively free from this element, there certainly should be no serious objection to its use. It was always healthy with the slickens; it cannot be unhealthy without it.

SHAKESPEARE-BACON.

Recent Skeptical Literature—Donnelly's Cipher a Failure—Shakespeare is Shakespeare for all Time.

[Written for THEMIS by B. Collins, of Chico, Cal.]

PART III.

Ben. Jonson says that Shakespeare had "small Latin and less Greek." This, of course, is an admission that he had some, and Jonson's statement upon the matter must be accepted. It was not, however, necessary to be able to read the Greek and Roman writers of tragedy in the "original" to know what they had written. Sophocles, Eurypides and Eschylus, of the Greeks, Seneca, Terence and Plautus, of the Romans, had been translated into English, as well as the histories of Greece and Rome. Chapman, an English poet, translator and dramatist, (a friend of Spencer and Shakespeare) had translated Homer's "Iliad" into English verse years before Timon of Athens and Troilus and Cressida were written. Plutarch's works were also translated into English by North years before Julius Caesar, Antony and Cleopatra, Coriolanus and Cymbeline were written. There were almost innumerable translations of French and Italian works, as every student of English literature knows, before Shakespeare's time. Long before the Norman French, the halls of the Kings and noblemen of England echoed with the music of the harp and the song of the minstrel. Poesy may have been an exotic plant in Britain, but it early grew, budded and bloomed with hues as bright and with a fragrance as sweet as under Grecian and Italian skies. For proof of this, see D'Israeli's "Curiosities of Literature," "Cyclopaedia of English Literature," and Taine's "History of English Literature." There was a multitude of unknown poets before the time of Caedmon, who wrote the "first hymn," and from whom Milton got his first ideas of "Paradise Lost." As early as one hundred and fifty years before the Saxon invasion there was established "a sort of literature." There was Adhelm, whose odes, songs or hymns, though doubtless crude, were full of poetic passion and fervor. Then came the "venerable Bede," and later on John Scotus. At an early date in the "ninth" century King Alfred translated several works into the Saxon, including the verses of Boethius. Scholars, two hundred and fifty years before the time of Chaucer, performed the play Saint Catherine, and "there were written epigrams as pointed as those of Martial." As early as the tenth century Athelstan promoted learning and civilization. During the latter part of the fourteenth century Piers Ploughman wrote his "Vision." Geoffrey Chaucer, born 1346, an original writer and translator, was the author of the immortal "Canterbury Tales," in which is displayed great dramatic power. He borrowed from Boccaccio his history of "Troilus and Cressida," so that his story was abroad in the land one hundred and fifty years before Shakespeare published his immortal drama bearing this title. Numerous works were composed and translated by him, and he it was who created the "new tongue." Gower, contemporaneous with Chaucer, was a man of great learning, and was a prolific writer. Then came Lydgate, with his "Destruction of Troy" (from which Shakespeare could have drawn facts and inspiration for his "Troilus and Cressida," without resorting to the original); besides which he composed two hundred and fifty-one poems. At this time poetry was universally indulged in; Taine says that it "became a manufacture, and was composed by the yard." Barclay followed, with a translation of the "Mirror of Good Manners," and the "Ship of Fools." Generations, centuries before Shakespeare, there were translators and original writers upon most every topic. Yes, even upon philosophy, for Roger Bacon, of the fourteenth century, must not be forgotten. As to translations, Roger Ascham, university orator at Cambridge and Latin secretary to Elizabeth, says, in 1570:

These be the enchantments of Circes, brought out of Italie to mar men's manners in England. * * * But more by precepts of fonde bookes, of late translated out of Italian, into English, sold in every shop in London.

It was largely from this source that the writers of the Elizabethan period not only got their style of composition, but drew largely for their material. Elizabeth herself was not the least in ability among the translators. From this, and what may hereafter be noticed upon this matter, it will be seen that Shakespeare could not lack for models and materials. It was during the Elizabethan Age—the renaissance—and prior thereto, that ancient and medieval history, philosophy and literature, through the medium of translation, was made known generally to the people of England. The philosophic principles enunciated, demonstrated, by Copernicus and others, before Shakespeare's time, had been spread throughout every civilized land; and it is a well-known fact that Bacon, in his "Inductive System," was but traveling in a rut that had been worn for more than a century. And, while it is conceded that he has done much toward the "conquest of nature," it is true that he was not so great a theoretical philosopher as Galileo, and that he was not, as claimed by Mr. Donnelly, a "practical" one.

Roger Bacon, who flourished over two centuries before Francis Bacon's time, was a ripe scholar, and though of the fourteenth century, is classed as a seventeenth century philosopher. His writings were very voluminous—"more numerous than the leaves of the Sibyl." Among them was a treatise on perspective, on the anatomy of the eye, on the laws of reflection and refraction, and on the construction of mirrors and lenses. He treats of experimental science as contradistinguished from speculative sciences, and "on the operative arts in a way that forcibly reminds us of Francis Bacon." He also described a method of constructing a telescope. In experimental philosophy, in mechanism and invention, Galileo and Roger Bacon both far exceeded Francis Bacon. The centuries preceding the time of Shakespeare and Bacon were rich in philosophical investigation and learning, alike accessible to both. With all these literary and scientific lights shining around him, warming his fancy, stirring his soul, developing his thought, and challenging his genius to like efforts and accomplishments, can it with any sort of consistency be claimed that Shakespeare had no available advantages and opportunities, and that no one could have written the plays unless he was a Greek and Latin scholar, and had set himself up as a "philosopher?" Translations were extant, and these were sufficient, especially to one to whom nature was as an open book.

In "chapter ii," of the "Cipher," it is claimed that Shakespeare had no, or but little, education, and that it was utterly improbable that he (Shakespeare) could have obtained the knowledge displayed in the plays * * * That the author of the plays was a philosopher, and a practical one.

The preceding remarks are but partly explanatory of this remarkable assumption. There is much wisdom and knowledge contained in the plays; without it they would be but little worth. But, while this is true, it is equally true that they contained many errors, and of that peculiar kind a classical scholar like Bacon would not make. These defects were well known at the time they were written, and were the subject of much merriment and sarcasm on the part of some of Shakespeare's contemporaries, whose plays fell into disuse as he rose in public favor. From the more recent editions of his works these errors have largely been eliminated.

The time of Shakespeare and Bacon was full of learned men. It was the period when literature, the arts and sciences in every branch, poured in upon the world like an "o'er-swelling flood." They were not locked up in an unknown tongue, nor were they in the possession of a few favored individuals. Shakespeare had the opportunity to possess this knowledge; it was not pent up in a cipher, but was visible to and obtainable by all. It does not follow with an "argal" that, because Shakespeare has embellished, or enumbered, his writings with allusions to some principle of philosophy, or has put law phrases into the mouths of certain of his characters, that Bacon, being a lawyer and philosopher, was the author of them. The assertion that the frequent use of law phrases found in the plays is proof that "a profound lawyer wrote them," can have but little or no convincing force. Shakespeare was long enough in a law office, at Stratford and at London, as a clerk or copyist, to enable him to pick up a fund of law phrases and maxims. His use of them, after all, is only pedantry; a profound lawyer would most probably have avoided them. A mind so retentive and rigorous as Shakespeare's would forget nothing, and, with a faculty so marvelous in the utilization of all sorts of material, it is not surprising to find them in his plays. No more so is it than to find them in "Venus and Adonis;" he gives a wonderfully accurate description of the good points and qualities of a thoroughbred horse; and yet, on this account the inference can not be drawn that he was a subtle and "profound" horse doctor, or that he could not have become so deeply and technically skilled in horse flesh unless he had read Zenophon, in the "original" Greek, on the proper rearing and training of that quadruped. It is submitted, for the benefit of those troubled with the Baconian frenzy, that Shakespeare could have picked up some information on this subject while holding the fiery bars for the gentry and nobility at the doors of the theatres. If the proud and haughty Bacon ever read Zenophon on the horse; ever ranged the stalls of Elizabeth's equery, or ever acquired from anywhere any exact information about that noble animal, it has not been made luminous on the pages of history.

In Troilus and Cressida (act iv, sce. 2), Cressida, speaking of her love for Troilus, says:

"But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very centre of the earth,
Drawing all things to it."

The question is, would anyone but a physicist have used the above language to illustrate an idea? Why not? The general principles of natural philosophy were apt to be understood by scholars and inquiring minds, regardless of their calling. The laws of gravitation were then well understood. Galileo had investigated the subject; so had Copernicus. The preacher Rivalta preached it in 1304, and Pythagoras, six centuries before Christ, must have understood it. Are we to believe that no one could have, or would have written this in a play unless he was a graduate of Cambridge, or had devoted his time to physics? From the following Mr. Donnelly could prove, for it is but the line and force of his reasoning, that the author was a physician:

"And danger, like an ague, subtly taints, Even then, when we sit idly in the sun."—Tro. and Cres.

Also, Mrs. Quickly's statement as to the disease that gave Falstaff, the witty old "road agent," his coup de grace, would be in point.

"Ah, poor heart! he is so shaken of a burning quotidian tertian."

All the critics, including Dr. Samuel Johnson, who edited Shakespeare's works, are agreed that the tragedies are not modeled after the Greek and Roman, and that the author does not follow the rules laid down by Aristotle, and which are so clearly observed by dramatists, ancient and modern, who were taught in the classics; that Shakespeare paid no attention to the unities required in dramatic composition, and as before observed, abounded in errors which a classical scholar would not make. Dr. Johnson says that art had but little and nature the chiefest share in the production of the plays. He further says, in his edition of 1828:

"If we undertake to examine the greatest part of these by those rules, which are established by Aristotle and taken from the model of the Grecian stage, it would be no very hard task to find a great many faults, but as Shakespeare lived under a mere light of nature and had never been made acquainted with the regularity of these written precepts, so it would be hard to judge him by a law he knew nothing of."

On this matter we have also the evidence of his contemporaries. In a conversation between Sir John Suckling, Sir William Devenant, Endymion Porter, Mr. Hales of Eaton, and Ben Jonson, Sir John Suckling, who was a professed admirer of Shakespeare, had undertaken his defense against Ben Jonson with some warmth; Mr. Hales, who had been still for some time, told them: "That if Mr. Shakespeare had not read the ancients, he had likewise not stolen anything from them; and that if he would produce any one topic finely treated by any of them, he would undertake to show something upon the same subject at least as well written by Shakespeare."

Bacon's biographers tell us that while he was at Cambridge, where the philosophy of Aristotle was yet taught, he formed a dislike for it, holding that it was of no practical use; and that it was to build up a system of philosophy that would be of some practical benefit to mankind he, in 'early life sketched the 'Instauration of the Sciences.' This is referred to to show that Bacon was thoroughly acquainted with the life and works of the great Stagirite, and knew the time at which he lived, and would not, having occasion to write of him, make him contemporaneous with the Greeks who besieged Troy, and who really preceded him many centuries. But this the author of Troilus and Cressida does, besides, as heretofore pointed out, making Cressida familiar with the laws of gravitation. Hector, in one of his speeches to Paris and Troilus, charging them with reasoning superficially, says:

"Not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought Unfit to hear moral philosophy."

This striking error in one of the unities would not have occurred with one versed in the history of the ancients. It cannot be claimed that the name—Aristotle—has crept into the play recently; it was there when Bacon lived. 'Twas such an error as Shakespeare was likely to make. Though many could be pointed out fully as gross, this one will answer to illustrate the fact that the author of the play was not learned in those rules in which Mr. Donnelly says he was. Had the author been bound by rules and classical models we would not have had "Shakespeare." It was not necessary for him to be saturated with the learning of the ancients to be able to paint the passions, to image forth like a piece of polished statuary the emotions of the soul. He did not senilely imitate and copy the ancients, as many writers did who had the advantages (?) afforded by a thorough education. Had it been so that he, like them, especially in his earlier efforts, would have left numerous traces of his familiarity with them, and they would to a great extent have controlled him, especially in his style. Though his plots were often borrowed, his images, characters and delineations were his own. His great powers were born in him, and it is fortunate for the world that his mighty genius was not chilled, dwarfed and circumscribed by fixed rules, and a slavish imitation of the ancient dramatists, however capable and brilliant they may be.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

St. Petersburg is to have a $7,000,000 theater.

There is a new play called "Constellation." This will indeed call for a company of "stars."

Georgie Woodthorpe and her fine company has given us a week of excellent amusement. The little lady is painstaking and deserves success.

On Monday and Tuesday nights Madame Jananschek, the tragic actress, will give her rendition of Lady Macbeth and Meg Merrilies at the Metropolitan Theatre.

A great benefit for the New York Press Club was given last week, at which Nat Goodwin's new play, "A Gold Mine," was produced with full effect and in the glory of its comical situations and flashes of humor. The play is distinct from all others of early California life. The exploits of "Silas Woolcott, of Grass Valley," who does the business of selling a gold mine in England, is original and humorous. The play has been favorably mentioned.

Russell Bassett is a member of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" Company, in the role of Grocer Hobbs. He is a good actor and a hard worker now. We remember our old boyhood friend when he was the fattest and laziest mortal one would meet in a day's travel. At college he never pretended to do any hard work that could possibly be avoided. About the only thing Eugene Soggs—that is his true name—would ever try to do well, was something in the dramatic line. He always was inclined to the stage. The students were always picking upon him, and he was too infernally lazy to resent their abuse. But when he became aroused, we call to mind the fact, that he was a lion in bravery as well as action. We are glad he is now approaching the topmost round of an actor's ambition.

There is a magic charm in music. It inspires the martial spirit, soothes the wild and savage, creates a spell over all animate beings that it is wonderful to contemplate. We are now speaking of melody in music, not that so-called classic impossibility that the purely technical musician calls music. Last week we had the Ovide Musin Concert Company. While not entirely free from that nightmare of classic numbers, still the divine harmony and sweet concord were produced by the excellent artists. Ovide Musin is a master of the violin. Whitney Mockridge has a fine robust tenor, but like all of those educated musicians, wants to show off in strained efforts, where he could entrance in pure melody. Mrs. Annie Louise Tanner has a pleasing, rich and melodious voice, with wide range. Her selections were more in accord with the public demand. Edwin Schouert is a fine pianist.

The announcement of Edwin Booth's sudden and dangerous illness discloses what a deep and sincere hold he has upon the hearts of the American people. The news was greatly exaggerated, and it develops that his illness is not of a serious character, and that the greatest actor of modern times will not be cut off from his usefulness, and the divine art will still have its greatest representative. Several years ago Edwin Booth gave way to a streak of melancholia, with which the Booth family has been peculiarly afflicted from its earliest recollections. Even at this time this great surviving genius of the family will not play an engagement in that city where his unfortunate brother caused such a dire calamity to the nation. It is not improbable that one of Edwin Booth's periods of low spirits, melancholia, has seized upon him, and that his sudden illness is superinduced and aggravated by this feeling. We trust that there is no serious or permanent ailment that will drive him from the stage at the topmost round of his ambition. Fifty-four years of age is only the prime of manhood, and with any degree of care Mr. Booth would not feel his advance in life for many years to come. It is more than probable that Edwin Booth's sensitive nature was wrought upon in some manner, which produced his late sudden illness. For a possible key to this we might advert to an article in the North American Review recalling one of the most bitter memories of the Booth family—the assassination of President Lincoln by his brother. There are some details in this article which was written by John T. Ford, the proprietor of Ford's Theater at Washington, within the walls of which the cruel and cowardly assassination occurred, which have never been published, and which relate solely to Mrs. Surratt's connection with the crime, and also to the plot of John Wilkes Booth to kidnap President Lincoln before the assassination was thought of. All these terrible thoughts, which are known to have weighed heavily upon Edwin Booth's mind, probably revived his melancholia, and produced the illness. Edwin Booth has always had a horror of this event, and every reference to it seems to unsettle him.

Book Chat.

All those of the early settlers in this city will remember the sharp and witty correspondence to the Sacramento Daily Union, signed John Paul. The author was C. H. Webb, who has recently branched out as a full fledged poet, some of whose poems might be classed as "ghastly funny." Here is a little sample taken from Harper's for April:

REVENGE.

Revenge is a naked sword;
It has neither hilt nor guard.
Wouldst thou wield this brand of the Lord?
Is thy grasp, then, firm and hard?
But the closer thy clutch of the blade,
The deadlier blow thou wouldst deal,
Deeper wound in thy hand is made—
It is thy blood reddens the steel.
And when thou hast dealt the blow—
When the blade from thy hand has flown—
Instead of the heart of the foe,
Thou mayst feel it sheathed in thine own!

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, who so captivated the young and the old with "Little Lord Fauntleroy," has just written a new story, which will be published by Scribners. The story will be called "The Pretty Sister of Jose." The success is assured, if for no other reason than she is the author of the "Little Lord."

Joe Jefferson will branch out as a magazine writer, in the Century, with a record of the early days of the American stage in his autobiography.

The April number of the Occidental Medical Times, from the press of A. J. Johnston & Co., has been received. Among the valuable contents is a paper read before the Sacramento Society for Medical Improvement, by F. B. Sutliff, M. D., on "Leprosy in Hawaii." The writer treats this question ably, and concludes that leprosy is a contagious disease. A number of illustrations are given with the paper. A number of departments upon medical science and surgery contain some remarkable treatments and cures of various diseases and injuries. A successful operation by opening the skull and draining a cerebral abscess, and recovery of the patient, is mentioned as occurring in the Berlin Medical Society last December. There are many new discoveries and new treatment of old diseases learnedly discussed in this number. The report of Dr. W. R. Cluness, upon the public health shows the average annual death rate from all causes occurring in the ten largest cities and towns of the State, and representing a population of 586,000, was 14.11. The highest rate for the month, occurring in cities having a population of 10,000 or more inhabitants, was reported from Oakland; the lowest from Chico and vicinity. In the editorial department there is a review of the late legislation upon health and sanitary matters. The editor contends that the establishment of a branch insane asylum at Ukiah is not a necessity. There is much in this volume that will interest and instruct the ordinary layman, as well as the professional.

The North American Review for April contains an unusual amount of reading matter, including an interesting paper entitled "Prof. Huxley and Agnosticism," by Robt. G. Ingersoll. Megerle's Sacramento News Co., Fourth, J and K.

Professional Chat.

Nearly a generation ago, James McClatchy, the veteran editor of the Bee, was in the habit of taking his summer outings, and on these occasions would frequently avail himself of the services of the writer, to furnish such editorial matter as might receive the sanction of Jeremiah O'Leary, the other partner in the company. Now, Mr. O'Leary was one of those matter of fact men who rarely ever smiled, and when he had confidence in his fellowman it was of the strictest order, and knowing of Mr. McClatchy's strong friendship for the writer, anything that came from his pen was not subject to that scrutiny accorded to other articles. Well, affairs went on swimmingly for several weeks, until it was about time for Mr. McClatchy to return. Just about this time there was a great agitation among the woman's rights women, and some of the Eastern agitators were in this city, where a convention was being held. It was well known that Jas. McClatchy was a life long advocate of woman's rights, and the members of the convention had passed resolutions complimentary to the veteran editor and the Bee. It was the last day of the convention, and Mr. McClatchy was to return the succeeding day. The writer, not having this reverence for the wrinkled, scrawny and vinegar faced advocates who had been ranting upon man's perfidy to woman, concluded, just for a little joke, to write up the personnel of this body of women, and heap as much gentle ridicule upon them as possible, without being rude or brutal. Actuated by the spirit of devilry, we prepared a full column, double leaded article, which passed the argus eye of Mr. O'Leary and came out in the edition of the Bee the day succeeding the adjournment of the "Hen Convention," as the article styled them. The women were wild with anger, and appointed a committee of three members to wait on the editor of the Bee. At this juncture Mr. McClatchy returned, and had not seen a copy of the Bee, having, according to his custom, given orders that no papers should be sent to him while at recreation. He had scarcely become seated in his sanctum when the delegation of old ladies appeared. He greeted them with his usual cheery "good morning ladies," rubbing his hands in a gleeful manner. But he saw something was wrong, as they were decidedly cold and distant. The spokeswoman addressed him in her severest tone, saying: "Mr. McClatchy, we have always deemed you our friend." "And so I am, ladies; so I am," he replied. "It don't look much like friendship when you write such things as these"—showing a copy of the Bee containing the ridiculous article. The veteran editor's under jaw dropped and his eyebrows were elevated, which indicated that he was angry. He apologized to the ladies, explained that he had left "a d—d young scamp in charge of the paper who had neither sense nor discretion." Then he excused himself; seized his tile and hickory stick and started for the office of the writer, which was just across the street. Meantime the writer had been watching events, and saw the delegation enter the Bee sanctum, and knew that there would be a storm. So, when he saw Mr. McClatchy coming, he quickly went out the back way and hid himself off to San Francisco for a couple of weeks, until the storm clouds blew over. Mr. McClatchy entered the office and inquired of Geo. Cadwalader, with whom the writer was associated, where that "young rapsallion" was? Being informed of the departure he went away, and after a few days his anger cooled and he looked on the humorous side. He often laughed over the affair, but vowed he would never trust the writer again unless there was someone to look over the proof of the articles. But he did trust him thousands of times afterwards, notwithstanding the little imposition.

During the old District Court days, when this county and Yolo formed the sixth judicial district, the hotel accommodations at Woodland were not the very best; they have since been improved. Judge S. C. Denson presided over the court, and, with his short-hand reporter, made periodical visits to the little hurg over the river to administer justice. In those days Woodland was the objective point of all young couples who married up the canyon; they spent their honey-moon season in the city of the oaks. One summer the Judge and reporter became fruit hungry. The market was stocked with tempting produce, but the hotel tables carried only beef-steaks, mutton and pork chops, and biscuit. The judicial department made up a purse, purchased a drawer of currants and bribed the cook to manufacture a big, fat pie for dinner. The pie was served in good style, and was placed between the two court officers at the head of the table. They dished out ample pieces, and showed indications of making their meal on currant pie. At the opposite end of the table sat a young bridegroom and his newly-made life partner. He wanted to see that his wife had the best the house afforded, and from his looks and actions evidently did not propose that any one in the hotel should "hog" all the good things. When he saw no indication on the part of the Judge to pass the pie, he arose from his seat, walked around the table, reached over the Judge's shoulder and carried off the pie. Of course no explanation could be made that the pie was private property, and the Judge and his assistant were compelled to silently submit to their loss, while their despoiler glared at them, as much as to say, "While I am from the country, I know what decency is at a hotel table, and I don't propose that my wife shall be left by you city fellows."

Controller Dunn Still Technical.

Controller Dunn has refused to draw his warrant for $100,000, provided by the last legislature for the maintenance of the mining bureau; also, for $350,000 for the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting buildings for the Southern California Insane Hospital; also for $79,500 for the improvement of the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Asylum. Upon reading the laws, we find that each one provides that there shall be appropriated the sums named, and for the purposes named. Mr. Dunn interposes his objections on the ground that the failure to name the fund or declare the appropriation out of any money in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, creates a sufficient doubt in his opinion to warrant him in asking the Supreme Court for a decision on the question. There does not appear to be any ambiguity or doubt about the intention and purpose of the legislature in passing these laws. It is declared in express terms what the appropriation is for; the amount is certain and definite; and the funds are created by necessary implications. It is a well established principle of all law, that when the law-making power provides for any particular thing to be done, all things necessary to make such enactment effectual is implied. Mr. Dunn is only fastidious in these matters.

The Patronage.

The new federal administration has indicated certain changes in our district and local officers. C. F. Gardner has been agreed upon as Receiver of Public Moneys in our Land Office. Mr. Gardner has heretofore filled that office with credit; he is a young man whose appointment will not be disparaging to the administration. J. O. Coleman has the support of our delegation for Postmaster of this city. Mr. Coleman is deserving of recognition; he has been one of the most industrious of our citizens; he has unselfishly worked to advance the community; we but voice the sentiment of the people of this city in endorsing this selection. However, changes are not likely soon to occur. Federal terms are good for four years unless terminated for cause. R. D. Stephens succeeded Christopher Green as Postmaster November 1st, 1885; Rob't. Barnett succeeded A. L. Frost as Collector of Internal Revenue August 1st, 1885; Seldon Hetzel succeeded Ed. F. Taylor as Register of the Land Office August 5th, 1886, and J. F. Linthicum succeeded C. F. Gardner as Receiver of Public Moneys April 1st, 1888.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature during the past week was 80, on Monday; the lowest 50, on Thursday. The highest and lowest temperature for the corresponding week last year was 69 and 43. This comparison very forcibly shows how much warmer the first week in this month has been, as compared with that of April last year; the latter month of 1888 was the warmest April known in years along the coast and interior valleys. During the past week there was another electric display in the shape of a thunder and lightning storm, on Tuesday evening. The precipitation during the week was inappreciable, there being but a sprinkling on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, and early Thursday morning; making our rainfall to date for this season 16.16 inches as against 11.07 inches to an equal date last year. Yesterday's weather report shows a little lower temperature north of this state than is desirable, for it may have a tendency to travel this way and produce frost, thereby injuring early fruit, berries, etc.

Well Water Cause of Fevers.

From the Occidental Medical Times we gather the information that water in a large number of cases has been responsible for epidemics of typhoid and malarial fever. Well water is liable to be contaminated with organic impurities, which enter the water in the atmosphere as it falls in rain, and mingles with it as the water trickles through the soil. The milk from a cow which drank impure water has been found to originate an epidemic of typhoid fever. Thus it appears that water from wells in such soil atmospheric influences as surround this city would serve to gather the germs of this low class of fevers. Our own water is the purest and best, no matter what is said against it.

The Board of Directors of the new Insane Asylum at Ukiah met Friday, when Archibald Yell was appointed President of the board. It is not yet known when work will be commenced on the building. This will be decided at the next meeting, on May 2d. The law reads that the Insane Asylum shall be located within three miles of the town of Ukiah.

A burglar attempted to enter the house of James L. Goode early Saturday morning, at Twelfth and E streets, but he was unsuccessful. Officer Cunningham was promptly on the scene, but the criminal escaped.

SACRAMENTO DEFEATED.San Francisco Defeats Sacramento in a Very Uninteresting Contest.

About three thousand people witnessed the game between the San Franciscos and Sacramentos at the Haight-street grounds, San Francisco, yesterday afternoon. This being the first time these clubs have met since the opening of the season, a very interesting contest was expected, and the large gathering anxiously awaited the calling of the game, but, contrary to expectations, the game turned out to be a very uninteresting one, and the San Franciscos won with hands down. The Sacramento club, with few exceptions, played a brilliant game, no less than twelve put outs being credited to the outfielders. Young Hapeman occupied the box for the capital city boys, and was in no condition to pitch, after his arduous labors against the heavy hitting Oakland two days ago; but, under the existing circumstances, the club had no other pitcher and was therefore compelled to call upon Hapeman. Incell, the San Francisco pitcher, was also hit hard, but the hits were all gathered in by the fleet-footed fielders. Quite a remarkable change has taken place in our team since their first appearance; they have improved considerably in batting, fielding and coaching, and Peek-a-boo Veach's melodious chant can be heard amid the conflict, cheering them on to "glory or to grave." He is assisted by Captain McSorley, and the people who attend the games here will be pleased with these players' novel coaching.

At 2:30 o'clock the Sacramento team appeared for practice, and were shortly followed by the San Franciscos, gayly dressed in their nobby blue uniforms, with white trimmings and stockings. After 30 minutes of practice Umpire Sheridan called game. Up to the fourth inning the game was very exciting and interesting, and many cheers greeted the brilliant and difficult plays of the contending teams.

After this inning Hapeman's arm weakened and he fell a prey to the stalwart left-handers of the bay city club. Veach, Jevne and Sylvester distinguished themselves in the field, capturing twelve difficult fly balls. McLaughlin caught one of his old-time games and prevented many a base-runner from purloining the coveted cushions. Newbert accepted all the chances offered him, and had it not been for a brilliant running one-hand catch of Levy's he would be credited with a home run. Krehmeyer got his usual base hit and held down first in fine style.

All the San Franciscos played good ball, with the exception of their Eastern importation, Doyle, who showed up very poorly on third. On the whole, the game, though not interesting, was replete with many tidy plays, and the 3,000 people who attended manifested by their enthusiasm that they were well pleased with such an exhibition of ball playing. The following is a summary of the game:

BASEBALL NOTES.

President Mone has ruled that Borchers cannot pitch for the Sacramentos unless the Stockton management see fit to reinstate him, which they refuse to do, but manager Gillis has secured "Big" Burke, ex-pitcher of the Detroit and Kalamazoo club, to pitch in to-morrow's game.

After 12 o'clock this morning Special Officer May overtook a Chinaman running in Second street, from I to J. He stated that he had been up the country grubbing, that he had several hundred dollars, that one of his countrymen had become jealous of him and wanted to kill him. He was placed in the station house for safe-keeping until morning.

SOCIAL.

W. O. Brown, of Crockett, made Sacramento a flying visit last week.

Fred. Grass left last week on a visit to his old home in Brooklyn, Ill.

George A. Brown and family left Tuesday for Brooklyn, Ill., to reside in future.

B. U. Steinman left on the Golden Gate special last night for Washington, D. C. He will return in about six weeks.

At Dixon last Sunday C. A. Parker, of Elmira, and Miss Lena Edwards, of Dixon, were married at the residence of the bride's parents. The wedding was a quiet affair, and none but relatives of the contracting parties were present. The bride is a granddaughter of James Porter, a California pioneer, and one of the earliest settlers in Solano county. Mrs. Parker is a niece of Mrs. Claus Anderson, of this city. A number of valuable presents were contributed by relatives and friends.

A reception was given at the Central M. E. Church Friday evening to a number of new members. A fine musical programme was given by Mesdames D. C. Smith and Bartholomew, Misses Vina Barrett, Hattie Wheat and Rettie Parrot, and Messrs. M. K. Barrett, L. E. Smith and Edwin Williams. Ice cream and cake were served by the ladies, and an enjoyable time was spent by those present.

On Friday evening the closing party of Jones, Fisch and Watson's juvenile class was given at Turner Hall. The floor director was Master Guy Platt and the floor managers Masters Politz, Demarville, Moozer, Leonard, Marks, Nathan, Elkus, Tubbs, Blanchard, Davidson, Hopper, Garrison. Refreshments were served. Some 90 of the rising generation participated, and the affair was very enjoyable. The class re-opens Saturday afternoon, October 5th, at 2 P. M.

The Sacramento Society of Pioneers have been accustomed to give Friday evening parties at their hall each season, and they have been attended by their families and invited guests. Last Friday evening the guests of the society tendered to the Pioneer hosts a closing party. It was one of the most successful of the season. Our native champagne punch flowed freely, and the ladies provided an abundance of cake and delicacies. The Native Sons can well imitate the old boys of 1849, and we doubt if they can acquit themselves as creditably on the canvassed floor. At 1 A. M. "Auld Lang Syne" was sung, and the party dispersed.

Friday evening the Young People's Society of the First Baptist Church gave a very enjoyable entertainment in the church parlors, which were handsomely decorated for the occasion. The following programme was rendered: Instrumental duet, Misses Malone and Neubourg; recitation, George M. Pinnell; vocal solo, Mrs. B. F. Howard; instrumental solo, Miss Eva Brown; reading, Miss Ida Burroughs; vocal duet, Miss Lizzie Weber and Charles W. Reed; reading, Miss May Hembree; instrumental solo, William Paige. Miss Lida Clinch was accompanist for the evening. At the conclusion of the programme refreshments were served, after which came games.

A surprise party was given last evening to Prof. F. M. Jones, of the Sacramento Business College, at the college rooms, Ninth and K streets. The opening address was delivered by R. G. Hart, of the faculty. The programme of musical and literary entertainment was as follows: Vocal duet, Miss Clarke and Miss Van Walbeck; recitation, "Barbara Fritchie," Miss Alice Harvey; instrumental solo, Miss Clarke; recitation, "A Little Quaker Sinner," Miss Emily M. Connolly; recitation, "The Railroad Crossing," Mr. Terry; vocal solo, Mr. J. Desmond; select reading, Miss Lizzie Stevenson; instrumental solo, Miss L. Kelly. Refreshments were served and altogether the party was one of the most enjoyable of the season.

The second masquerade ball of the season given by Bergman & Studarus, at Haughton Crossing Friday evening, was a grand success. The hall is admirably adapted to gatherings of this kind. Outside tents were pitched to accommodate the masqueraders and shelter the dinner tables, and from their peaks to the sides of the hall countless Chinese lanterns dangled about in the breeze. The First Artillery Band furnished the music. The merry time was kept up until the morning hours. About midnight the following masquers received the prizes:

Best dressed lady, "Goddess of Liberty," Miss Maggie Dunn.

Best sustained character by a lady, "Girl Nurse," Miss Chase.

Best sustained character by a gentleman, "Jew Peddler," G. H. Menke.

Best local character, "Nancy"—an old colored washerwoman well known in the locality—Charles Studarus.

Most comical character, "Punch and Judy," J. W. Hastings.

The coupon prize was won by Tom Du-

The ball was under the personal management of Mr. H. L. Bergman, who spared no efforts in making it a success. The occasion will long be remembered by the numbers who assembled there Friday evening.

Unenforced Laws—Our Shams and Inconsistencies.

There is a sham in nearly all affairs of life—all branches of business, professions, education, press, religion and judicial. We pretend to do good things, pass strict laws and ordinances, and then never attempt to enforce or live up to them. Strong penal enactments in regard to gaming, lotteries, extortion, bribery, and the violations of sanitary and police regulations are adopted. Yet the judge who, perhaps, gave a year's salary to secure his election or retention in office, with severity and dignity charges the grand jury to look into all the infractions of the law, and will descend from the bench, go to a church fair in the evening and purchase a dozen chances in raffles and lotteries. The sworn executive and ministerial officers will calmly invest in the prevailing lottery schemes and take their toddlers from the hands of those who are restricted by the very laws and ordinances they are sworn to enforce. Jurors sworn to take the law from the court, and to desist from certain unlawful practices, and to avoid extraneous influences, deliberately seek those very things enjoined. The newspapers know that there are stringent laws against prize fights, cock fights, dog fights, etc., and yet their columns are filled with graphic and detailed accounts of these very affairs. Again, these same "great organs" for the education of the masses, knowing that lottery schemes are in direct violation of the laws and inhibited by the supposed sacred document, the organic law of the state, yet whole columns are devoted to the advertisement of such affairs. These same exponents of free institutions and the sanctity of law are shams inconsistent, and whose preaching and practice rest upon a different plane. The executive and ministerial officers will gravely instruct the subordinate officers of the law to look after the enforcement of the laws and ordinances and then go upon the street and witness the absolute disregard of some of the most important regulations. They will see the streets obstructed unlawfully, health and sanitary rules ignored, lottery tickets hawked about the streets for sale almost as vociferously as the "oranges ten cents a dozen" is proclaimed. They will see the fire limits regulations violated on every block, brothels, dives, deadfalls and disreputable places too numerous to mention. With these things we claim to be consistent.

Our First Election.

Among the musty old papers on file in the office of the County Clerk in San Francisco is the original polling list of an election for magistrate held in Sacramento District Sept. 28th, 1846, and which it is thought was the first election in this district. Following is the copy of the list of voters, furnished THEMIS by Assistant Adjutant-General Perrie Kewen:

Daniel Sill, Wm. Potter, Ed. J. Minier, T. J. Shadden, David Dutton, Peter Cadel, Wm. Johnson, I. Fuller, James Smith, Jas. Tylee, James McDowell, Wm. Northgrave, James Gregson, Ben. Sena, Martin Murphy, Helling Dowling, Jared Sheldon, Perry McCoon, Gardner T. Wynan, J. A. Sutter, Silas Hitchcock, Edmund Bray, Tobias Cadel, John Kuniye.

The candidates and the number of votes were: John Sinclair, 15; Jared Sheldon, 8; J. A. Sutter, 1.

The subscribers certify that the above is a correct register and poll of votes for the election of a magistrate of the Sacramento District, held at Fort New Helvetia, on this 28th day of September, A. D. 1846.

J. A. SUTTER, Judge.

More Electric Lights.

The Southern Pacific Company are placing an electric plant in the old machine shop of the car shop in the railroad works. It is designed to furnish the electric lighting for the railroad shops and grounds, the passenger depot and freight sheds. The plant is furnished by the Westinghouse Electric Light Company (alternating current). There will be two powerful dynamos, driven by a compound engine, manufactured by the Ide Company, of Springfield, Ill. The plant will be sufficient to supply 35 arc and 500 incandescent lights. The wires are now being placed in the freight sheds, and work will be prosecuted without delay, under the supervision of W. C. Clark, the District Manager of the Westinghouse Company.

General Sherman's only son, Thomas Ewing Sherman, will be ordained a Jesuit in July. He was educated at Georgetown College, launched out into the fashionable life of a young man of his station, and suddenly retired from the world to pursue a life of devotion which will find its first fruition next summer.

The police estimate that 50,000 people walk the streets of New York, not knowing where they will sleep at night, and 50,000 other people sleep as best they can, not knowing where or how they shall break their fast after the coming dawn.

FLASHES.

Baseball is a catching affair.
Can a toddy in a broken glass be a cracked smile?
The roses on many ladies' cheeks are hand painted.
Whisky may be a remedy for weak lungs. It makes the breath strong.
Twenty-five policemen, and nothing in the "jug"—Perfectly natural, though.
Do these go-as-you-please walkers make much headway when they go on foot?
"Why do you anger your husband so often?" "Because it is so pleasant making up."
A prize fighter adheres to the scriptural injunction—"Tis better to give than receive."
Give up some worldly pleasure, the one you can give up easiest—Aye, there's the rub!
All passions are good when one masters them; all are bad when one is a slave to them.
When a fellow gets tired of life he takes it. When he gets tired of a newspaper he don't take it.

Now is the time our statesmen are dodging around to avoid being overtaken by a federal office.
"Woman is a silent power in our land," says the orator. He never attended a woman's rights convention.
Strange that the talented editors of Sacramento have been ignored in the diplomatic consideration of the nation.

Many a mean man who cannot look his fellows in the face will march up to the throne of grace with the air of a saint.

A few years ago Germany refused to admit the Cincinnati hog. Now the Senate of the United States refuses to send a Cincinnati as Minister to Germany—Retaliation.

If you want knowledge you must toil for it; if food, you must toil for it; and if pleasure, you must toil for it. Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil, and not by self-indulgence and indolence. When one gets to love work his life is a happy one.

Merchant's wife (suddenly appearing in her husband's office)—Hah! I thought you said your typewriter girl was an old maid. Merchant (much confused)—Um-er, yes, m' dear, of course, of course; but she is sick to-day, and she sent her little granddaughter as a substitute.—Philadelphia Record.

An admiring critique of Sol Smith Russell, speaking of his appearance here last Tuesday, says: "His foot a dozen times pressed the threshold of the chamber of tears." Now that is more tears than we ever supposed could be supplied from one shed, and, moreover, it is shivering to think what would have been the result if he had pressed too hard, or had put his foot in and upset it.

A Record Hard to Beat.

In 1866 a Corliss engine was placed in the machine shop of the Central Pacific Railroad at Sacramento. The engine has a four-foot stroke and an eighteen-foot belt wheel, and it has been run continuously since it was placed there, frequently running night and day, often until 10 o'clock at night. Up to this date scarcely $100 have been spent for repairs. Allowing for ten hours a day, and three hundred working days to the year, this engine has been working 66,000 hours, at the smallest calculation, since it was placed in motion. The belt wheel makes seventy revolutions per minute, and for 66,000 hours it has made 277,200,000 revolutions. The circumference of the belt wheel is 56½ feet, and in making the 277,200,000 revolutions has traveled a distance of 2,964,354 miles, equivalent to more than 100 times around the earth. The belt wheel has traveled at the rate of 45 miles per hour.—Mining and Scientific Press.

Placer Republican.

The Placer Republican has donned an entirely new dress, and inaugurated a different system from that heretofore in use. The evidence of its prosperity is apparent from the fact that the proprietors have discarded the use of patent outside and plates. Every line is now set up in the Republican office. The publishers announce that it is not their purpose to fill the paper with original matter, because that would be uninteresting, but that they intend to avail themselves of the valuable publications of contemporaries, and general news and information. The first number under the new regime is a credit to the town as well as the publishers.

Origin of "My Uncle."

There are few who understand what is the true meaning of the term "uncle," when applied to a pawnbroker's shop. It is said to be a pun on the Latin word "uncus," a hook. Pawnbrokers employed a hook to lift articles pawned before spouts were adopted. "Gone to uncus," means "gone up the spout." In French the concierge of a prison was uncle because the prisoners are kept in pawn by the law. In the sixteenth century a usurer was called "uncle," because of his help to the spendthrifts, who were called in Latin nepotis, nephews.

He requests all the business houses to close in honor of the great day, and hopes that the people will celebrate the event in a manner befitting the patriotism of Americans.

The foundry of the Southern Pacific works was closed down Friday night, and will not be in operation until Tuesday morning. The reason for this closing is the replacing of the old motive power with a larger return flue stationary boiler and a new and more powerful engine. The capacity of the foundry has had to be increased owing to the augmentation of business, and of late frequently from forty to fifty tons per day have been poured.

Two boys, named Charles Bronck and Geo. Martin, are locked up in the city prison for being runaways. The parents of Bronck reside at Santa Barbara, and the city marshal of that town telegraphed Chief Lee that the boy had escaped from the care of the Boys' and Girls' Aid Society, San Francisco. The wandering youth will be returned to the charitable institution. Martin's home is in San Francisco, and Chief Crowley has been informed of the youngster's whereabouts.

A reliable Washington correspondent sends a long story of what is believed to be a nearly official statement of the future policy of the Harrison administration. He declares that the internal policy of the government will not be materially changed, but that a vigorous foreign policy will be pursued. The first thing will be to make a strong navy; the appropriations for naval vessels will be doubled; ocean commerce will be encouraged and Cuba and Samoa be absorbed as of more vital interest to us than to any one else; the Nicaragua canal be taken under our protection, and in general the external interests of the nation be looked after as the most necessary thing now to be considered for our future welfare.

Appeals in Criminal Cases.

In place of the old manner of preparing one manuscript transcript on appeal in criminal cases, section 1246 of the Penal Code has been amended so as to require the clerk of the court to have the record printed and fifteen copies furnished to be distributed in the same manner that transcripts in civil cases are disposed of. This all becomes a county charge. It is more convenient for the appellate court and all concerned.

Self-inflicted Torture.

A correspondent sends to the Strails Times an unpleasant story, which, if it be true, seems to demand the attention of the authorities. Upon the steps of the Mohammedan mosque, in South Bridge Road, Singapore, the correspondent one day found several priests with a formidable array of blunted instruments, comprising swords, knives and daggers. The priests were summoning true believers to approach, and, by using the weapons upon themselves, to obtain the approval of the prophet. In response to the appeal, one fanatic placed a dagger against his cheek, rested the other side of his head against a wooden board, and with a brick hammered the dagger until it pierced both cheeks and board. Another man thrust a thick wire through his lip; a third hammered a dagger into the top of his head until it was firmly fixed. Finally, one of the same men, with a curved knife, punctured his throat "till a quantity of blood flowed," and repeated the experiment on his abdomen; while another cut off a small portion of his tongue.

The performers were then congratulated by the priests, and their wounds were roughly dressed. The correspondent is of opinion that the Raj, which has put down Suttee and the Juggernaut sacrifices in India, ought not to tolerate such proceedings as he describes; and in this most people will probably agree with him.

Few Divorces in Ireland.

Whatever may be said for or against the Irish people, there is certainly one respect in which they may challenge the admiration of the world, namely, in matrimonial fidelity. In the recently issued tables giving statistics on the subject of divorce, our own country leads, in having granted near half a million divorces during the twenty years past, but there have been but eleven divorces throughout the length and breadth of Erin during that period. Protestant or Catholic, in happiness or abuse, the Irish continue the partnership until it is dissolved by death.—Boston Traveler.

CHESS DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY L. F. GRIFFIN.

Contributions to this column are cordially solicited. All communications pertaining to chess should be addressed to L. F. Griffin, box 402.

We have to thank Mr. N. J. M., San Francisco, Mr. R. R. P., Sacramento, and others for valued favors.

After the adjournment of the Steinetz vs. Tchigorin match in Havana, Herr T. was given full power to name an antagonist for a set match next December in Havana, and he promptly named Mr. Steinetz, who as promptly accepted.

As in the late series, each winner is to receive an honorarium of $20; each loser, $10; a draw $10 to each. This is to be a regular match, ten games up, each player to receive a fee of $250 and expenses from and to New York and St. Petersburg respectively. Mr. Steinetz denominates Havana "the El Dorado of Chess Players."

No scores of games played in the Sixth American Chess Congress have been received. We expect a surfeit of them through the medium of the Eastern chess papers next week.

The following interesting position was handed us for publication. The author, who prefers to be known as "Passed Pawn," states it is for beginners, but we think the more experienced will be somewhat puzzled with its intricacies:

White.—K at K 7; Knights at Q B 7 and Q 5; B at Q B 2; Pawns at K B 2, Q 2, Q B 3, Q Kt 2, Q R 6 and K B 6.

Black.—K at K 4; Pawns at K B 4, K B 5, K B 6, Q B 4 and Q R 2.

White to play and give mate in two moves.

The Redding vs. Committee game has taken a turn that is favorable to Mr. R., but the Committee still have good chances for a draw. The moves played last week follow:

Redding.	Committee.
37—P takes P	K to Q 5
38—P to Q 5	R to O 5
39—R to K 8, check	B to Q B 1

Redding to play.

The following finely conducted game was played in the chess rooms of the Mechanics' Institute, San Francisco. We are indebted to Mr. N. J. M. for the score, which has never been published. Mr. N. J. M. (white) Mr. L. (black):

Bull Fighting in Yakima

Spain and Mexico have their famed bull-fights, but grander and not so brutal contests are often witnessed on the Moxee company's cattle ranch between the long-horned Hereford and the polled Angus bulls. These thoroughbred cattle seem to have a natural antipathy for each other, and will fight for hours. One of these magnificent brutes will sometimes await, with head in the air and fire in the eye, the passing of a whole band of cattle to seek some well-matched foe of the other breed with which to give battle. When the foes have made their match they will back off for a distance of ten or fifteen feet and then make a terrible charge, coming together with fearful force. Occasionally the nimble and powerful polled Angus will get his head beneath the breast of his Hereford rival and throw him clear in the air. These fights will often last an hour, to be renewed after the antagonists have quenched their burning thirst at a neighboring spring, and continued until exhausted nature patches up temporary truce.—Yakima Herald.

SCRAPS FROM POETS.

Full Fledged and Alleged.

There are a good many men, preachers, actors, doctors, authors and newspaper writers, who find that the American public, like that of Athens in days of yore, is continually talking of the thing that is new; that the craving for novelty surpasses all other desires, and to those who have to furnish the public with new things that they may put bread in their mouths the insatiable desire becomes a horrible monster.

MUST BE NEW.

This is the cue: Something new!
That is what is wanted of you.
Black as night, or of morning hue,
Red, or yellow, or brown, or blue,
False as Koran, as Bible true.

All the same in the public's view
If it be new—yes, it will do!
If it be old, the day you'll rue,
Down you'll go into the stew,
There to stay for a day or two.

So if you'd sit in the primal pew,
And wear, as it were a mandarin's eue,
Mark till you reach the funeral yew
That this is the cue: Something new!
That is what is wanted of you!

NOTHING NEW.

Well, what shall it be—elegy or satire,
Song or attic salt? before I tune my lyre,
Something new, original or old;
Old stories are good, but often told.

Have you Sallust, Homer or the song of arms,
So old, so good and full of charms.

Arma virumque, glorious strains,
Thy magic power now thrills my veins.

Of Ulysses siren straits, Polyphemus ire,
These wondrous exploits our souls inspire,
Of Aeneas, and Anchises from the flames of Troy,

Why is this world so prone to destroy?

The regions inferno, Elysian fields,
Once at least Old Charon yields.
Of the gods assembled on Olympus Mount
At Jove's blast to render account.

All these acts come freely to mind;
In this classic lore real gems we find.
You want something original or new;
A truce you call to this old review.

Well, the dusted shelves of my brain
Has resulted in but little gain.
And now we have the worst of fears,
For nothing new or original appears.

No matter what we say or do,
There is, there can be nothing new.

Marie Antoinette's Slipper.

In an old French household in this city there is carefully cherished an heirloom. It is a slipper worn by Marie Antoinette in the last days before the French revolution. It was one of the few precious relics in the baggage of a court lady who fled with her husband, when the storm broke, to Louisiana. She left the tiny faded blue foot covering to her daughter, with the injunction that it should go down in the family, and always to the eldest daughter, if she never allowed herself to have corns.

It is a pretty slipper, and, kept in the jewel case of dainty French woman after French woman, it is perfectly preserved. For two generations the family have been New Yorkers, not at all well to do, but mindful of ancient traditions. Get the entree of the very dingy house in a very dingy side street, and a bright eyed, black-haired little woman—she gives music lessons—will seat you under a photograph of Gerome's picture, "Napoleon Questioning the Sphinx," and talk to you of art endlessly. Ask to see the family treasure and it will be brought out reverently.

It must be about a No. 2 in length, but it is very narrow and very high-heeled. The material is a brocaded blue, satin-lined, with soft white silk. The sole is of coarse-grained leather, and there are three satin straps over the instep, fastened with a paste buckle. The toe is rather pointed, and is embroidered with silver threads. The edges are bound with silver braid.

As to the condition restricting its inheritance it has always been regarded strictly, they say. The women of the house have taken wonderful care of their feet, that they might be worthy to inherit the slipper of the unhappy Queen. For a hundred years there has not been a pinching shoe worn in the family. There are two daughters growing up now to claim the relic, and both of them have feet as perfect in shape as infants, the family tradition having accustomed them to such frequent bathing and constant attention to their carefully shod pink toes.—*N. THE COUNTIES OF CALIFORNIA.

When and How They Were Organized.

In that the recent legislature created the new county of Orange from a portion of Los Angeles—the bill having met with Executive approval, and therefore became a law; and in that there has been considerable agitation over the question of the division of Colusa county, and the erection of the new county of Glenn, we feel that it may be of interest, particularly to our younger readers, to briefly review the history of the establishment of the various counties in this State. The first legislature of California met at San Jose, December 15, 1849, and adjourned April 22, 1850. On February 18, 1850, a law was passed to divide the State into counties, and establishing the counties of Branciforte, Butte, Contra Costa, Colusa, Calaveras, El Dorado, Los Angeles, Monterey, Marin, Mendocino, Mariposa, Napa, San Diego, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, San Francisco, Santa Clara, Sonoma, Solano, Sacramento, Sutter, Shasta, San Joaquin, Tuolumne, Trinity, Yuba, and Yolo. On April 5, 1850, the name of Branciforte was changed to Santa Cruz. In the original committee report the name of Oro was recommended for what was subsequently called Tuolumne; Benicia for Solano; Fremont for Yolo; Reading for Shasta, and San Jose for Santa Clara. The report also proposed for county names Mount Diablo, Coloma and Brennan. On April 25, 1851, the second legislature created the counties of Placer, Nevada, and Klamath, and very generally shifted the boundaries of the other counties. The third legislature, on March 22, 1852, created the county of Siskiyou, on April 16th Sierra, and on April 20th Tulare. On March 25, 1853, the county of Alameda was created; on April 26, San Bernardino; and on May 12, Humboldt. The legislature of 1854, on March 18, created Plumas county, and on April 5 passed an act to establish Stanislaus county. On May 11, a law was enacted authorizing the electors of Calaveras county to vote, on June 14, for or against the division of that county, and the creation of the new county of Amador. At the election the proposition to divide carried. Merced county was established from a portion of Mariposa April 19, 1855. On April 9, 1856, a law was passed to organize the county of Tehama, and on the 19th Fresno county was created. On the same day San Mateo was formed from the southern portion of San Francisco county. Incidentally we will observe that in the same legislature a bill was introduced to divide the territory embraced in the State into three new States—Colorado, Shasta and California. On January 27, 1857, a bill was introduced to form the county of Buchanan from the northern portion of Klamath. It passed the House, but the Senate objected to the name as being a departure from the custom of christening our counties by names of peculiar local significance. Amendments were proposed to change the name to "Alta," "Altissimo" and "Rincon," and finally, on March 2, it was organized as Del Norte. April 24, 1861, a law was passed establishing Mono county from portions of Calaveras, Mariposa and Fresno; and on May 20 Lake county was organized. A law was passed March 16, 1864, creating the county of Alpine; another on April 1 creating Lassen; and a third on April 4 creating Coso county from portions of Tulare and Mono. The former was never organized. On March 22, 1866, the legislature created the county of Inyo from portions of Tulare and Mono; and on April 2 Kern county was created from portions of Tulare and Los Angeles. On March 4, 1870, a bill was introduced in the Senate by the late Governor Irwin to create the county of Summit, but it was defeated. On January 14, 1870, an act was proposed to establish San Benito county from a portion of Monterey. It passed the house, but was lost in the Senate. On February 24, 1870, a bill was introduced to create the county of Ventura from the southern portion of Santa Barbara. That bill also passed the Assembly, but was killed in the Senate. At the same session bills were also introduced to create the counties of Donner, Oristimba and Anaheim, but they were all defeated. In the session of 1871-2 another attempt was made to pass a bill to establish the county of San Benito from that portion of Monterey lying east of the Gabilan mountains, but on February 15, 1872, it was lost. Fourteen hundred citizens of Monterey county protested against the passage of the bill. Several futile efforts were made to revive the question. On March 22, 1872, a law was approved creating the county of Ventura out of the east portion of Santa Barbara. At the same session bills were lost to create Donner county from portions of Plumas, Sierra, Lassen, Nevada and Placer, with Truckee as the county seat, and Surprise county from portions of Lassen, Shasta and Siskiyou. A bill was also lost to disorganize Klamath county and annex its territory to Siskiyou and Humboldt. February 12, 1874, the county of San Benito was formed from the eastern portion of Monterey; on the 17th Modoc county was created from the eastern portion of Siskiyou; and on March 28 Klamath was annexed to Humboldt and Siskiyou.

It is always cowardly and despicable to whine, even at the most serious reverses. There are many of the newspapers of this country making personal assaults upon the Senators who refused to vote to confirm Murat Halstead as Minister to Germany. The right of a journalist to review and criticize men in public life is a right, but it must be a just criticism, without any personal animosity. Too often do we find the powerful and influential newspaper wielding that power from personal motives or disappointed ambition, and when even a worthy man, in all respects, aspires to a position of honor and trust, if he does not happen to accord with such newspaper upon some matter of public policy, or there is some personal bitterness between them, then comes an attack which speaks to thousands, while his voice only reaches the few. Such a contest results in the ruin and oblivion of the person who comes under the ban of such a newspaper. We have a case in point with Murat Halstead. Here is a man, who, with his ability and genius, has used the power of his paper to assault and blacken men at his mere whim.

It is popular in some localities to belittle and abuse public men upon the merest suspicion. In fact, the bare election or appointment of our fellow-citizen to a public trust is a signal for imputations of dishonesty and a general scheme of public theft. So general has this belief been inculcated among the masses that it has become almost proverbial that any man who accepts a public office is per force a thief. The newspapers alone are responsible for this state of affairs. The abuse of that great power in their vested has educated the unthinking public to this conclusion.

Now, Murat Halstead has for many years wielded his pen against men, sometimes justly; often at the mere caprice of his mind and to gain public recognition, no matter where his sharp lances penetrated, or how unjust might be his accusations, or how deeply and fatally he might wound a worthy citizen who was powerless to reply. His whole motive seems to have been to gain a notoriety that would result in the reading and advancement of his paper, no matter how many human wrecks might strew his pathway. We believe in the liberty of the public press, but not in the liberty to attack ad libitum any person who assumes the equal right to differ with us. Mr. Halstead has for years made the most violent assaults upon personal and private character, and in such a manner as to often result in the absolute ruin of innocent men. While he has hurled his lance against some who deserved his assault, the injury to the memory of good men has robbed his just assaults of their true merit. Generally some of his attacks have been directed against our Senator, Governor Stanford, who holds a place in the hearts of all Californians that all the newspapers in the world cannot affect. It was stated in the executive session of the Senate, that in the most critical time of our existence, during the unholy rebellion, and at a time when President Lincoln was doing all in the power of mortal man to bring that war to a close, this same Murat Halstead denounced Abraham Lincoln in the most indecent terms, and announced that it would be a good thing for the country if he was removed by any means; but that his removal would not be of benefit because a "bigger ass," Hannibal Hamlin, would succeed him. Yet here is a man, and his friends, who whine because some of the United States Senators had memories of the past and manhood enough to resent the insults and abuses this same Murat Halstead had heaped upon them and the defenders of the nation in the past. The rejection of Murat Halstead is no insult to the President, but simply a just and proper act, wherein the assaulter of private character is given some of his own medicine.

Some of the most learned scientists are not votaries of the doctrine of total abstinence. Temperance is the true precept, but the fanatical idea of absolute denial of the use of stimulants is an error. Dr. W. S. Searle, in an article on "Idiosyncrasies of Alcohol," found in the North American Review for April, gives a learned disquisition upon the use of alcohol, from a scientific standpoint, which does not accord with the general popular belief that the use of such stimulants are productive of such fatal results to humanity. The remedy for whatever is evil in the excessive use of alcohol is not in the fanaticism of total abstinence, but in the temperate use of stimulants. Alcohol does not affect all persons alike. Neither does tea, coffee, tobacco, arsenic, nor other substances. When used moderately, any of these, including alcohol, it is extremely doubtful whether they are capable of producing any disease in the great majority of individuals. It is true that wine, beer and distilled spirits do produce some functional and organic diseases in many instances; yet there are thousands of instances where old fellows have steadily drank distilled liquors freely for fifty, sixty, seventy years, and finally died like others, of old age. Alcohol is least injurious to men of lymphatic temperament. Such men often need the stimulating effect of ardent spirits; to such they are a physical blessing, preventing disease. Men of intellect and charming moral qualities are more likely to become slaves to the inordinate use of intoxicants. In a great majority of cases the effect of alcohol in excess produces nausea, dullness and mental symptoms that are so disagreeable as to prevent such from ever becoming drunkards. One of the idiosyncrasies of alcohol, says the author, is that it anesthetizes the mind as well as the body. And as, one by one, environing restraints lose their influence, the true mental and moral characteristics of the man appear. The lecherous becomes unchaste; the generous, prodigal; the brave, reckless; the cunning, treacherous; the sentimental, maudlin. But when intoxication becomes fully developed, there is little except the animal life; not enough, often, to make a decent dog. When the drunkard is also a dipsomaniac—that is, when his brain is really diseased—then intoxication renders him a madman; indeed, furious, destructive, murderous.

Dr. Searle contends that alcohol is not bad for all purposes, and is a necessity in many cases. Children inheriting phthisis are assisted by alcohol and enabled to pass the critical period when the disease is wont to develop, and thus avoid it altogether. Men in mercantile life, who pursue their business with unremitting attention, might escape early collapse if they would renounce their total abstinence principles and partake of wine with their meals. They would eat less, digest better, carry fewer worries to their beds, and be better able to endure a life which moves at a faster rate and higher pressure. Many would be saved from premature graves, or the worse fate of insanity.

Intelligent man should either settle this matter for himself or act upon the advice of some broad minded and experienced physician. The reasons given by the learned doctor presupposes the use of a pure article of distilled spirits; not those villainous compounds that are now given out to the unfortunate individual who thinks he needs stimulants. The vast amount of drunkenness that we have in our large cities, and indeed in all places, is attributable more to the drugged and poisonous compounds that are sold under the names of whisky, brandy, rum and gin. When these old fellows of the earlier period used to have their pure liquors, and drank as much as they wanted, without any restriction, there was not much complaint of intoxication or its results—crime. Distilled liquors, like all other stimulants, when used in moderation are not harmful. It is only the abuse that creates the direful results to humanity.

Some one, certainly not of the Record-Union staff, and who evidently wishes to be considered pedantic, has attempted a criticism upon our school reader review of last Sunday. A criticism, to be such, must deal with the subject matter under consideration, and not the manner in which the review is expressed. The self-constituted teacher of grammatical construction ignores the subject of discussion and picks out some alleged faulty sentences. There is not a brilliant writer of the past century that adheres to the dogmatic ideas of strict grammatical construction. Charles Dickens was noted for his disregard of these rules. Shakespeare defied the strict rules of grammatical construction. The soliloquy of "Hamlet," which has always been extolled in terms of admiration, might, from the same character of review utilized by our contemporary, be said to be a mass of absurdities and mixed metaphors. The same rules that are invoked against us would apply to that famous soliloquy. Metaphor and flourishes of rhetoric have a very wide range with all writers, and the application of rules does not apply. The expression of ideas in that form which catches the public eye and ear is the one that addresses itself to the true literary world. There is scarcely an article written, but, if taken up and placed under the crucial tests laid down in our modern grammars, would come under the pedantic ban. Why, this effusion of our contemporary is a fitting illustration of this statement, both from literary and grammatical standpoints. Taking a sentence from this fearfully and wonderfully constructed criticism, we defy any person, literary or otherwise, to comprehend what is meant. Here it is:

But if we plead guilty to hypercriticism of error that may be chargeable in justice to the proof-reader, the scapegoat of many a literary sinner, it cannot be charged that it is capacious to suggest, in response to the editorial inquiry in the next sentence, "What will we say?" that no one could have answered the conundrum, except the literary Cheap-John who propounded it, since he (possibly) knew. Had the question been "What shall we say," the world with propriety might have replied that "silence is golden." It is not proposed to "cite attention" to all the china-smashing by our contemporary's apprentice, but it is pardonable to call attention to the grammatical fact that "queries" do not, except perhaps in the THEMIS office, "follows."

Our neighbors should look well to themselves ere they find fault with others. "A man must serve a time to every trade save censure; critics are ready made." The object of our review of the state series of school books was not to find fault with their literary merit, but to disclose the impractical and absurd questions that are propounded to children of tender age. Thus it will appear that our contemporary's criticism was indeed hypercritical in the extreme. Certain it is that our review was the truth, and written in such a manner as to reach the intelligence of our community.

SHAKESPEARE-BACON.

Recent Skeptical Literature—Donnelly's Cipher a Failure—Shakespeare is Shakespeare for all Time.

[Written for THEMIS by B. Collins, of Chico, Cal.]

PART IV.

The author of the "cipher" says Bacon was a poet. Sir Philip Sydney, a contemporary and eulogist of Bacon, does not call him a poet, though he does say he "warbled in prose." There is not anything to show that he was. The few pieces of poetry which are said to have been composed by him are the emanations of a boeotian muse. They indeed stand as proof that Bacon was neither born nor made a poet. Does he in his "Essays," or in any of his acknowledged works, substantiate the assertion from what is found therein. Can there be produced from them, voluminous as they are, anything even remotely approaching the following in poetic imagery:

" * * * She never told her love,
But let concealment, like a worm i' th' bud,
Feed on her damask cheek; she pined in thought,
And sat like Patience on a monument,
Smiling at Grief."—Twelfth Night.

In vain may we search Bacon and the ancients for so complete and beautiful an expression of the passions. This is an image cut by a master-hand in Parian marble. In further support of his theory, Mr. Donnelly offers the following:

Again, it is plain that the writer of the play had been in Scotland. His description and his knowledge of local names and their pronunciation show this. There is no record that Shakespeare was ever in Scotland, but it is almost certain that Bacon was there to visit King James."

"Almost" is good. There is no record that Bacon was ever there. Shakespeare could have learned much of Scotland from "Her Majesty's players," sent by Elizabeth to Scotland, and with whom he was connected. Of course, London, like any great city, would have many Scotch residents or visitors, men of intelligence, from whom "local names" could have been obtained, with their correct pronunciation, and from whom many historical and traditional facts could be derived. Facts concerning a country can be secured without traveling in it. Raphael Hollinshed, many years before Shakespeare began to write his plays, had made a translation of Hector Boece's history of Scotland. From this work it is known that Shakespeare took the plot and plan of Macbeth. He also says that—"It is plain that the author of the plays must have visited Italy, which Bacon did, but not Shakespeare."

Many of the editors of Shakespeare's works are disposed to think that he did, and it is this absence that the poet Spenser is thought to refer to in one of his poems. The fact is not material at any rate. It is known that Bacon was in France. I have yet been unable to find when he was in Italy. It was not necessary to have been in Italy to describe the country, the habits and customs of the people. The habits and customs of the old Romans have been faultlessly depicted in the plays, and these, of course, were obtained from history. From the novels, histories and metrical romances of Italy, all the facts about Italy contained in the plays could have been procured. Translations of these into English were numerous, and formed no inconsiderable part of Shakespeare's "little library." D'Israeli says "there was a vast multitude of them." Preceding the time of Shakespeare English authors were numerous, and there was "a great supply of books." Among them were works of fiction, histories and philosophical writings, translated from the French and Italian. In "chapter ii," we are told that Shakespeare was a very naughty, bad man in many respects. He is there charged with being a "fornicator." Sir William Davenant, who was named after him, is said to have been his illegitimate son. Sir William became eminent in letters, and was a warm eulogist of Shakespeare. If the statement be true it can only effect Shakespeare's moral character, and tends no more to prove that Bacon wrote "Shakespeare," than would the fact that Benjamin Franklin had an illegitimate son called William, tend to prove that his works were written by Samuel Adams. The same chapter says he was a "usurer." Admit him to have been such, are we to accept this as evidence that he could not have written the dramas? Mr. Donnelly seems to have searched Bacon's works thoroughly, but upon this subject he fails to quote from them what he said about it. When the divines of his day were preaching against the "detestable sin of usury," he declared that "the suppression of usury is only fit for an Utopian government." He also says that Shakespeare was an "oppressor of the poor." This assertion is proofless. There is evidence that he contributed to the wants of the poor, and he remembered them in his will. He also says that he was "a liar, a forger of pedigrees, in order to obtain a coat-of-arms to which he had no right." The Herald's College did grant and confirm to him a coat-of-arms by reason of the deserts and rewards of his ancestors. No amount of lying could have obtained the distinction. Moreover, it would require all the magnifying power of Lick's telescope to discover the pertinency of this statement to the subject. While Shakespeare may have at times deviated from an exact moral perpendicular, he was not guilty of those gross irregularities, moral obliquities and crimes which cling to and so taint Bacon's reputation that he has been styled the "meanest of mankind."

Mr. Donnelly also complains of Shakespeare's style of writing, and compares it with that of Ben Jonson and Inigo Jones, and it is hinted that he could not write at all. Shakespeare may not have written as legibly as others, but in volume one of the "Cyclopedia of English Literature," edited by Robert Chambers, 1847, will be found a specimen of the manner in which he wrote his name. It is not "clumsily written," but is in a neat, plain, distinct and unhurried style; nearly if not so good as that of Jonson and Jones, and equally as good as that of Bacon found in the same volume. Writing poorly or writing well has nothing to do with proving the "theory." Napoleon wrote a miserable scrawl, but he was a great captain; and Horace Greeley wrote an almost indecipherable hand, but he was a great editor and author. All of Shakespeare's extant signatures show that he wrote a good hand, and of this fact we have some proof from the ridicule which in Hamlet (act 5, scene 2) he throws upon those who affected to write ill.

"I once did hold it as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair."

The author of the "cipher" also alludes to the orthography of Shakespeare's name, and says that it is a thing important to note that there is a difference between Shakespeare and Shakspeare. There was at that period no settled orthography, and names were indifferently spelt. The register of the Guild of St. Anne, of Knoble, from 1407 to 1535, shows repetitions of the name during the reigns of Henry VI, Edward IV, Richard III, Henry VII and Henry VIII, Mary Shakspeare's near residents at that early date in Warwickshire and adjoining counties. In the register are found the names of Thomas Shakspeare, Thomas Shacsper, John Shakspeare, Richard Shaksper and William Shakspeare. In an action at law against Shakespeare's father, in 1555, the name is spelt John Shakspeare. The name is also spelt Shaksper, Shaxpere, while Shakespeare's name in the marriage license, issued to him and Anna Hathaway, is spelt Shagspere. In the body of Shakespeare's will the name is spelt Shakspeare, while it is endorsed Shakspeare. Names at that time were spelt principally by sound or by ear, as they are often to day. Mr. D'Israeli in his "Curiosities of Literature," in an article on the "orthography of names," says, among many curious facts cited:

"As late as in 1660, a Dr Groone was at such a loss to have his name pronounced rightly that he tried six different ways of writing it, as appears by printed books. * * * But in his will at the Commons he signs W. Croone. * * * Oldy's * * * has traced his family name through a great variety of changes, and sometimes found it at such a variance that the person indicated would not appear to have belonged to the family. * * * The family name of the Knevetts was written in six or seven different ways. * * * And the name of Villers was spelt fourteen different ways in the deeds of that family. We all remember the day when a violent literary controversy was opened, nor is it yet closed, respecting the spelling of our poet's name. One great editor persisted in his triumphant discovery by printing Shaksper, while another would only partially yield Shakspeare; but all parties seemed willing to drop the usual and natural derivation of his name, in which we are surely warranted, from a passage from a contemporary writer, who alludes by the name to a conceit of his own of the martial spirit of the poet. * * * That persons themselves did not attend to the accurate writing of their own names, which they changed sometimes capriciously, and sometimes with anxious nicety. * * * Mr. Colman says the poet's name is pronounced in his own country with the first a short, * * * which proves that the orthoepy rather than the orthography of a person's name was most attended to. Another remarkable instance of this sort is the name of Sir Walter Rawley, which I am myself uncertain how to write. Rawley's name was spelt by himself and by his contemporaries in all sorts of ways. We find it Raleigh, Raleigh, Rawleigh, Rawley and Rawly. * * * Thus our ancient personal names were written down by the ear." And it might be added that this has been the chief agency in the modification of names.

Mr. Donnelly, not satisfied with a personal attack against Shakespeare's reputation as a man, charges him with being a "papist." The charge is groundless. The author of the plays he claims was of the Protestant faith, or a free thinker. Shakespeare certainly was not a graceless zealot, and neither mode of faith seemed to disturb him. This is the authority cited:

"On the authority of a vicar of Stratford, 57/79 years after his death, the latter (Shakespeare) died a papist."

This is the only evidence; the report of a vicar. Shakespeare most likely was not an adherent of any church. The children of John Shakespeare, father of the poet, were all born between 1558 and 1580, and were baptized at the "ordinary and established place of worship in the parish." The records show this, and as an evidential fact must outweigh the report of some vicar. No writer of ordinary prudence and shrewdness expecting his plays to receive the sanction and favor of the Queen—of the Government—would insert anything antagonistic to the creed that was in the ascendant. "Henry VIII," as has heretofore been shown, was written about thirteen years after Bacon was "forty," or after his "struggling period," when he quit writing for the stage. In act v, scene 4, of the play, in the prophecy of Cranmer, is an expression made at the christening of Queen Elizabeth, which shows that the writer was not opposed to the Reformation completed during the reign of the Queen.

"In her days * * * * *
God shall be truly known."

Chapter III of the "cipher" says:

Shakspears was a poacher, a drunkard, an undutiful son and a negligent father.

In common with others, Shakespeare may have indulged on special occasions in drinking. I have yet to see it stated by any one except the "great cipher" that he was a "drunkard." Nor is the statement made in this connection true, that "he appears to have died as he lived, his death being the result of a three days' drunken bout with Drayton and Jonson." The assertion cannot be authenticated. Three months before his death he prepared his will, which may be taken as a circumstantial fact that he was admonished of an approaching, if not of a speedy dissolution. Jonson and Drayton did visit Shakespeare, but is it not strange that two such illustrious writers would journey from London to Stratford to get drunk with a man who could scarcely write his name; who had neither wit nor honor; who was a poor, third-rate player—a nobody? Was that their sole object in visiting Stratford? Who believes it was? Drayton was a Warwickshire man, and had distinguished himself in every species of poetry. Ben Jonson had won immortality as a dramatist, and they, full of honor and fixed in fame, desirous of the company of him whom they had learned to love and revere, to enjoy his wit and conversation, paid him a visit at his home at Stratford; the home of his youth; the place of his birth, where he had retired to enjoy these comforts and pleasures, the independence and tranquillity his genius and industry had secured. Instead of being an "undutiful son," "he was a good one; his parents shared his prosperity; he helped them with his purse; he redeemed his mother's mortgaged property in 'Green Arden,' and, purchasing a large and pleasant dwelling in his native place, brought his parents home to dwell there." His family was well provided for. When his means enabled him he purchased "New Place," adjoining which was a large tract of land, and where his family resided. His oldest and favorite daughter, Susanna, married an eminent physician of Stratford, and it is a well known fact that she inherited a large share of her father's wit. Judith may not have been so well informed; why not is not known. He made ample provisions for all in his will. Mr. Donnelly says that Shakespeare only willed his wife his "second best bed." This is true; but the second best bed, it has been suggested, he and his wife jointly occupied, and for this reason would be more acceptable to her. Mr. Donnelly would have it understood that this was all she received of her husband's estate, and by stating but a part of the truth attempts to leave a stigma upon the reputation of Shakespeare. "The great bulk of Shakespeare's property," says Mr. Knight, in his Pictorial Shakespeare, "being freehold, the widow, by the ordinary operation of the law of England, would be entitled to what is legally known by the term dower."

But Shakespeare was a "poacher." Some writers do not give much credence to the story. It is probably true that he committed some offense at Charlecote, in connection with some other young men, which gave umbrage to Sir Thomas Lucy. Likely in fun and frolic they did take a deer. Game poaching was then common, though against the law, but was not thought any more serious than we would now consider the raiding by a band of school boys of an orchard or a melon patch. But this circumstance, which is paraded by the "great cipher" to smirch the reputation of Shakespeare, happens to be one of the internal evidences of his authorship of the plays. For his participation in this affair the "Justice" is said to have pursued him with much anger; not so much, indeed, for poaching a "pretty, pleasing pricket," as for nailing up at the park gate of Charlecote a satirical effusion against him. This is a stanza of it:

"A parliament member, a justice of peace,
At home a poor scarecrowe, at London an asse,
If lowsie is Lucy, as some volke miscale it,
Then Lucy is lowsie, whatever befall it:
He thinks himself great,
Yet an asse in his state
We allow by his ears with asses to mate.
If Lucy is lowsie, as some volke miscale it,
Sing lowsie Lucy, whatever befall it."

This flagitious rhyme against so powerful a personage, a country squire and member of parliament, with attendant reasons hurried his retirement from Stratford. Aubrey, who wrote soon after Shakespeare's death, says in addition to this that he was inclined naturally to poetry and acting, and was anxious to go to London. Now, if we turn to the "Merry Wives of Windsor," (act 1, sc. 1) there we shall find the same thrust made at Sir Thomas Lucy as was made in the ballad. There mention is made of deer stealing by Falstaff; of the "dozen white luses" by Slender, and of the "dozen white lowses" by Sir Hugh Evans. Sir Thomas Lucy is characterized as "Justice Swallow," and he is given nearly the same coat of arms as the Lucys possessed. Shakespeare also, in his inimitable sketch in the second part of Henry IV, characterizes him as a country "justice," under the name of "Shallow," while other allusions are made, though indirect, yet broad enough to indicate who is meant.

These allusions are so apparent that there is no mistaking the fact that Shakespeare inserted them for the purpose of ridiculing the "justice" who had spitefully pursued him, principally on account of the pasquinade. The question naturally arises, did Bacon have any difficulty with Sir Thomas Lucy (at or near Stratford) that would lead him to thus hold Sir Thomas up to public derision?

It is urged that Shakespeare was uneducated; was not a scholar like Ben Jonson and Bacon, and therefore could not have written the plays. Without stopping here to show that he had fair educational advantages it is only necessary to assert one or two instances, though they are numerous where individuals have achieved enduring fame who had but limited school facilities. Benjamin Franklin became an author, statesman, philosopher and diplomat, though in fact in his youth he scarcely received any tuition from schools. Horace Greeley had but few better advantages, and yet he has left for all time his name upon the historic pages of his country. It often takes a great deal of "education" or artificial accomplishments to "form the common mind." Colonel Ingersoll's late eulogy upon Abraham Lincoln contains some very pointed facts upon this subject. He says:

"Lincoln never finished his education. * * * You have no idea how many men are spoiled by what is called education. For the most part colleges are where pebbles are polished and diamonds are dimmed."

Pope "lisped in numbers" before he was a dozen years old; and Chatterton, the "wonderful boy," earned imperishable fame before he was eighteen. Genius is often early developed and will assert itself independent of schools or precedents. These are facts as hoary as the ages of time. Shakespeare was given by nature what colleges and schools do not possess—genius. All the training of all the schools have never produced four such illustrious characters as Shakespeare, Franklin, Greeley and Lincoln. They all excelled in an eminent degree in the use of the English language. As writers, orators, and publishers they are famous—whence their diplomas!

An Early Execution.

We had an interesting conversation a few days ago with two early residents on the Cosumnes river, in reference to the mob execution of William Lomax, which occurred there May 14, 1855. He was hanged for the murder of Frederick Bohle, who was killed on the 7th of that month. It seems that Bohle was a stock raiser and occupied a cabin about a mile above the old Daylor ranch. Some parties, who desired to buy cattle, sought Bohle and found him dead. He had been cut with a knife and chopped with an axe, and the indications were that he had made a desperate struggle for life. They gave the alarm at Grimshaw's house. W. R. Grimshaw and Oliver Sanders went out and secured the body. Lomax had been seen about the premises and suspicion fastened upon him. He was arrested in the city of Sacramento and taken to the scene of the murder. A popular court was organized in front of the old Daylor house, and Lomax put upon trial. He asked for time to produce a man named Van Trees, with whom he said he had passed the night before the murder, at a ranch on the American river. Time was granted, but the people of Michigan Bar and Cook's Bar took the accused, fearing that he might escape. They promised to bring him back when Van Trees would be produced. They fulfilled their promise. On the resumption of the trial Van Trees stated that Lomax had been with him at his place, but that when he left he had stolen a mule. Lomax was then convicted and hanged on a tree in front of Grimshaw's place. This tree was cut down about three or four years ago. This was one of the earliest mob executions in the county outside of Sacramento city.

Book Chat.

The public is itself a helper to the news reporter. There exists a disposition on the part of newspaper men to be skeptical of all that is told them, to such an extent that they assume a character of absolute rudeness in their search for news. Facts are what the reputable paper wants, and the agents of these papers in their search often seem to transgress the laws of privacy and propriety. As a rule the gentlemanly reporter, upon making his business known, with a respectful request for information, among our American people, will be accorded any reasonable request. It is only the scavenger of the alleged press that abuses the generous prerogative. The following from the Mail and Express shows to what unusual lengths reporters often go:

"A few days ago it was announced in a dozen city papers that a lady living in Brooklyn had an heiress, or some other interesting creature, confined in her house. Lots of people had—allegedly—heard the screams of the captive, and with various bits of coloring and presumptive proof the story was made quite alarming. Within six hours after the publication of the story a dozen reporters had descended on the house. The lady whose house was thus assailed and her daughter received the reporters. They were evidently people of refinement, and their indignant denials of the story would have convinced any one but a newspaper man. But at least half of the reporters who called were sufficiently exacting to want absolute proof, and accordingly explained that if they might be allowed to go over the house they could deny the story of their own knowledge. So through the house they were shown, the young lady acting as guide. No two of them were at the house at the same time, and hence the young lady had to go the rounds of the rooms six or seven times. Each reporter looked into every room, opened every closet, examined the walls for signs of staples to which the alleged heiress might have been tied, and gravely stumbled around the cellar. After this search each one assured the young lady of his complete conviction of the falsity of the published story. Some people would have resented the very request of the reporters to look over the house as an insult. The ladies in question were gifted with better sense, and smilingly accepted the newspaper men's apologies for the seeming intrusion into which their duty to their respective papers forced them."

In England, if we are to judge by report, men of the upper classes would resent as impertinence the invasion of their private houses by reporters. The lower classes being suspicious of all such approaches, would refuse to answer any questions or give any information.

A newspaper correspondent from Siam declares that all the women in that country wear short hair, and the babies smoke cigarettes. The converse of the proposition would seem to be more in accord with the former history of Siam. Newspaper men are, however, inventive geniuses.

Gabriel Harrison, a veteran actor, will soon publish a work to be entitled Edwin Forrest, the Actor and the Man. The edition will be limited. There will be illustrations of Forrest in some of his greatest characters, also Edmund Kean, Quin and Barry.

Mary Fiske, who recently departed this life, wrote many valuable articles. They are to be compiled in book form, by the New York Dramatic Mirror. The work will be entitled "The Giddy Gusher Papers."

Henry W. Grady, the noted Southern orator and writer is now engaged in writing a book on the South. Mr. Grady is a bright man and keen observer of passing events.

Madame Mutsu, wife of the Japanese minister at Washington, is translating a Japanese novel into English. Her translation will be the first of the kind ever made.

There is a new book called A Bottle of Champagne. It ought to sparkle, and doubtless will be opened often.

Professional Chat.

Among the very early events in the territorial days of California is an amusing episode in the life of General George Stoneman, late Governor of this State. This particular reminiscence might be entitled "How Bill Siddons Saved Stoneman's Life." Lieutenant Stoneman in 1848 was in command of a detachment which was temporarily stationed at Mare Island, then only a small station for supplies for the Pacific squadron. Bill Siddons was one of the command. During their stay at these quarters, supplies, particularly anything like spirits, ran pretty low. A vessel, however, soon arrived, and among other commissary supplies were a few cases of gin. Even this was a welcome to the soldiers, who had long been without any stimulants, other than the bracing ocean air. The boys, for boys they nearly all were, not even excepting Lieutenant Stoneman, made a raid on the commissary and purchased a goodly supply of gin at $4 per bottle. Now, it was a fact that there was a large number of wild hogs on the island and in the vicinity, so, after imbibing freely of the juniper juice, nearly all of the company started out for a frolic hunting wild hogs. A big camp fire was built, and Lieutenant Stoneman and Bill Siddons remained in camp, not neglectful of the bottle of gin, however. They drank enough to make them both boozy, when Lieutenant Stoneman started to walk toward the camp fire, and being very full, fell forward into the fire. Siddons, though loaded himself, saw the danger, made a rush for Stoneman, and raised him up and out of danger, when they both tumbled backward and slept in that position until daylight. That's how Siddons saved for the nation a great general, and for California a Governor.

Courts in early days were very crude in their manner of adjudicating the rights of litigants. Justices' courts are proverbial at all times for their quaint way of administering the laws. It is before one of these august tribunals that we recall a case that occurred at Mormon Island in this county in 1851, in which A. P. Catlin perpetrated a great trick upon S. W. Sanderson, then a young attorney of Coloma, El Dorado county. It seemed that Sanderson's clients were working an old river bed, and constructing a dam for that purpose. Catlin desired to stop this work, and conceived the idea of hoodwinking the old justice of the peace to grant an injunction to stop the work. Acting upon the thought he gravely proceeded to secure the injunction, and had it served and enforced. Sanderson was sent for, and came before the justice with his books and tried to convince him that he had no jurisdiction of such cases, and appealed to Catlin not to impose upon the court. Catlin looked wise and approvingly of the court's procedure, which made the old justice obdurate and he stuck to his injunction. Sanderson left for the county seat in a towering rage to secure the proper relief, but before he could secure the same the object Catlin had in view had been accomplished by the justice's injunction.

Eminent statesmen and crowned heads are often ardent chess players. It is said that the present Pope of Rome is an enthusiastic as well as excellent chess player. Long before he was elevated to the highest station in the religious world, he and a priest named Father Giella were adversaries over the game of chess. The latter being a hot-tempered man, sometimes became angered and excited on the games and their results. The Pope took these fits of anger good naturedly, and would quietly admonish the hasty priest upon the virtues of resignation. It was easy for the Pope to be liberal with his good advice, because he was the winner of the games. The acts and sayings of the Pope when he was the defeated are not given. It is always easy for the successful man to be magnanimous and generous—particularly in advice.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Little Lord Fauntleroy company will extend its engagement so as to give Sacramento four performances, two matinees and two evenings.

Manager Hall has entered into contracts with E. H. Southern for the presentation of Lord Chumley and The Highest Bidder, in this city.

Edward Harrigan, when not engaged upon his plays, takes pleasure in hunting through second-hand clothing stores, or driving bargains with Irish or Italian laborers for their remarkable garments that are used in his stage representations.

A new scheme has been introduced in the East to obtain from foolish young people their coin. This is for professional athletes to teach young ladies how to walk. It is a prerequisite for the stage-struck maidens.

Antiope is the name of a new ballet spectacle to be presented in New York during the coming summer. Most of the new plays nowadays have to "ante up" before they are presented. In sporting parlance you have to "ante up" before you play.

It is said that Mrs. Brown-Potter has been amusing Harlem with Camille. The audience laughs at the earlier scenes. Is not this a singular review of that tragedy? Perhaps it is that peculiar climax of the tragic scenes becoming comedy. There is only a step from the sublime to the ridiculous.

Another society woman will go upon the stage. Virginia Knox, a Pittsburg girl, who married an Italian count, is now obliged to earn her living, so she adopts the stage. The play she proposes to utilize is one that will illustrate the folly and affliction of an American girl who sells herself for a title.

There will be plenty of amusement here during the month. The following attractions are booked: Grismer-Davies Company, April 15th and 16th; Nelson's Variety Company, April 19th and 20th; Little Tycoon Opera Company, April 24th, 25th, 26th and 27th; Little Lord Fauntleroy, April 29th, 30th and 31st; Bunch of Keys, May 2d and 3d.

A realistic play, founded upon actual experience, written by a man by the name of Hal Reed in Minnesota, and who served a term in the State Prison of that State, is soon to be presented to the public. The title is The Ex-Convict, and was written while the author was behind the bars. He claims he was innocent, and this play is the story of an innocent man being the victim of circumstances. It is said that Maud Granger will create and assume the leading lady's part.

It is not just to Madame Jananschek or fair to the public to commend her longer as an artist. She has advanced past the mile post of her success and is now fast declining in her dramatic powers. She still possesses the requisite knowledge, but has lost the power of execution to such an extent that a comparison with her former greatness would be most damaging to her. Let Madame Janauschek retire on her former well-deserved laurels. For the company which pretended to give support, it is charitable to not mention them.

Phoebe Davies and Jos. R. Grismer, with their excellent company, will occupy the Metropolitan Theater on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings of next week. Monday and Tuesday the play Forgiven, will be presented; Wednesday, Fairfax, and Thursday The World Against Her. Jos. Grismer is a fine actor and a general favorite. Of little Phoebe Davies too much cannot be said. She is one of the brightest artists on the American stage. Versatile to a degree that is well known upon the modern stage. The support includes some sterling stock actors.

From the Omaha Bee we glean the following reminiscence of Col. Wm. E. Sinn, theatrical manager for a quarter of a century. Said he: "Lawrence Barrett was my leading man one season in Washington at a salary of $150 a week. Since then I have paid him as his portion of one week's business, the neat little sum of $4,700." Col. Sinn claims to have been the first to bring out Genevieve Ward in Forget Me Not. Also put Alice Harrison, Billy Emerson and Frank Cushman on the stage. Emerson and Cushman were errand boys in his Chestnut-street Theater, Philadelphia, at $4 a week. Then their pay was raised to $8 per week. "Subsequently I have handed over to Billy Emerson, as his earnings in my house for six days, as much as $3,000.

Nym Crinkle gives this definition of an actor:

An actor is a person who puts imaginary deeds, imaginary character, and imaginary sentiments and emotions into words and acts in his own person.

Every human being can be and is to some extent and at some time an actor.

An artist is a person who puts these things into words and actions conformably to a law of beauty.

No human being can do this without thought, culture, development.

In proportion as thought and culture are applied to acting the actor becomes an artist.

Acting may be the spontaneous exercise of faculties in a child.

Art is the conscious endeavor of the intellect to realize an ideal.

An entertaining account of Dion Boucicault's first venture as a dramatist, written by himself, appears in the North American Review for April. The young fellow, then 18 years of age, was struggling for existence, and wrote under an assumed name a little farce, A Lover by Proxy, and sent it to Charles Mathews the great comedian. Mathews supposed it was written by a person to his order, and through this error he met young Boucicault, was favorably impressed with him, but held out little inducement for his ultimate success. Mathews suggested that if there could be a five-act comedy with a character suited to him, similar to that named in the little farce, it would be just what the stage needed. Boucicault departed, and about a month later called on Mr. Mathews again, at the same time depositing a roll of manuscript. The old comedian was greatly astonished at this, but took the manuscript, read it, submitted it to others, and finally presented it upon the Covent Garden stage. This was the introduction to London Assurance, which marked a great success, and assured the future reputation of the author as a dramatist. The original title given by the author was Out of Town. Madame Vestris, Mathews' wife, changed the title, also the dramatis personae, so as to substitute Sir Harcourt Courtly in place of Sir William Dazzle. This was forty years ago, and Boucicault is still writing for the press and dramas.

State Text-Books.

Since the establishment of this paper it has taken a decided stand on the subject of the policy of the state printing and publishing school books for its children, and as to the unsatisfactory manner in which the books have been compiled. We have made these points:

That the system of the state printing school text-books is one of the best things that has ever been inaugurated.

That the private school book publishers have in the past expended money, through their agents, to corrupt members of the legislature, and of school boards.

We have stated that the appropriations for the compilation of these books have been munificent; and have charged that the people have not obtained value received from the gentlemen who have drawn this money and attempted to compile the text-books. We have called attention to glaring and unpardonable blunders in the history—where the names of Edwin M. Stanton, Wm. M. Evarts and James W. Marshall have been incorrectly given—to errors which do not creep into the ephemeral literature of the day.

We have charged that the grammar seems to be a deeply studied effort to confuse the pupil. We now state that in the public schools in this city it has been found that the state grammar is an impracticable text-book for younger pupils, and that a preparatory grammar, issued by private parties is in use.

We have casually criticised the third reader; of the absurdity of its compilation we have not yet touched.

We have intimated that an official investigation should be instituted of the matter of the compilation of these important books, and have suggested that Governor Waterman take steps to look into the matter. The people have a right to know who the men are who are making these compilations; what their former business connections have been; and whether they are sufficiently educated to do the work assigned to them.

In Sacramento city we have a magnificent corps of educators. From them could be selected compilers who would prepare for the state, at a comparatively insignificant expense, books that would be valuable, and from which the children could be educated.

That some of the men who have engaged in this work of compilation have allowed errors that seem to be inexcusable is apparent; that the people of California should have light shed on this matter is but simple justice.

No one desires that there should be a return to the old regime. The people will rebel against any official imposition in so important a matter as the furnishing of the books for the education of the young.

No intelligent person can misunderstand the position of this paper. It is not antagonistic to the system of state text-books. We, however, are justly and fairly criticising the manner of compilation alone.

Invalid Legislation.

It is now claimed by some of the most learned and able lawyers in the State that many of the enactments of the recent legislature are void, because not passed in accordance with the provisions of the constitution. This question was raised on the validity of the act to provide a permanent site for the California home for the care and training of feeble-minded children. It is urged that an amendment to the title of any bill which changes the subject matter or which embodies a different purpose from that contained in the original title, necessitates a re-reading of the bill three times in each house, the same as an original bill. The act mentioned having been thus amended and not so read as required by the constitution, renders the passage under these circumstances nugatory. It is also claimed that the legislature has no power to delegate its power by creating roving commissions, to select sites for public buildings or otherwise, and at the same time in the same act declaring that the place or places so to be selected shall be adopted as the site or sites.

Concert.

The Mendelssohn Quintet Club, in conjunction with the McNeill Club, gave a splendid concert on Friday evening to a delighted audience. Our little song bird, Mrs. John McNeill, was in excellent voice, and fairly charmed her hearers. The numbers of the Quintet Club were superbly rendered. The McNeill Club gave fine support.

History of Folsom.

The Folsom Telegraph of the 6th inst. gives some data in relation to the history of the place of its publication. The statement contains some inaccuracies, to which we call attention, simply that history should be published as correctly as possible. The first settlement of that locality was at Negro Bar, which was between the present site of Folsom and the American river. In 1849 some negroes began to mine there, and from that circumstance the bar took its name. Their success at mining caused a flocking of miners from all quarters, and in 1851 there were over 700 people there. Large quantities of gold have been taken out of the Bar. Ex-Supervisor James S. Meredith opened the first hotel and store, both in the same building, at the Bar, in April, 1850. William A. Davidson opened the second store, but shortly afterward sold out to A. A. Durfee and brother. A few months later Rowley & Richardson opened the third store, and these were the principal business houses until Folsom was located.

Folsom was laid out by Theodore D. Judah, R. Chenery and Samuel C. Bruce, for Captain Joseph L. Folsom, in 1855. Town lots were sold January 17, 1856, at public auction in Sacramento, by Colonel J. B. Starr, auctioneer. All of the lots were disposed of at that sale, and the town grew rapidly. On February 22, 1856, the Sacramento Valley Railroad, the pioneer road of this State, was completed to Folsom and opened, and free excursion trains were run there from Sacramento. At the opening of the road there were about 1,000 people present at Folsom, including Governor J. Neely Johnson, Supreme Justices Murray and Terry, Henry S. Foote (ex-Governor of Mississippi), and many other prominent men. The guests were wine and dined, and speeches were made by State Senator Wilson Flint, Colonel J. C. Zabriske, Governors Foote and Johnson, Captain (now General) William T. Sherman, and C. K. Garrison, president of the railroad company. A great ball was given in the evening, in a building erected expressly for that purpose, of dimensions 30 by nearly 100 feet long. The floor managers were Judge A. C. Monson, H. P. Wakelee, Feris Forman and George T. Bromley. The Sacramento guests started home on a special train at 5 o'clock in the morning.

In 1857 a road was projected to run from Folsom to Marysville, by a company called the California Central, and of which Colonel Charles L. Wilson, now of Nord, was the owner. In 1861 trains ran from Folsom to Lincoln. Afterward the road was absorbed by the Central Pacific Company, and the track between Folsom and Roseville was torn up. That portion of the road from Roseville to Lincoln is now a part of the California and Oregon overland road.

During the mining era Folsom was one of the prosperous towns of the State, but, like the most of California towns, suffered severely from extensive fires. After the decadence of mining the town had a severe relapse, and a few years ago was visited by a very destructive fire. The burned district has, however, been rebuilt, and substantial bricks have taken the place of the former wooden structures. Of late years the town and surrounding country has entered on an era of substantial prosperity. There is no doubt that the completion of the great water power canal will make it the most extensive manufacturing town in the State. In the line of fruit and grape raising, the lands about Folsom are equal to any in the State, and there is near there one of the most extensive vineyards in the world. Colonel Folsom, the projector of the town, died at the Mission San Jose, in Alameda county, July 19th, 1855. Judah was an enthusiastic railroad civil engineer; to him more than to any other man is due the credit for the passage of the first overland railroad bill by Congress. He did not, however, live to see the realization of the great work, for he died in the city of New York in November, 1863.

Fatal Accident.

Dennis McCarthy, a native of Ireland, aged 49 years, who was employed by J. R. Williams, on the Marysville road, while hauling for his employer a load of lumber from this city on Friday, fell from the wagon about a mile from Mr. Williams' house and was run over. He was found a couple of hours after the accident under the wagon, and died at 12 yesterday morning. He had been in the State but five months, and leaves a wife and four children at Melbury, Mass., and a sister, Mrs. Julia Fitzsimmons, at the Twelve-mile House. Coroner Clark, after a full examination, determined an inquest unnecessary. McCarthy when found was conscious, and said that he had fallen asleep, and while asleep had fallen from the wagon. He had been separated from his sister, had searched for her twenty years, and had only discovered her whereabouts five months ago.

One of the large wine firms of New York, which deals exclusively in California products, says it has disposed of this season over three million gallons of wine made in California.

SAMOAN NEWS.

SYDNEY, April 13.—The war-ship Olga brought the commander, two officers and thirty members of the crew of the Adler.

Kimberly has chartered the steamer Rock-ton to convey the crews of the Trenton and Vandalia to San Francisco.

The steamer Lubeck, which left Apia on the 2d inst., reports a large number of bodies recovered from the wrecked vessels, which have been buried at Apia.

The Lubeck brought the officers of the Eber, who will sail for Germany on the steamer Hapsburg.

About four hundred men were left to guard German interests at Samoa.

The Nipsic is reported to be without a propeller and rudder.

The Trenton and Adler are on the reef, full of water.

The hull of the Olga is sound, with the exception of a hole in the stern. Two plates were placed over this hole. The ship made no water coming here.

Henry F. Poor, in a letter, gives the following account of the storm and its results as witnessed by him from the shore:

During the night it blew great guns. Through my windows I could make out the lights of the war ships, all safe at 5 A. M. My house, which you know is very strong built, was fairly trembling. I got out, and from the lee side of the house I could make out the Eber dragging into my passage slowly and surely. I succeeded in waking Paymaster Corioime and his clerk, Mr. Brown, and Lieutenant Pursell of the Nipsic, who occupied one of my cottages near by. We had scarcely assembled at my place before the Eber struck once, twice and then to the bottom. She was not a hundred yards from us; we could hear no voices. The howl of the gale was terrific. We got ropes and endeavored to stand on my wharf to help any of the poor unfortunates who were perhaps near us in the water. We sent natives, who then began to gather, up and down the beach, but could see no one. Four men and a junior officer were washed ashore in front of the United States Consulate, the only survivors of the seventeen persons aboard this ship. Her ram bow came up in a short time and drifted down in front of the Tuvili, where it is now lying.

About this time the bark Peter Godefroy, 450 tons, rode right over a large three-masted schooner, carrying away fore and mainmasts of the schooner and going to the bottom. The schooner drifted down and went ashore nearly where the Eber was last, at 7 A. M. The schooner Lily collided with the Nipsic and sank. Three small crafts came ashore and went to pieces.

THE NIPSIC.

Every effort was made by the captain of the Nipsic and officers to stay her fatal progress, but without avail. When she was so near that it seemed as if she could not last a moment, and her people must all be lost, her officers, after a consultation, threw fat grease, oil, etc., into her furnaces, slipped the cable and steamed for shore. The backwash from this reef kept her off. Part of the reef was actually under her. How she escaped is no less than a miracle. She was beached in front of the Tuvili, the seas breaking clear over her. Her bow was not more than 120 feet from shore. A hawser was soon stretched, and all would have been saved, but some one ordered the gig lowered and the forward tackle got foul. The stern tackle was lowered by the excited people, and the occupants thrown into the sea. Five were drowned or dashed to pieces by the propeller, which was kept going to keep the vessel in position. The Captain and Lieutenant Shearman were the last persons to leave the wreck.

TRYING TO GAIN THE SHORE.

The poor fellows from the wrecked ships would struggle toward shore, and for part of the distance the current would help them. When almost in our arms they would be whirled away in the dreadful current and never seen again.

The Samoans worked manfully. Two were drowned trying to save our men. At 6:10 P. M. when the sun went down, the remainder of the Vandalia's people were in the rigging. The noble Trenton, after having her fires put out, drifted in and would have gone on the reef close where the Eber was, but the wind fortunately shifted, when the spanker was set and her mizzen rigging manned. This course tailed her along the reef instead of on it. She drifted along and ran into the Vandalia. As the weather soon moderated the Trenton's officers, by means of rockets, got lines into the Vandalia's tops and rescued the survivors. The whole lot of shipwrecked mariners were landed the following day in safety. Since then the weather has been all that could be asked for.

The Veterans Reunion.

The Northern California Association of the Grand Army of the Republic will take place at Marysville on April 25th, 26th and 27th. It is expected that there will be a full representation from all the Posts in the Northern Association. Preparations have been made already for the proper reception of the visitors. These remissions foster the proper spirit and result in a closer friendship and brotherly feeling among members.

OLD HAVERLY LUCK.

The Lucky San Franciscos Defeat the Sacramentos.

The inauguration of Saturday games in this city yesterday was witnessed by an audience of 1,500 people, and from present indications their success is assured. The San Franciscos and the Sacramentos were the contending teams, and both played a very fair fielding game. The Sacramentos went first to the bat, and were retired in one, two, three order. The visitors were treated in like manner. No runs were scored until the third inning, when Newbert came to the bat and hit the first pitched ball over the left field fence for a clean home run. It was the longest hit ever made on the grounds, and the young short-stop was cheered to the echo. The only runs by Sacramento were made in this inning, when three tallies were scored, two of which were earned, by a combination of heavy and safe hitting. No runs were scored by the San Franciscos until the fourth inning, when a palpable error of McSorley's, on which a double play should have been made, allowed the runner to reach second. Captain Powers then came to the bat and drove the ball into the driveway for a home run, clearing the bases and tying the score.

The game dragged until the eighth inning, when the bay city boys bunched their hits and virtually won the game in this inning. The contest was by no means a brilliant one, although very few errors were made. The fielders of both teams seemed to be out of condition and played a very listless game. Krehmeyer played an excellent game at first, having twenty-one put-outs credited to him, without an error. He made some very neat stops of low-thrown balls, and fielded his position to perfection. Newbert carried off the batting honors of the day, a home run and three-bagger being to his credit. O'Day and McLaughlin played their usual good game in their respective positions. Young Hapeman occupied the box for the Sacramentos, and pitched what should have been a winning game if the fielders had played with more vim and dash at critical points of the game. The San Franciscos still retain their old "Haverly luck," and pulled the game out of the fire when other teams would surely have given up. Levy, their fielder, was considerably off in his fielding, making two of the errors credited to his side. All the San Franciscos are California boys, with the exception of their third baseman, Doyle, whom they imported from the East. He plays his position very poorly, however, and is no improvement on our California stock. He resorted to a very mean trick to prevent Newbert from scoring on a long drive to center field, for which he should have been heavily fined by umpire Sheridan. No player who resorts to low tricks to win a game will ever meet with the favor of a California audience, and all tricky players should take warning and play fair, honest ball. The San Franciscos are all great ball players, and play so well together that their chances for the pennant are at a premium. To-morrow the same clubs meet again, and we hope that the Sacramentos will have a lucky turn in their favor.

The following is the summary of the game:

BASEBALL NOTES.

The Lavensons have organized for the season of '89, and are prepared to meet any amateur team in the State.

Louis Baltz, the star twirler of the Lavensons, was born in St. Louis on the 26th day of August, 1870, and is now but 19 years of age. He is of medium build, being 5 feet 9 inches in height, and weighing about 160 pounds. He made his debut as an amateur pitcher last season with the Lavensons, and pitched so successfully for that team that he has been engaged by Manager Broich for the present season. He is called by his fellow-players "Cyclone" Baltz, owing to his terrific speed as a pitcher. Few amateurs have as bright a future as "Cyclone" Baltz.

Our contemporary the Record-Union employs the character "Phæton" to illustrate its criticism. Phæton has been the accepted term for centuries by all writers and historians, Phæton, the son of Phœbus, another title for Apollo, the god of the sun. When an obsolete aspirate is interpolated in the illustration, the grammatical construction can well be questioned. We live in a progressive age, neighbor. THEMIS is progressive.

The Year's Fruit Crop.

Eugene J. Gregory, Mayor of Sacramento, an extensive fruit-grower and dealer and member of the California Fruit Union, during a recent visit to San Francisco said to an Examiner representative, concerning the forthcoming fruit crop:

"I think our exports of deciduous fruits this year will amount to about 2,200 cars, or over 25 per cent more than last year. The fact is the crop is going to be a very heavy one. The weather has been good, and in about a month more, if everything holds about the same as now, the new crop will begin to come in. Apricots are a little light, but the acreage is large and will figure well. Peaches, cherries, plums and pears promise a heavy yield. Pigs are going to be a big crop. We have received advices from all over the State. On the Sacramento river a fine and varied crop is coming on. Pears are a little light at Vacaville. Otherwise there will be a large yield there. The season will be about as early as last. Maybe, if it is cool at night, it will be held back a little. The Fruit Union Directors have decided to establish agencies at Buffalo, San Antonio, Tex.; Louisville, Cincinnati and several other important points, so as to distribute the fruit all over the United States."

Death of Chas. Hooper.

Chas. Hooper, for over 11 years foreman of the boiler shop of the Southern Pacific works in this city, died at about 10:30 last night of an affection of the spine. He left the shops shortly before 11 A. M. Friday, on account of sickness. He leaves a wife and several children. Some six or seven years ago he lost six children by death. Mr. Hooper was a native of Massachusetts, and was aged about 47 years. He was one of the most popular foremen at the shops, and one of the oldest of the employees of the company here. His death will be sincerely regretted, not only by the members of his department, but by a large circle of friends.

"If I Was Only Your Mayor."

A poor old fellow, who had evidently seen the brighter side of life in the past, was locked up on a charge of being a wandering vagrant. His good nature caused his honor the police judge to withhold the commitment, and allow him to depart for other, and perhaps more congenial, climes. As he left the court-room he dropped a scrap of paper, upon which was written the following:

The bondholders I would deal with entirely fair,
Always guard the people's interests with care;

I'd compel the electric cars to be regularly run

Each day until 11 at night, from the rising of sun,

If I was only your mayor.

No hoodlums or statues should stand on the street,
To offend by their talk the ladies they meet;

All dens of infamy and vice I'd close,
And "bosses" and tricksters I'd quickly dispose,

If I was only your mayor.

Sober, honest men only on the police be placed,

That good government and society might not be disgraced;

The streets would be cleaned and sprinkled each day,

Public buildings and parks not allowed to decay,

If I was only your mayor.

Ordinances and laws people would learn to revere,

Streets, alleys and sidewalks kept decently clear;

Taxes and water rents reduced to lower rate,
And a new charter adopt at the earliest date,

If I was only your mayor.

CHess DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY L. F. GRIFFIN.

Contributions to this column are cordially solicited. All communications pertaining to chess should be addressed to L. F. Griffin, box 402.

There are many chess players in this vicinity who are interested in the "Muzio Gambit." For their benefit we give these variations. The following was published in the Boston Post some two years ago:

"This wonderful opening—of which it has been enthusiastically said that its practice will more thoroughly illustrate the true principles of chess than all the books extant—has recently developed a novel and brilliantly aggressive feature, which bids fair to establish the invincibility of the attack. As is well known, the Morphy variation, consisting of the sacrifice of the K Kt and K B, has long been admitted the strongest possible form of the gambit; but this line of attack has only been considered available when giving the odds of Q Kt, and as in that case white remains three pieces minus, this line of play has justly been denominated hazardous. By an ingenious manoeuvre—which can hardly be regarded in the light of an invention or discovery, as it simply consists in the transposition of the well known routine of opening the attack—white is enabled to advantageously sacrifice the K B and produce the identical position occurring in the Morphy variation, with the important consideration of retaining the powerful and immediate cooperation of Q Kt, e. g.:

White.	Black.
1—P to K 4	P to K 4
2—P to K B 4	K P takes P
3—Kt to K B 3	P to K Kt 4
4—K B to B 4	P to K Kt 5
5—Castles	Kt P takes Kt
6—K B takes P check	K takes K B
7—Q takes B 3d P	Q to K B 3
8—Q Kt to B 3	* * *

And against this line of attack, first indicated by Mr. F. K. Young, of Boston, the formation of a satisfactory defense will be found a matter of extreme difficulty."

Mr. Steinitz, in the December, 1886, International Chess Magazine, states that instead of 7—Q to K B 3 (black), 7—P to Q 3 (black) should be played, and the following continuation would be likely:

White.	Black.
7—* * *	P to Q 3
8—Q takes P check	Kt to K B 3
9—P to Q 4	Q Kt to B 3
10—P to K 5	P takes P
11—P takes P	Q to Q 5 ch.

And black should win.

If white should play 8—Q to R 5 check (white), K to K 2 (black); 9—R takes P (white), Q to K 1 (black), and the black king will gradually creep into security, either via Q 2 or Q 1.

We have not space to give further variations, but on a careful examination of above it will be found that 7—P to Q 3 (black) is an effectual defense against this new form of the once powerful Muzio.

The Sunday Chronicle, of San Francisco, prints a column article on chess players, which should be read by all interested in the game. The article contains a few inaccuracies. Mr. Steinitz is not the greatest blindfold chess player as stated, but on the contrary rarely plays blindfolded.

Mr. J. I. Blackburne, of London, is possibly the world's greatest blindfold player. Mr. S. Winawer is not of Russia, but a native of Germany. The article states that Herr Tchigorin, of Russia, was in San Francisco recently. Dr. J. H. Zukertort, a Russian by birth and a famous chess player, visited San Francisco in 1883, but we think Herr T—has never been in this country until he arrived in New York recently to participate in the world's tourney.

Play in the great tournament is still progressing, and Gunsberg, Blackburne, Burns and Tchigorin are in the lead.

The following game was played April 1st between Isidor Gunsberg, of England, known as "Mephisto," and Max Judd, of St. Louis, the popular Western champion.

Bravery Versus Indifference.

A story is told of two officers who were serving together in the Peninsular war, which illustrates this volitional control of the manifestation of a powerful emotion. One of them, whom I will call Capt. Smith, was remarkable for his bulldog bravery, which never failed him under any circumstances when mere animal courage was required. The other, Capt. Jones, was a good officer, but was thought by some to be deficient in the contempt of danger which is, after all, the least qualification for a soldier. The bullets were whistling around when Capt. Smith, riding up to Capt. Jones, who stood pale but collected at his post, said, with the inexcusable brusquerie to be expected of such a person:

"Capt. Jones, you look as if you were frightened!"

"Yes," replied Jones, "I am frightened, and if you were half as much frightened as I am you would run away."

When, therefore, we hear of people controlling their feelings it is not generally in reality that the feelings are held in subjection, but merely the exhibition of them. A person may possess the power of preserving his equanimity in the presence of circumstances calculated to arouse an emotion such as fear to the highest pitch, but is able to restrain himself from crying out or fainting or seeking safety in flight.

Still it is not to be doubted that to a certain extent the emotions are under the control of the will. A man may strengthen his emotions, lessen them, subdue them absolutely or create those which are not natural to him by the simple force of his will acting in accordance with his desires. The medical student whose horror at the sight of blood causes him to faint by lessening the action of his heart when he sees his first surgical operation, in a short time overcomes his repugnance, and after a while becomes a fearless surgeon. The soldier who in his first battle is so terrified that he exhibits the most unmistakable evidences of the mental agony he is suffering, perseveres until he is renowned for his gallantry and daring under the most tremendous fire. Courage, therefore, like other faculties, is susceptible of improvement; it can be educated to an almost unlimited extent, so that the veriest coward may be made as brave as Cesar.

Disease Often is Transmitted from Lip to Lip.

"One of the most pernicious of American habits," said a Philadelphia physician to a reporter for the Record, "is the common custom of passing around a plug of tobacco from one chewer to another. The moisture that is then transmitted from one man's lips to another's may, and often does, breed foul disease. I have seen men's faces fearfully contorted from the effects of this habit, though it is difficult to convince them that so great a matter has resulted from so simple a cause."

"Disease may lurk, too, in a postage stamp. It is a disagreeable practice at best to 'lick' stamps, but to touch with the tongue a stamp already touched by another tongue is positively dangerous. Stamps transmitted by mail inside a letter may often thus carry disease. The corner of a stamp is at first caused to adhere to the letter by the application of saliva by the sender, and then the receiver puts it to his tongue when he wishes to mail a letter. The original sender may have had a mucous patch upon his tongue, in which case the danger of contagion of blood disease is considerable. Throat and skin diseases may be similarly transmitted by saliva."

"A kiss, however, is a much more potent source of disease. Not only is promiscuous kissing of men and women to be condemned, but mothers should be careful about their babies' kisses. The contact of lip with lip contains far more risk than is generally recognized, and it is a great wonder so many babies come out of their infancy unscathed. Young men should be very sparing of their kisses, and their sweethearts chary of receiving them, on physical as well as sentimental and moral grounds. I have seen young ladies horribly blotched and pimpled, whose cases have baffled the learning of country practitioners. Their friends have believed rash to be a sign of cancer, but it was really some hideous incurable malady that had developed from a kiss."

"I have known also instances where infants have been caressed by some unsafe person and have been the innocent agents of transmission of disease to their mothers or nurses. Such cases are rare, as small children do not readily develop diseases of this character, but the bad effects of promiscuous kissing are continually being proved to medical men."

Minister (from the pulpit)—As the air of the church seems chilly I would ask the sexton if he will kindly close the front doors and windows of the building. The collection will now be taken up.

Former Foreign Representatives.

It may be of information at this time, when the administration is appointing the country's representatives to the courts of of foreign powers, to name some of those who have been sent to Great Britain and France as our Ministers. It will be seen that our representatives have been men of large calibre as a rule.

To the Court of St. James (England) we find such names as John Jay, James Monroe, Abbott Lawrence, Thos. Pinckney, William Pinckney, Andrew Stevenson, Martin Van Buren, John Quincy Adams, Charles Francis Adams, George Bancroft, James Barbour, James Buchanan, George M. Dallas, Edward Everett, Joseph R. Ingersoll, Robert C. Schenck, Edwards Pierpont, James Russell Lowell, Edward J. Phelps, and others not now called to memory.

Accredited to the French capital are, among others, the following illustrious names: John Armstrong, Robert R. Livingston, Joel Barlow, James A. Bayard, John Bigelow, James Brown, Lewis Cass, William H. Crawford, Francis Dana, Wm. R. Davis, William L. Dayton, John A. Dix, Oliver Ellsworth, Chas. J. Faulkner, John Marshall, John Y. Mason, James Monroe, Gouverneur Morris, William V. Murray, Chas. C. Pinckney, William C. Rives, Richard Rush, Rob't McLane, E. B. Washburne, Levi P. Morton.

The Court of St. James is the usual designation of the British Court. The St. James Palace, a large, inelegant brick structure, succeeded Whitehall as the London residence of the British sovereigns, and so remained from William III to Victoria. It has been so reconstructed that at present little of the original structure remains. In 1837 the royal household was transferred to Buckingham Palace, and St. James is now used only for levees and drawing rooms.

Are We Getting Better or Worse.

Rev. De Witt Talmage urges that the world is getting better. Eminent statisticians upon religious matters show that sectarianism and bigotry are dying out, and that education is fast redeeming those who may walk for a time in the forbidden paths. Dr. Talmage thinks that a big national revival would accomplish great wonders in reforming the vicious and criminal elements. Some say that poverty is one of the greatest causes of crime and viciousness. Others that rum and gambling are the great evils which produce the major part of the crime of the nation. From statistics it appears that in 1850 we had one criminal for every 30,442 of population; in 1860, one to every 1,647; in 1870, one to every 1,021; in 1880, one to every 837. This showing does not look much like crime was decreasing. We think, however, that these statements are based upon reports of all criminal proceedings in police and other courts, for trivial transgressions, and imprisonment in the county and city prisons. Certainly the State prison records do not disclose this startling state of affairs.

Appreciated.

The following note, from the editor of the Greenville (Ohio) Courier, under date of April 5th, is self-explanatory:

EDITOR THEMIS:—Please send me THEMIS, commencing with the first issue containing Hon. B. Collins' article on the "Bacon Theory." Mr. Collins formerly lived here, and is one of the ablest writers in the land. I doubt whether he has a superior on ancient history, for he has been an untiring searcher after knowledge in that direction all his life; and with his eloquence and gift of language he makes intensely interesting every theme he writes on. He is certainly one of the ablest Shakespearian authorities in this country. Yours, very respectfully,
JOHN CALDERWOOD.

The Denmark.

Captain Bond, of the steamer City of Chester, who sighted the abandoned steamer Denmark, believes the passengers and crew were rescued. He has belief from the fact that the Denmark's boats were gone. The chain cable was seen hanging over the bow of the Denmark. This leads Captain Bond to believe she has been in tow of another vessel.

The Danish steamer Island, from Copenhagen, which it is thought may have news of passengers of the Denmark, signalled off Sandy Hook light ship at 1:45 this afternoon.

The passengers of the Denmark are on the steamer Island.

There is said to be an un repealed law of New Jersey, passed while the state was a British colony, which provides that "all women of whatever age, rank, profession or degree, whether virgins, maids or widows, who shall after this act impose upon, seduce or betray into matrimony any of his majesty's subjects by virtue of scents, cosmetics, paints, artificial teeth, false hair or high-heeled shoes, shall incur the penalty of the law now in force against witchcraft and like misdemeanors."

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, APRIL 21, 1889.

No. 9.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

What an empty, hollow, senseless thing is that so-called higher order of society. Here we have the addle-pated creatures who are to manage the great centennial in New York in throes of the greatest anguish—we cannot use the term mental anguish, in that there is a lack of the element of mind or brains—because the first dance was not made exclusive to the blue bloods. Just think of the sole commendation for entrance to the exclusive set being the amount of money he or she can squander on a banquet or reception! What meads of praise were heaped upon that wonderful genius who could devise the expenditure of $60,000 on a society banquet, and at which a miniature lake, with gold fishes, etc., was improvised as one of the features of the entertainment. We have read of the dissolving of pearls in wine to make it more expensive, and of other extravagant things, but these events are recorded as having occurred in the dim past, in the dark days of civilization and progress. But it seems that in New York and some other cities there is still a clinging to that senseless and exclusive thing called society, to which foolish extravagance only is the open sesame. Genius and brains are foreign elements, because genius and brains usually accompany poverty, and because brains and genius would not accept the doubtful compliment of such a recognition.

Speaking of the foolish wrangle in New York society (alleged) and the exactions of this exclusive body, impresses us more and more with the idea that genius and poverty are indeed kindred spirits. There is plenty of material for your ordinary society person, but the genius is a scarce article. The brightest lights of intellect the world ever knew were poor, poverty stricken fellows, the actual victims of wretchedness. Oliver Goldsmith, one of the geniuses of his age, and of any age, was actually turned out of his attic room into the streets to starve, because he was too poor to pay his rent, and that, too, while the manuscript of the "Vicar of Wakefield" was in his pocket. Homer wandered from door to door chanting his ballads, his mouth oftener filled with verse than with bread.

"Seven cities claimed the Homer dead,
Through which the living Homer begged his bread."

Tasso, it is said, in one of his sonnets borrowed the light from the eyes of his cat to write by, being too poor to afford a candle. While the world was laughing over the wit of Cervantes, he was starving on the desert. Bentivoglio was denied admission to a hospital he endowed while in affluence.

The history of the world abounds in such illustrations. Our line of American statesmen is an illustration that all the true greatness sprang from those who were not gifted with riches, but whom nature enriched with brains. None of those who adhere to that element called exclusive society have ever been accused of genius, save perhaps that peculiar genius of exclusiveness, in the aping of the Court life of Europe. We never have gone into this so-called society to get our Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, Sheridan, Napoleon, Cromwell, Shakespeare, and the hosts of geniuses that have enlightened the world. Society proper is right and proper, and must necessarily exist. It is only this infernal snobbery that is nauseating.

The Czar of Russia is the victim, it is said, of a gypsy prophesy, which weighs heavily upon him, and is producing disastrous results upon the health of the Czarina. It seems that during his youth some wandering gypsy predicted that the young Czar would die in his 46th year. As the time named in the prophesy approaches the Czar's despondency increases. The belief is intensified from the fact that other prophecies made at the same time have come to pass. This is certainly a fearful feeling to have and to be unable to shake off. Imagination may have more to do with this than the idle prophesy.

The profession of the law is the most exalted, the noblest of human avocations. Its glories and lustre have radiated from the greatest minds the world ever knew. Statesmanship is wholly dependent upon a knowledge of the law. Man never approaches nearer a godlike character, than when as the lawyer he stands forth the advocate of the poor friendless wretch who has been brought under the iron heel of inexorable law. The lawyer is part of the system of justice and of the administration of the laws. Each lawyer is one of the judicial family, to whom the judge of the court looks for counsel and advice. His standard of integrity, honor and courtesy should be above question. The very nature of his profession and relations to the court, client and the world must, per force, make him an honorable gentleman. Education and refinement must be necessary concomitants.

From the earliest record of Roman lawyers they were governed by the strictest rules and most elevated and honorable conduct. The juris consulti of Rome were the educated, learned advocates of disputed rights. Under the Justinian codes lawyers held a high place. The codes of the lawyers of France sprang from the Justinian Institutes, and we find that they were subject to the strictest rules. Among others: They must not resort to trickery, fallacies or misquotations of authorities; they must not, in their arguments, indulge in the abuse of the opposing party or his counsel; they must not violate the respect due the court by improper expressions or unbecoming gestures. Now, such rules as these were the outgrowth of a splendid system, and are embodied in the present French code, as well as in those of all civilized countries.

That there is often an abuse of the privileges of counsel in permitting him to attack the honor and good name of witnesses, parties, and indeed opposing counsel, is a fact demonstrated at almost every term of court. Some very recent assaults emanating from attorneys against other members of the bar, as well as parties, call forth our remarks upon this occasion. Some of the members of the bar seem to have forgotten that golden bond that should bind men of the honorable profession together. The wanton abuse by an attorney is inexcusable. A cause must be a very bad one that prompts a personal assault by one counsel against another. The strictures upon a doubtful witness may under some circumstances be admissible, still it is rare indeed that anything is ever gained by unbridled abuse and vilification. This is one of the mistaken ideas of some of our practitioners.

It is quite common in our courts to hear it remarked when certain attorneys are engaged in the trial of causes, "Now we will hear Mr. So and So 'burn up' the other side, or a witness." This line of practice is not elevating, and might be classed with the tricky and captious. The harsh, sarcastic and abusive may for a brief time accomplish its purpose, but those who make this their stock in trade will never ascend the topmost round of the most honorable profession. There can never be anything manly, noble or sincere in such a practice, and those who resort to this line will only succeed in losing the respect and friendship of the courts, as well as of their brother attorneys.

There is an under strata of alleged attorneys, who, from want of education, ability or legal training, can scarcely be ranked as lawyers, and who have by some means secured a privilege from some inferior court to appear as attorneys at law. From such, that higher order of legal ethics cannot be expected. But when a member of the bar proper descends to trickery in securing some advantage in the selection of venal jurors, or by other dishonorable means gains an undue advantage, or who resorts to vilification and abuse, either against parties or counsel, then we say it is time to enter a protest.

It would seem, however, that of late years, and particularly in this state, our Supreme and Superior Courts have committed the indiscretion of admitting to the practice of the law men who do not realize the gravity of the calling they have chosen to pursue. Section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state contains a crystallization of the ethics of the bar, as follows:

It is the duty of an attorney and counselor: 1. To support the constitution and laws of the United States, and of this state. 2. To maintain the respect due to the courts of justice and judicial officers. 3. To counsel or maintain such actions, proceedings or defenses only as appear to him legal or just, except the defense of a person charged with a public offense. 4. To employ, for the purpose of maintaining the causes confided in him, such means only as are consistent with truth, and never seek to mislead the judge or any judicial officer by an artifice or false statement of fact or law. 5. To maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself to preserve the secrets of his client. 6. To abstain from all offensive personality, and to advance no fact prejudicial to the honor or reputation of a party or witness unless required by the justice of the cause with which he is charged. 7. Not to encourage either the commencement or the continuance of an action or proceeding from any corrupt motive of passion or interest. 8. Never to reject, for any consideration personal to himself, the cause of the defenseless or the oppressed.

Witnesses, powerless to reply, have been unmercifully abused, and no language of denunciation of them has been found too severe to be employed. It is creditable to our courts generally that this abuse of assumed professional privilege has been rebuked; that our judges should exercise the power of disbarment in some instances is manifest.

There is another profession—that of journalism—in which privileges are assumed and abused. That a man possesses types and a printing press is no warrant for him to write and print that for which he would not be personally responsible. That the power of a journalist can be used for good will be admitted; that the power is often abused will not be denied. Lawyers and journalists claim to occupy a high plane—a plane, however, which they have themselves created. Some journalists assume that in the publication of their papers they are performing a public service. To some degree they are. They, however, forget that there is such a thing as an abuse of tolerated privileges. It has very often happened that irresponsible characters have, under the assumed protection of the privileges of the press, outraged privacies that are sacred. We do not recognize the right of an individual because he writes for or publishes a newspaper, to write and publish that for which he would not hold himself personally responsible; nor do we esteem it the privilege of a lawyer to utter language in the trial of a case unjustly derogatory of a citizen.

When a man assumes to act in a semi-official capacity he should be held personally accountable for what he speaks or writes, and for any overstepping beyond legitimate bounds. A lawyer has not the right, nor has an editor, to shield himself behind a professional cloak and malign his fellows. In either of these professions criticism legitimately deducible from facts has never been objected to; gentlemen should never transcend the bounds. The people accord a certain latitude in criticism; they condemn its abuse. In every state in this union, particularly in California, editors of newspapers have been killed because of offensive articles. In most instances their slayers have not only been acquitted, but commended for their acts. There can be nothing more contemptible than for an individual to attack another under the cover of an assumed privilege, and, if in doing so, he becomes the subject of a funeral, rarely is regret manifested.

SHAKESPEARE-BACON.

Recent Skeptical Literature—Donnelly's Cipher a Failure—Shakespeare is Shakespeare for all Time.
[Written for THEMIS by B. Collins, of Chico, Cal.]

PART V.

In Mr. Donnelly's work a number of chapters are devoted to what are called parallelisms of thought and expression in the works of Bacon and those attributed to Shakespeare.

Well, Shakespeare was known as an author in 1589, and as early as 1594 was eulogized as such by Edmund Spenser, while Bacon did not appear before the public as an author before 1597, when he published his "Essays." The plays of Shakespeare had years before this date become famous, supplanting, in fact, in popularity those of all other dramatists. It will be readily seen that Bacon could have lighted his torch from the fires of Shakespeare's genius. In both ancient and modern authors the same similes and metaphors are to be found; and yet we are the authors still. Words are common property, free to the use of all, and similar ideas are engendered under like conditions, while the same words are used to give them expression. Phrases and expressions, as well as words now obsolete, were in common use at the time of Shakespeare, so that the frequent use of them by different writers can have no peculiar significance. Just as Donnelly has run through the voluminous works of Shakespeare and Bacon, culling here and there similar expressions and words used to convey similar ideas, so it may be done with any two or more authors. Two historians describing a city, a battle or a country would give descriptions strikingly alike. All epic poets have since the days of Homer followed him with remarkable precision. The dramatists and poets of antiquity have always had their imitators, and this is a fact that will apply to architecture and painting as well as to literature. In writing of the ordinary affairs of life, in depicting the human passions, in describing a storm, in portraying the grace or mental charms of some beautiful and accomplished woman, like words and expressions would be made use of. The various emotions and conflicting passions of the human breast are more clearly and forcibly described by some authors than by others; yet it would be a strange thing indeed if in setting forth the virtues or frailties of mankind by different authors dissimilar words and comparisons should be invariably used. Plagiarism is often apparent where absolutely there was no intent of theft.

Many of the parallelisms are extremely frivolous. Here are a few:

Bacon says: A miracle of time. Shakespeare: O miracle of men. Bacon speaks of The gentle dew. Shakespeare of The gentle rain. Bacon: Matters of no use or moment. Shakespeare: Enterprises of great pith and moment. Bacon says: A fantastical spirit. Shakespeare: A fantastical trick. Bacon: Whereby the cold becomes more eager. Shakespeare: It is very cold. It is a nipping and an eager air. The phrase "soft and tender," used by both, is cited as a "parallelism." This was doubtless a form of expression in common use before the time of Shakespeare and Bacon. Much stress is laid upon a selection taken from "Hamlet," wherein a form of expression is used which is claimed to be also found in Bacon, as follows:

"O, Heavens! a beast, that wants discourse of reason,
Would have mourned longer."

Mr. Donnelly says: "this expression, 'discourse of reason' is a very unusual one * * * *. When we turn to Bacon we find this expression, which has puzzled the commentators, repeatedly used. For instance:"

Martin Luther, but in discourse of reason, etc.

Also,

God hath done great things by her * * * Past discourse of reason.

When we examine the meaning of the word discourse it will be discovered that there is nothing "unusual" about the form of expression cited. The word had formerly more meanings than it has now. Shakespeare uses the word frequently, as Sure he that made us with such large discourse.

Here it simply means with the power of comprehension. In the former expression the word discourse is synonymous with the word exercise. The form of expression was ordinarily in use at that time. On turning to Ben Jonson's works we find that William Drummond, the poet of Hawthornden, in relating a conversation he had with Jonson, says:

"He, Jonson, had written a 'Discourse of Poetry.' Meaning, as we would now write it, that he had written a dissertation or treatise on poetry.

Thomas Churchyard, in 1596, also wrote his "Pleasant Discourse of Court and Wars."

Roger Ascham, an eminent scholar and teacher of the learned languages to Elizabeth, wrote a work which he entitled "A Report and Discourse of the Affairs of Germany." Ascham died before Bacon was born.

In "Two Gentlemen of Verona" (act 2, scene 4) may be found this expression:

"Leave off discourse of disability."

The above comedy was written as early as 1591, many years before Bacon published his "Essays," the first of his production given to the public.

Referring to the expression "discourse of reason," cited as a "parallelism," and which is found in "Hamlet" (act 1, scene 2) it should be noted that if Bacon ceased to write "before he was 40" that he could not have written "Hamlet," since this grand, dramatic masterpiece was written in 1602-3. Yet Mr. Donnelly urges that Bacon wrote "Hamlet" because of the above "parallelism" or expression found in both Shakespeare and Bacon. Bacon "ceased to write before he was 40," then he ceased to write plays in 1600, for he was born in 1561. An expression found in this play, written two years after Bacon quit dramatizing, (?) cannot be taken as evidence that he wrote it. If he (Bacon) did not write "Hamlet" it is safe to conclude that he did not write any of the plays. Again, quoting from the "cipher," Bacon says:

To fall from a discord, or harsh accord, upon a concord of sweet accord.

Shakespeare says:

That is not moved with concord of sweet sounds.

He might have used the word "harmony" instead; but in writing of music he chanced to make use of that "singular" and "unusual" word concord. This selection as a "parallelism" certainly "wants discourse of reason."

John Ford, a contemporary writer with Shakespeare and Bacon, and who wrote with much force and beauty of language, in his "Love's Melancholy," says:

"He plays so swiftly
That there was curiosity and cunning,
Concord in discord, lines of differing method,
Meeting in one full centre of delight."

Mr. Donnelly says: "We find in Shakespeare this well-known but curious expression:"

There's a divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

We find the very word (he says) used by Bacon to indicate carved out roughly: "A rough-hewn seaman."

Ben Jonson, in his English Grammar, in a discourse of the second conjugation, says: * * * * "Which, notwithstanding, if it seems to any to be too roughly-hewed, let him plane it out more smoothly."

When we find this "curious expression" so commonly used it loses its curiosity. In any event, the use of the last expression does not show that Ben Jonson wrote Shakespeare, or that Jonson's Grammar was written by Bacon. The following striking (?) "parallelism" is submitted to the Baconian theorists, in hope that their ingenuity will definitely determine whether Jonson wrote Shakespeare, or the latter wrote the former. These words are used by Rosalind, in "As You Like It":

"I was never so berhymed since Pythagoras' time—that I was an Irish rat—which I can hardly remember."

Ben Jonson, in one of his comedies, uses this language: "Rhyme them to death, as they do rats in Ireland."

Had these similar allusions been found in Shakespeare and Bacon, the flood-gates of conjecture would have been opened, and argument enough found for a learned dissertation or "discourse." "Rats."

The foregoing selections form a fair sample of the "parallelisms" which have been cited, and which are claimed as proofs of the "theory." It would be strange indeed if, in the use of many thousands of words, some quaint ones were not used alike by different authors; and equally so if similar phrases were not sometimes employed in the productions of two such voluminous writers as Shakespeare and Bacon. Their use in common cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, or by any subtlety of reasoning, be construed as proof that there was but one writer. Shakespeare and Bacon doubtless made use alike of many singular phrases and odd words, and if the pages of the other many writers of that day were examined they would be found to contain similar expressions.

If Bacon wrote "Shakespeare," it is remarkable that the quotations made from the "plays" in our lexicons to illustrate the proper use and meaning of words, are so greatly in excess of those taken from the known works of Bacon. This is a disparity that can be accounted for only on the ground of duality of authorship.

Like phrases and words are frequently used by different writers to give expression to the same or similar thoughts. Especially so in the portrayal of the virtues or vices of our nature; the energies and visible results of natural laws; the varied emotions of the soul; the many and peculiar attributes of the human mind; in the description of rural scenery, and the habits and customs of a people generally, or those which obtain among a particular class only.

To find these phrases, sentences, expressions and words in any considerable number in any two contemporaneous authors could not consistently be urged as proof that there was but one writer in reality; nor any more could it be held that either was guilty of literary theft.

In "Romeo and Juliet" (act iv, scene 5) is found this expression:

For though fond nature bids us all lament,
Yet nature's tears are reason's merriment.

In Pope's "Dying Christian To His Soul" occurs the following:

Cease, fond nature, cease thy strife,
And let me languish into life.

In both instances the word fond was selected by these authors instead of the word weak, which it then meant, but which is in the sense used now obsolete. This certainly does not prove Pope to be a plagiarist; unless Mr. Donnelly's method of argument is to be accepted.

Again, in "As You Like It", Orlando, speaking of his love for Rosalind, says:

Run, run, Orlando; carve on every tree,
The fair, the chaste and unexpressive she.

And Hudibras says:

I'll carve your name on barks of trees,
With true-love's knots and flourishes.

Both authors, Shakespeare and Butler, were simply writing of a custom that had been for ages in vogue, and yet Butler must, according to the "cipher" method of reasoning, be dubbed a literary pirate.

The world knows when and where the greatest of all dramatists was born. He had early educational advantages. Stratford afforded good school facilities, and there were among its inhabitants men of refinement and culture; and, being a place of some ten thousand inhabitants, must have had, if no regularly established public libraries, many private ones. Books and authors were numerous at that time. It was surrounded by a country highly cultivated, possessing fine natural advantages and romantic situations; among these was the forest of Arden, in which the poet places the scene of his comedy "As You Like It", and he doubtless selected it because it was the maiden name of his mother, as well as for its charming scenery. He was not a stranger to the stage, since dramatic performances were quite frequent at Stratford. Thomas Green and Burbage were Stratfordshire men, both eminent actors of their time, and associates of Shakespeare's, who introduced him to the stage after he went to London. With his opportunities and surroundings, the strong mental powers and fervid fancy with which he was gifted, he would rapidly strengthen, expand and vault to an eminence in the attainment of knowledge impossible to be reached by one less favored by nature, though tutored in the curricula of well established institutions of learning. And yet we do not claim that nature did everything for Shakespeare. It is conceded that he had at least a "little learning," but with this "dangerous thing," as Pope calls it, and with his rare natural endowments he was enabled to "drink deep of the Pierian spring."

Shakespeare possessed that indescribable gift called genius, which enables its owner to instantly conceive, create, invent, develop, change, amplify, and describe; to conceive and draw at once, as if ever present in the mind, the character of a hero or a coward, a wit or a fool, a philosopher or a madman; to portray and characterize an immoral, salacious, witty, sack-drinking old rogue, like Falstaff, or paint in the most attractive and fascinating colors a character like Rosalind, full of softness, sensibility and grace; or that of Isabella, possessing that purity and dignity that so much adorns and honors a woman. Genius is subject to no conditions of birth. It is as apt to be born in an humble hut on the banks of Ayr or those of Avon as at York House. It is self-acquiring and self-reliant, needs not the aid of bookish rules and accomplishes its purposes regardless of prescribed systems.

There were, in fact, a combination of causes which compelled or induced young Shakespeare to quit Stratford for London. He arrived there in 1585-6, being twenty or twenty-one years old, carrying with him, most likely, in an unfinished or incomplete form, his "Venus and Adonis," and "The Rape of Lucrece." For three years or more after his arrival he first wrote in connection with Marlowe, Greene, Peele, and other playwrights. In some of these primary efforts are to be traced the early morning gleams of that yet unrisen sun that was soon to shed such a glory of light upon the world of letters. That resplendent orb of genius, like a swift-shooting meteor, did ascend the horizon and encircle anew in gorgeous midsummer magnificence the heights of Helicon. One so transcendently above all others in dramatic ability could not avoid being known. He became the object of envy and malice by some of those with whom he shared the first efforts of his genius. Others, however, recognizing his merit, did not hesitate to accord him that full measure of praise to which he was so justly deserving.

Shakespeare and Bacon were contemporaneous. They were not the only literary celebrities of their time. The Elizabethan age of literature exceeds that of the Augustan, or that of Queen Anne. The writers of the time of Elizabeth were known to each other. Their frequent social meetings; their conversations, sallies of wit, puns, repartee and varied intellectual contests, would readily determine who had and who had not talent—genius. Shakespeare's contemporaries place him above all competitors. Could men of ability, who were scholars, writers, and who won by their literary labors enduring fame, who say they were his associates—knew him well—have been deceived as to his intellectual powers? If he had been of no force would they have showered unlimited eulogy upon him? Would Spenser, Ben Jonson, Drayton, have stopped to eulogize an ass?

Out of the mouths of his contemporaries Shakespeare can be shown to be the author of the plays ascribed to him. This should be evidence sufficient. And without resorting to the darksome riddles and numerical puzzles it can be shown from his writings that he was. There is nothing strange or wonderful about the authorship of the writings; and modern intelligence can not be confused by any such rhyming couplets as—

Riddle me, come riddle me this,
Who the author of "Shakespeare" is.

In 1593, Shakespeare published, under his own supervision, his "Venus and Adonis." The printer was Richard Field, a Stratford man, with whom he was intimately acquainted.

In his "Henry V," he took two names of persons well known to him in his native town: Bardolph and Fluellen. Edmund Spenser, a Warwickshire man, author of the "Faerie Queene," and contemporary with Shakespeare, in his "Tears of the Muses," published in 1591, referring to Shakespeare, says:

"And he the man whom Nature selfe had made
To make herselfe, and Truth to imitate,
With kindly counter under-mimic shade,
Our pleasant Willie, ah, is dead of late;

* * * * *
But that same gentle Spirit from whose pen
Large streams of honnie and sweet Nectar flowe.
* * * * *

Doth rather choose to sit in idle cell
Than so himselfe to mockerie to sell."

It is apparent from this eulogy, from one who in the poetical imagery and beauty of language was scarcely second to the great dramatist, Shakespeare was early and well known as an author "whom Nature selfe had made." The lines were not addressed to "pleasant" Francis. Again, the same author expresses his admiration for Shakespeare in the following lines in his "Colin Clout's Come Home Again":

"And there, though last not least, is Acteon;
A gentler shepherd may nowhere be found,
Whose Muse, full of high thoughts invention,
Doth like himselfe heroically sound."

It is left to the reader to say which name sounds the most heroically, Shakespeare or Bacon.

In the "Tears of the Muses," he is called a "gentle Spirit," while it will hereafter be seen that Ben Jonson calls him "my gentle Shakespeare." This epithet "gentle" was peculiarly applied to him by those who knew him, and by his brother authors.

Robert Greene, one of the most celebrated dramatists of that day, and with whom Shakespeare was first engaged in remodeling old plays and writing new ones, growing envious of the latter's reputation, after he began to publish under his own name, in a work published in 1592, in which he addresses himself to Marlowe, Lodge and Peele, fellow dramatists, says: "Yes, trust them not; for there is an upstart crow, beautified with our feathers, that with his 'tiger's heart wrapp'd in a player's hide,' supposes he is as well able to bombast our blank verse as the best of you; and being an absolute Johannes Factotum, in his own conceit, the only Shak-scene in a country."

It will readily be seen that this was leveled at Shakespeare. He had become one of the owners of Blackfriars; was a player, a writer (or "bombaster of blank verse"), a manager and therefore a Johannes Factotum. This language could not possibly have meant Bacon. Greene knew that Shakespeare was writing blank verse, else he could not have referred to the fact. He was chagrined and angered because Shakespeare's plays had driven his own from the stage. The latter's ability as a playwright was such that the Blackfriars company was not required to call upon any other dramatist to adopt or improve old plays, or write new ones.

Chettle, a writer of the time, speaks of Shakespeare's "facetious grace in writing," and "his uprightness of dealing, which is attested by divers of worship."

Shakespeare was an applicant for the appointment of Master of the Queen's Revels. The poet, Samuel

Daniel, who had supervision of the whole matter, says, January 30, 1603-4, in a letter to Thomas Edgerton, referring to Shakespeare:

"It seemeth to my humble judgment that one who is the author of plays now daily presented on the public stages of London, and the possessor of no small gains, and moreover himself an actor in the King's company of comedians, could not with reason pretend to be Master of the Queen's Majesties Revels, forasmuch he would sometimes be asked to approve and allow of his own writings."

There was in the time of Shakespeare, and is to-day, a place in Stratford known as "Rother Market." In "Timon of Athens" we find this expression:

"It is the pasture lards the rother's sides."

Rother is a good saxon word, meaning horned cattle. From the rich pasture lands contiguous to Stratford Shakespeare saw herds of "rothers"—horned cattle—driven to the Rother Market of Stratford; and when he framed the above quotation he doubtless did so having in view the rothers he had there seen in his boyhood days. If small things like "words, words" are to settle great questions, the last quotation is offered as a link in the chain.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

James O'Neill has been having a streak of bad business in the west.

Dumas and Sardou are jointly at work on a new society drama. That will be a mixture.

Philadelphia is the only city in the United States that supports a permanent minstrel company.

The Nelsons gave two entertaining exhibitions on Friday and last night to fair houses. The combination is good.

Richard Mansfield wears three times a $10,000 armor in his "Richard III." Yet critics find it easy to penetrate.

Mrs. James Brown-Potter has reached the climax of absurdity and extravagance. She bathes in violet water at $20 per gallon.

Nat Goodwin does not intend to present his new play, A Gold Mine, in California this season. He will produce only his old repertoire of farce comedies.

That apology for an actor, who paraded the country with a brass band and big diamonds, says he will give up acting and build a theater. Great Scott! when did he become an actor?

A comic opera by an American composer, Mr. Robert Goldbeck, will soon be produced in the grand drawing-room of Devonshire House, Piccadilly, through the kindness of the Duke. The piece is called New York.

Brander Matthews and George H. Jessop are engaged in writing a new American comedy for Daniel Frohman, to be played by the Lyceum Theater Company. It will be produced next season, and will follow Belasco and De Mille's next new play at that house.

The new play, which was to create a sensation, An Iron Creed, according to New York critics, is not worth serious criticism. "It is unusually bad in its story, shabby and pointless in plot, puerile in dialogue, absurd in incident and preposterous in its delineation of character."

Booth cast the first and only vote of his life for Abraham Lincoln, in the autumn of 1864. A short time after, on the night of November 25, 1864, the three Booth brothers appeared in the play of Julius Caesar, Edwin as "Brutus," Junius Brutus as "Cassius," and John Wilkes as "Marc Antony."

Joseph R. Grismer and Phoebe Davies have presented a most excellent repertoire this last week, and deserved a much better public recognition. Frank Hatch acquitted himself in fine style, and is one of the coming actors. Grismer's dog, "Sport," did his part in good form, and received his share of the applause.

Margaret Mather, the best "Juliet" on the stage, will make a tour including California this summer. In October, 1887, she appeared at the Clunie Opera House for two nights, and presented Romco and Juliet and The Honeymoon. In that engagement she was supported by a remarkably fine actor, Frederick Paulding.

The Hyers Sisters (coffee-colored and tolerably handsome) are doing two Topsy's in an Uncle Tom company out west. The girls are Sacramento productions, and are the daughters of a colored barber, who had his shop on K street, between Fifth and Sixth. They started out on a little higher grade than Uncle Tom shows.

Anita Fallon, a wealthy lady of San Jose, has a vaulting ambition to be an actress. She was a member of the Georgie Woodthorpe company, but did not display any marked histrionic ability or genius. It is said she contemplates starring in a new play written for her. She also has an ambition to play the part of "Cleopatra." Better keep her money and content herself in her proper sphere. If she does not, our word for it, she will become the victim of designing persons who are deceiving her.

That world-reunowned opera, The Little Tycoon, will be presented in this city on April 24th to 27th, inclusive. The company is excellent, and comprises many superb artists. This will be the first time for this popular opera in Sacramento. But few will miss the opportunity of witnessing this magnificent presentation, which is different from anything we have ever seen in this city. While its title may indicate that it is similar to Mikado, there is not the slightest resemblance in action or music. The Little Tycoon is a pronounced success.

"What makes a song popular?" is often asked of footlight favorites. Ned Harrigan's reply to this question, asked by a Mail and Express reporter, is as follows: "I've sung songs for a good many years, and I don't believe you'll ever find any cut and dried receipt for making one popular. It's very much like the Irishman's punch, which was compounded of lemon, spice, sugar and warm water, when he had them, but as he never had them the punch was whisky straight. Your song may have business, orchestration, melody and good words, if you have them, but if you haven't, why just sing what you have on hand. Audiences like things straight sometimes. Seriously, though, the music must be catchy, trippy and rippling—an air that pleases the hearer before he has had time to think about it. Then he wants to hear it again. He hears it, learns it, whistles it, and inside of twenty-four hours your song is 'popular,' and will have a run."

Book Chat.

Mrs. Amelie Rives-Chanler and her husband have received much social recognition in her native state of Virginia. The Virginia papers describe her as beautiful, having grown so since the days of her maidenhood. Queer romancing has done much for this lady, who, from the profits of her literary labors, has departed with her husband for a tour of the world. Her fortune was assured when the news critics pronounced her books unclean.

Miss Callie C. Vivian, the young lady who recently received the first prize for proficiency in art at the Crocker Art Museum, is now devoting much time to sketch writing, as an accompaniment to her art studies. The young lady will soon visit her sister, Mrs. E. C. Hart, of this city, when the readers of THEMIS will have the pleasure of reading some of her literary efforts. The little lady is an accomplished artist and writer.

Literary experts who have read the latest productions of James Anthony Froude, in the novel line, declare that they are very weak, and do not embody either romance or history. This is, however, an English view of the question.

Rider Haggard is writing a new novel which he claims will occupy two years in its completion. If not better than his recent efforts he would best postpone its completion indefinitely.

Zola's contemplated sensational novel will have five murders in it. Railroad experience is the prime feature of the work. It will embody the psychological study of crime.

Chas. H. Hoyt is writing a magazine article. His purpose is to defend the several plays he has written, from a literary standpoint. This will be a difficult task.

A Chicago woman has published a story of which the scene is laid in heaven. This is a long distance from headquarters at Chicago.

George Bancroft, the venerable historian, has ceased all literary labor on account of his declining mental faculties.

Why doesn't Rose Cleveland write a book now, and see what critics will say?

Professional Chat.

Before the adoption of our present State Constitution, County Judges were not inhibited from acting as counsel in matters that came before the District Court. The late Judge Rob't C. Clark, a most liberal minded man, generous, and a thorough lawyer, was frequently called upon for counsel and advice in cases not within the jurisdiction of his court. One day he was passing along J street, when he was met by one of our prominent country citizens, who, as was often the case, asked the Judge his opinion on some little affair between himself and neighbors. Judge Clark, in his usual good natured manner, expressed some general opinion upon the question propounded, without in reality giving the same any consideration, and more to get rid of the question as quickly as possible, under the impression that there would be nothing more of the matter. No so, however, for several months thereafter a case appeared on Judge Clark's calendar, wherein the person who had sought Judge Clark's opinion was a party. The incident of the interview had escaped Judge Clark's recollection. The case was tried, and our friend who had received, as he supposed, a conclusive pointer on the case from the Judge, rested perfectly happy; but, greatly to his astonishment, the Court rendered a judgment for the other fellow. This was a surprise indeed. The losing party waited until the court adjourned, when he addressed the Judge, saying: "Judge, how is it you gave me an opinion six months ago which was exactly contrary to your judgment to-day?" "You are mistaken," said the Judge, "I never have held any other than the views expressed to-day." "But you did," said the party. "When, and where," said the Judge. "Why, don't you remember, I met you on J street one day, and you told me I was right." "It was a street opinion, then," replied the Judge; "Well, if that was the case, it don't matter, as street opinions never count for anything among lawyers. Next time you want an opinion come to the office, and show the usual cause, and your opinion secured under such circumstances will be worth something."

In early days, when the late Judge David Belden was County Judge of Nevada county, there was a contest before him for the removal of an administrator, on the ground of "improvidence." The statute provided for such removal for "drunkenness, improvidence, or want of integrity or understanding." The attorney for the administrator was Judge B. (from Missouri), who, when making an argument to a court, had the habit of stopping every now and then, and saying: "Is you' honah with me?" The evidence showed conclusively that the administrator was a thorough spendthrift—having squandered two or three little fortunes. But, in summing up, Judge B. argued strenuously that, while his client had been reckless in money matters, he had spent only his own money, and that the "improvidence" of the statute meant the spending of the money of other people. After elaborating this proposition, he suddenly said: "Is you' honah with me?" "Well," said Judge Belden, "let me see if I fully apprehend your meaning; I understand you to argue that when the statute speaks of improvidence, drunkenness, and want of integrity or understanding, it means improvident with another man's money; drunk with another man's stomach; dishonest with another man's conscience; and inebriate with another man's brain. Is that your position?" Poor Judge B. was so dazed with the judicial lightning that he could only answer, "Yes you' honah."

Zelencus, the Locrian, seems to have been a student of human nature. He enacted that an adulterer should lose both eyes. Among the first transgressors was his own son. Zelencus condemned him, but requested and obtained permission to save one of his son's eyes at the cost of one of his own. How many judges and jurors of the present day would render such a judgment or verdict? Most judges would have regarded the law to have "slept" on this occasion."

The execution of the laws is more important than the making of them.

History of California—The Native Sons.

In the issue of THEMIS of the 7th inst. we called attention to the important work which could be accomplished through the instrumentality of the Native Sons of the Golden West, in the matter of the collection and perpetuation of our pioneer history, and suggested that the Grand Parlor, then about to meet at San Rafael, take steps looking to this object. In the Grand Parlor a committee of three was authorized to be appointed by the Grand President to take such steps as they deemed proper to collect data relative to the history of the State, and report to the Grand Parlor.

The office of Historian was also created in each subordinate Parlor. The duties of these Historians will be to collect data in their immediate localities, under the direction of their respective Parlor, and transmit the result of their labors to the committee of the Grand Parlor.

In this matter the Native Sons have acted wisely, and if the gentlemen who will be appointed to collect the early history of California, as it will fall from the lips of the Pioneers, perform their work properly, the archives of the order will be enriched by the recitals by men of events such as will never again occur in the history of the world. This plan has been pursued in older states; the collections thus gathered have been published in voluminous books. Their value has been incalculable.

In this state there are many journals like THEMIS that will esteem it a privilege to publish the fruits of the labors of the historians of the Native Sons; such matter is of present interest—interest in it will increase with the passage of time.

THEMIS feels a great interest in this subject, in that of those who control its editorial and publication departments are Native Sons, and others who, though not born upon the soil of California, have taken deep interest in the history of the Golden State. We feel complimented that our suggestions received the favorable consideration of the Grand Parlor, and are satisfied that, with the push and energy of the younger representatives of the state, permanent benefit will flow from the determination at San Rafael of the offspring of the founders of the commonwealth in which we live.

Sacramento Complimented.

At the recent meeting of the Grand Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West Hon. Frank D. Ryan, of Sacramento, was elected Grand President of the order. He was born in this city May 11, 1859, and is the son of ex-city trustee, John Ryan. The new President graduated from the public schools of Sacramento in 1875, and receiving a first grade teacher's certificate taught school for a time in Sierra county. Returning to Sacramento he graduated from the Sacramento Institute in 1877, and from St. Mary's College, San Francisco, the following year. He read law in the office of the late Judge Robert C. Clark, and was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court in November, 1880. In November, 1882, he was elected to the lower house of the state legislature, and served with distinction. In 1884 he was again nominated for the legislature, but while born in Sacramento city, on account of a redistricting of the state he happened to reside in an Assembly district in the city in which he had not lived for one year prior to the election, as required by the constitution. This technicality, which would have resulted in his disqualification, was discovered before the election, and although his election was assured he voluntarily resigned from the ticket. He, however, was by a large vote elected chief clerk of the state Assembly of 1885, and was reelected to that office in the session of 1887. Mr. Ryan has been a member of the Native Sons since the establishment of the order, and has filled distinguished offices in the subordinate and Grand Parlor.

W. W. Greer, also of this city, and a member of Sunset Parlor, was reelected a Grand Trustee. Mr. Greer was born and raised in this county, and is prominently identified with business and agricultural interests. He is a son of Supervisor Erskine Greer.

F. P. Tuttle, of Auburn, Placer county, was elected Grand Orator. He is a son of the late Charles A. Tuttle, and has been for several years District Attorney of Placer county.

An Eloquent Orator.

That distinguished orator and divine, the Very Rev. Joseph Sassia, S. J., will deliver a lecture in aid of that worthy charity, the Sisters of Mercy, at the Clunie Opera House, on Wednesday evening, April 24th, commencing at 8 o'clock. The Sisters of Mercy are subject to many calls for assistance by the sick and distressed, and their charities can be testified to by the many poor families who have been aided through their efforts. The reverend gentleman is one of the finest and most pleasing orators of the day, and his address cannot fail to instruct and entertain the auditors. The subject is a broad one, "Modern Warfare against Catholicity." The box-sheet for reservation of seats will be opened Monday.

Law of Adoption.

An interesting question upon the law of adoption has been occupying both departments of our Superior Court for some days. It is the case of Clara Chambers, a little waif of the Protestant Orphan Asylum, who was by the order of Judge Armstrong adopted to a couple in this city. The matter first came before Judge Van Fleet on habeas corpus, but he would not interfere with the order of his colleague upon holding that the order was sufficient. Then proceedings were instituted to set aside the original order because the managers of the Protestant Orphan Asylum had never consented to the adoption. Judge Armstrong renders a lengthy opinion, reviewing the origin of the laws of adoption and going back to the civil law, the Institutes of Justinian, which were the basis of our code provisions upon the subject. The vital question was the interpretation of the Act of 1878, which made the consent of the managers of asylums necessary to the adoption. This act, the court holds, is in antagonism with the Civil Code, and under the light of the civil law, as embodied in the codes, it is held that the provisions of the Civil Code govern, and that the consent of the managers of the asylum is not necessary to adoption. The court has a superior power of its wards in such cases, and can act without the consent of parents in some cases. The nice points of law, however, are those relating to the origin of the laws of adoption, with a reference to the adoption of Tiberius by Augustus so as to place him in the order of succession. While it is a general rule of construction that where a statute provides for the subject matter, both the common and civil laws are thereby abrogated, in this case the court construes the Civil Code in the light of the civil law, from which it is derived, and virtually ignores the act of 1878.

McKenna and Mare Island.

From the contents of a recent letter by Congressman Morrow, it appears that the Secretary of the Navy will recognize chiefly only recommendations for positions at the Mare Island navy yards from Congressman Jos. McKenna. It having been adopted as a rule of government in such matters to hold the congressmen of the districts where navy yards are located responsible for all shortcomings in the conduct and management of such navy yards. Thus the selections for foremen and department managers will fall to Jos. McKenna. The requests and recommendations of other members of Congress will have much weight, however, in guiding the local congressmen in these matters. In Hon. Jos. McKenna's case, this great trust could not fall into more circumspect, honest and fair hands. Mr. McKenna is a broad gauge man, without an element of littleness in his composition. His word is a bond of honor, his judgment the keenest. Fitness will be the test, and qualification only will be considered by him, if his life record is taken as the guide.

Short Step Between Divorce and Marriage.

In San Francisco, on the 13th inst., Mrs. Virginia Hosmer, a school teacher of that city, was divorced from her husband, an actor, on the grounds of desertion and failure to provide. It appeared in the trial of the case that from the time of the marriage, in 1884, until the divorce she had concealed the marriage, and retained her name of Mrs. Virginia Troyer. The reason she gave for obtaining the divorce was that Hosmer might wish to marry again, and to be liberal she decided to give him his freedom.

The sequel of the divorce has come to light in this city. On last Wednesday Hosmer obtained a marriage license to wed Alice May Sherwood. The necessary affidavit required before issuing the license states that Hosmer is a native of California, of the age of 28 years, and a resident of New York city. The age of Miss Sherwood is given as 22 years, also a native of this State, and a resident of Marysville. While obtaining his license Hosmer said he was an actor and had no particular home. He inquired where the services of a minister could be obtained, and was recommended to some residing close by. After Hosmer left the Court-house he was joined by Miss Sherwood and they repaired to the residence of a minister. It is not known yet whether they have been married under the license.

Trees and Vines Must be Assessed.

The State Board of Equalization has instructed all county assessors to assess all trees and vines as improvements. This is in disregard of the amendment of section 3517 of the Political Code, passed March 16, 1889, which includes vines and trees with growing crops. This amendment is held to be unconstitutional and void, therefore assessors are instructed to ignore it, and make their assessments as formerly, that is to assess trees and vines as improvements. Should the assessor fail to obey this injunction, then the Board of Equalization will take notice of the fact when making an equalization.

Since the purchase of Alaska, it can be said of the United States what has been said of England for the last century—that the sun never sets on her dominions. At sunset in Alaska the next morning's sun is an hour high in Maine.

Moths of some kinds are said to change color to match the food that they happen to eat. A goat moth enclosed in a box lined with pink tissue paper turned from grey-green to pink, and when a white lining was put in the box the moth became white.

The largest taxpayer in Germany is Herr Krupp, of Essen, who pays $34,400 on an income of $1,095,000. Next comes Baron Willy de Rothschild, of Frankfurt-on-the-Main, with an income of $1,025,000, and a tax of $29,700. Krupp is the famous manufacturer of guns.

Boulanger has decided to leave for London on Wednesday. The decision was due to the warning by the Belgian Government that if he did not leave he would be expelled. The notice was to the effect that he will not be allowed to conspire against France, a nation friendly to Belgium.

An Englishman has produced a piece of mechanism containing 400 figures, representing horses, cannon, artillery, infantry and a band of fifty-two men, each with an instrument. A tiny wind-mill turned by the current from burning candles furnishes the power to move all the figures automatically.

At Queen Victoria's last drawing room the Marchioness of Grandby wore the dress in which her husband's great-grandmother, the Duchess of Rutland, was married in 1775. It takes a great deal of moral courage for a woman to wear a dress as old as that unless it has been made over.

D. Ogden Mills is coming to California shortly, to remain all summer. His son, Ogden Mills, and his family, will accompany Mr. and Mrs. Whitlaw Reid to Paris. D. O. Mills will go from California to Alaska to visit a gold-mining property which he recently bought there, and his son Ogden will return from abroad in time to accompany him on the Alaska trip.

There is one tribe which even now in the United States practices cannibalism to some extent. They are the Tonkaways, whose homes are in the far southwest. The tribe is reduced to 83. They are wild and warlike. Whenever they capture or kill a brave enemy in battle, they kill him and eat out his heart. This is chopped as fine as mince meat and boiled. The Tonkaways then drink the broth in the belief that it goes to their own hearts and inspires them with the same bravery that its original owner possessed.

Baseball To-day.

At Snowflake Park this afternoon the local team will again meet the San Francisco nine. The positions on both sides will be filled by the same men who participated in the game at San Francisco last Thursday, and the visiting club will undoubtedly strive hard in to-day's game to deprive Sacramento of a supplement to that victory. But then Harris' men always take every trick possible, and, like thorough whist players, play a weak hand with all the more care and judgment. Our boys are not particularly slow at taking a cheerful view of a forlorn hope, as they can snatch a game out of the fire once in a while. Following are the players in to-day's game:

San Francisco.	Position.	Sacramento.
Incell	Pitcher	Burke
Swett	Catcher	McLaughlin
Powers	First base	Krehmeyer
Hanley	Second base	O'Day
Doyle	Third base	McSorley
Donohue	Shortstop	Newbert
Levy	Left field	Jevne
Perrier	Center field	Veatch
Stockwell	Right field	Goodenough

SACRAMENTO BEARS THE TARGET.

Our Club Defeated by Robinson's Gilt-edged Aggregation.

The Sacramentos and Oaklands met at Haight-street Park, San Francisco, yesterday afternoon, to decide to whom the honor of being "tail-enders" would belong. Sacramento was vanquished, and will have to carry the bran new target until they strike a winning gait, and when they do the league leaders will shiver in their shoes to face the association's baby.

The attendance at the grounds was not as large as usual, owing to the spring races of the Blood Horse Association, but those who did attend cheered the many difficult plays of the contesting teams right heartily. The Sacramento boys are great favorites in San Francisco, and are always greeted with the warmest enthusiasm when they appear on the diamond. In the last inning, when the boys took a sudden spurt, the crowd became excited and believed the lads from the capital city would bat out a victory at the close of the game. But alas! their hopes were short-lived, and after scoring two earned runs they nobly fell.

Game was called by Umpire Sheridan at 3:30 o'clock, with the Oaklands to bat. Three of their heaviest hitters were presented, and went out in regular order. Sacramento was treated accordingly. In the second inning Hardie, the first batter up, hit a long drive to the club house and traversed the bases. The Sacramentos could do nothing with Coughlin's delivery, but one single hit being secured off him till the 9th inning. In this inning Hapeman, the first up, hit for a single and was followed in like manner by Goodenough. With two men on bases McSorley hit for two bags, bringing in the only runs made by Sacramento. The Oaklands scored four runs in the 4th on an error of Veatch's, allowing the ball to pass between his legs; one in the 6th, and one in the 8th. McDonald played a very brilliant game on second, making some difficult fly catches and marvelous stops. One of the principle features of the game was Coughlin's pitching. He held the opposing sluggers down to four hits, a record he should feel proud of.

All of the Oaklands played good ball with the exception of the noisy shortstop, O'Neill, who made two of the three errors credited to his team.

Goodenough played right field for the Sacramentos, and did some excellent fly catching. Krehmeyer held down the initial in his usual fine style. He is playing his position to perfection, and leads the first basemen of the California League. McSorley's work on third was very good, and his timely two-bagger saved Sacramento from a shut-out. Jevne, in left field, distinguished himself by capturing four long difficult flies. Young Hapeman did the pitching, and held the heavy-hitting Oaklands down to a total of six hits. He pitched a great game, and had his team batted at the commencement of the game as they did in the last inning. Sacramento would not now be carrying the target.

The game was a very fine one, and well deserved the plaudits of the assemblage. Many brilliant plays were made on both sides, and each received their share of enthusiasm. The following is a summary of the game:

NOTES.

The player who desires the good wishes of a Sacramento baseball public should not be afraid to make an error. Record players are supposed to be dead.

The greatest factor, under the new rules in ball-playing, is team work; this important element is lacking in the Sacramentos, which accounts for their many defeats.

The California Amateur League has perfected its organization, and will open the season May 5th. Woodland, Sacramento and Stockton are the towns comprising the league, and a successful season is anticipated.

The Escaped Cruiser Calliope.

The safety of the British cruiser Calliope, that so narrowly escaped shipwreck at Samoa, was built at Portsmouth dockyards, England, and launched in 1885. She is a sister ship to Calypso in all respects. They have steel protective decks 1½ inches thick over machinery; are back rigged; 235 feet long; 44 feet 6 inches beam, and displace 2770 tons, at a draught of 19 feet 11 inches. The batteries are four 6-inch 89 hundred weight breech-loading guns, on spigons; twelve 5-inch breech loaders, in broadside; four Nordenfeldt, two Gardner, and a supply of Whitehead torpedos. The engines were designed for a speed of 13.75 knots per hour, and 3000 horse power. They are of the two-cylinder horizontal compound type, and drive one two-bladed feathering screw propeller, and she carries a complement of 226 officers and men. The Calliope was tried for a two hours run in 1886 over a measured track, and developed with forced draft a mean of 4.02 horse power; steam pressure, 85 pounds; revolutions of engine, 89 per minute; vacuum, 25 inches; speed, 15 knots. Her estimated cost, complete for sea, was about $900,000.—U. S. Office of Naval Intelligence.

The Danmark.

Yesterday afternoon a representative of Funch, Edye & Co., said: "The fact about the Danmark's boat bore out the surmise that the passengers of the Danmark were rescued. Otherwise, why would the boat be in a natural position? If they had perished the dead bodies would have remained in the boat. It is not probable they would jump overboard while the boat floated."

A number of ocean vessels have arrived at New York within the past few days and report having seen nothing of the Danmark or passengers.

The remains of the late Mrs. Edgar Mills were brought up yesterday from San Francisco, and interred in the city cemetery. About thirty friends of the dead lady accompanied the funeral party. Many Sacramentans attended. The entrance to the National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. bore emblems of mourning in respect to her memory.

The Lord election case will be called for a second trial at Nevada City on Tuesday. A venire has been issued for 105 jurors by Judge Walling. The first trial, which resulted in a disagreement of the jury, occupied several weeks, but it is expected that less time will be consumed in the forthcoming trial. Hon. Grove L. Johnson, who appears for the defense, will leave here for Nevada to-morrow.

Yesterday William Mack, a youth about 18 years of age, was standing at the heads of two horses hitched to a wagon, when the animals became frightened and started. Mack seized the bridles, but one of the horses reared and struck him in the breast, knocking him down. The horses then ran away, and the heavy wagon was drawn over Mack, the wheels passing over his body near the hips. He was frightfully bruised, but will recover unless he sustained internal injuries.

In the Redding vs. Committee game the indications are that Mr. R. has a won game. A lack of coöperation among members of the committee is the cause of defeat, if defeat it is. A single member has been allowed to do all of the analyzing, and he has not been encouraged even by a display of interest in the result by the others, not to say anything of practical help. We give the last moves:

This beautiful ending occurred in a game between Mr. McLeod, of Canada, and Mr. Eugene Delmar, of the Manhattan Club. It was played in the world's tourney:

White (McLeod)—King at B 4, Knight at K S 6, Pawns at Q R 2, Q S 2, Q B 3, K B 5 and K S 5.

Black (Delmar)—King at K S 2, Knight at Q B 3, Pawns at Q R 2, Q S 5 and Q 3.

White wins by a scientific coup. We would like to have some of our readers send us the solution.

The following short and brilliant game was played in the now pending world's tourney between Mr. J. W. Showalter, of Kentucky, and Mr. C. F. Burille, of Boston. It is a good illustration of the style of the "Texas Tiger," Mr. S's soubriquet.

Mark Twain and Sandwich Islands.

At the baseball dinner given at New York Mark Twain responded to the toast, "The Sandwich Islands." He said: "Though not a native, as intimated by the chairman, I have visited, a great many years ago, the Sandwich Islands. The climate there is one long delicious day, and the good that die experience no change, for they only fall asleep in one heaven and wake up in another. And these boys have played baseball there!—baseball, which is the very symbol, the outward expression of the drive, and push, and rush and struggle of the raging, tearing, booming nineteenth century. One cannot realize it, the place and the fact are so incongruous; it's like interrupting a funeral with a circus. Why, there's no legitimate point of contact, no possible kinship between baseball and the Sandwich Islands; baseball is all fact, the Islands all sentiment. In baseball you've got to do everything just right, or you don't get there; in the islands you've got to do everything just wrong, or you can't stay there." Upon the difficulty of keeping politics out of any country, the speaker remarked: "In the Sandwich Islands, where a woman had six or seven husbands, one of the number had to be elected as the father of each child born. If three of the husbands are Republicans and four are Democrats, no matter how strong a Republican aspect the baby has, the election will go Democratic. The native language is soft and flexible, until you get mad; but then there is nothing in it to swear by. It isn't any good for business and one could not work a telephone with it."

TAKING THEM IN GROUPS.

A Feminine Amateur Photographer Who Makes Money out of Human Vanity.

"I do not charge you anything, but if you like your picture in the group I will sell you one for forty cents."

"Let it go; the price is all right," came a chorus of voices.

The woman amateur photographer had her instantaneous camera leveled upon a group of art students in the antique class at the American Art League School in West Twenty-third street. It was during a lull, just after the embryo Cabanels, Meissoniers, Rosa Bonheurs and Velasquezes had lunched frugally, and they all felt in a good humor.

"Wait one minute," pleadingly asked a young lady, who wore a sailor jacket and a Peter Paul Rubens hat, "I want to pull off my hat."

Then there was a studied attempt at fine posing, and a large, full-cheeked young man, wearing a tight-fitting pair of trousers, coolly usurped the foreground. He was ably assisted by a young lady who wore eye glasses, but who, in the excitement of the moment, took them off. In the background a slender young man, who admires the great artist Kenyon Cox, had some difficulty in getting his sinuous body to bend in a beautiful curve, like the figures in the illustration of the Blessed Damosel. He succeeded, and, finally, a young lady from the South, with clear-cut features, dreamy eyes and short, black hair, reclined in languid repose against a large plaster of paris statue of the Venus de Milo.

"Ready?" asked the lightning professional amateur artist, who had dropped in to make a few shekels.

"No, no; not yet!" piped forth a young man, with his hair hanging over his low Michael Angelo brow.

"Say when, please?" timidly asked the camera manipulator.

"Let her go," said the boys, and snap! the picture was taken.

"I am sure I'll look awful, because I was not ready," said the Venus de Milo girl. Others were in doubt and had many comments to make, disheartening to the pale-faced professional amateur female lightning artist. She went away sadly, and in a week each student received a picture with the price, forty cents, marked thereon.

"Whew, what a libel!" shrieked the young man with the tight-fitting trousers. "It don't look like me," spoke up the girl who left off her eye-glasses, and the Kenyon Cox youth was in the dumps over what he termed his caricature. But each one in the group bought a picture, and some took three and four. They carried them home, framed them, and asked students from the life class, the press class and other classes to go and see them.

And the female photographer? Well, a reporter asked her if it paid to photograph groups. "Yes," she replied. "You see I go into schools, into any place where people are working together, and I rarely fail to take a picture. At first they often refuse, but I say to them that I ask only forty cents for a picture, and they need not take it unless they like it. Well, I make good pictures and rarely fail to sell. The day of the regular photograph gallery will soon be over. Few photographers have any true art instincts. They pretend to know something about posing, and yet if there is any possibility of the sitter being placed in an unnatural and cramped position they never fail to accomplish it. Men take up photography as a uero does barbering, because they think it is the easiest thing to make a living at. When I go in a place I try to make a group without permitting the members of it to pose. My trials and tribulations are great when I am undertaking to photograph art students. They know it all and can teach me in my own profession. Well, the art students are Bohemians, and they like to see themselves in a picture as they appear every day to their friends. I have made as high as $20 a day photographing groups. It beats typewriting at $10 a week salary."—V. J. Mail and Express.

He Was There.

Mr. Hayseed—Marier, I've made up my mind to send our boy to the city to learn how to write.

Mrs. Hayseed—He writes a good hand. Mr. H.—Yes, Marier, but he's too slow for these times. The city's the place to learn things, Marier, no matter what. They write like greased lightning there. Why, Marier, while I was in the city I saw a man write a two-page love-letter in seventeen seconds by the watch. He was a regular city feller, too—I could tell by his clothes. Why, Marier, when the girl that letter was writ to got it, it took her most five minutes to read it. I timed her, too.

Mrs. H.—Love-letter—girl reading it! Why, where and how on 'arth did you see a letter written, and then—

Mr. H.—Oh, it's all so, Marier. I saw it in a the-a-ter.

Husband—This is a pretty go! Wife—What is the matter? Husband—Someone has gone and daubed ink on my new pen-wiper.—Judge.

In the Rain.

I stand in the old gray weather,
In the white and silvery rain;
The great trees huddle together
And sway with the windy strain.
I dream of the purple glory
Of the roseate mountain height,
Of the sweet-to-remember story
Of a distant and dear delight.

The rain keeps constantly raining,
And the sky is cold and gray,
And the wind in the trees keeps complaining
That summer has passed away;
But the gray and the cold are haunted
By a beauty akin to pain—
By a sense of something wanted
That never will come again.

—Wm. W. Moore Story.

Sharp Book Agent.

The business of a book agent, though the butt for stinging sarcasm, requires as much knowledge of human nature and as much diplomacy as many occupations of more dignity and prestige. For instance, I stepped into the business office of a very prominent citizen the other day to introduce a set of a well known classic author. The old gentleman was very crusty and sour, and snapped me off in quite an indignant manner, with the remark that "he didn't want any pestiferous book agent to bother him." "Here, my good friend," I said, "I don't want to sell you these books; I am paid a salary to show them merely, and advertise the company. I am a Frenchman, and the company has employed twenty-five of us at a good salary per week to show these books, not to sell them. The publishing company spends over $500 per week this way, instead of spending it by ads in the newspapers." The old gentleman bit, and soon became interested in the books. "Can you get me a set now?" he inquired. I replied that I had only one set in my trunk at the hotel, but I would sell it to him for cash. He bought the set, and that story, trick, prevarication or whatever you may call it, accomplished the sale. There's nothing like "sizing up" people.—Omaha Bee.

The Opportunity Utilized.

"Prisoner," said the judge, "have you anything to say before the sentence of the court is passed upon you?" "I have, your honor." (Turning to his lawyer) "You slick fingered, smooth jawed puddin' head! You said you would clear me for $25, and took your money in advance. You hain't got sense enough to be assistant janitor to a corn crib, and don't know as much law as a Texas horned frog; and you haven't the moral principle of a blind owl. Go ahead, judge."—Chicago Tribune.

Women's Loneliness.

Women are lonely. They miss their husbands. What amount of companionship exists between the American woman and the man? He starts for his office as soon as his breakfast is hurriedly swallowed. He does not come home at the lunch hour. He is barely in season for a late dinner. Very possibly he belongs to a club and has an engagement as soon as dinner is done. If not that, his head is in bank or counting house, and he studies the stock quotations in the night's paper and counts as against a possible rise of wheat the day's gossip with which his wife is overflowing very dry. They have callers or they go to opera or theater. It may easily happen that they do not spend ten minutes in conversation with each other during the day. American men are always in a hurry. They seem to live for the sole purpose of catching trains. They have no time to amuse or be amused. The conditions of modern life separate them from women. The lives of men grow more and more simple—business comprehends the whole. The lives of women grow more complex—everything which is not business is given over to them. A man past the romantic epoch who honestly enjoys talking with women is not an average mortal. The everyday sort of man takes pains to be detained somewhere until all the guests have departed from his wife's five o'clock tea. The couple live in different worlds.—Julia Ward Howe.

There is a certain functionary at most theaters of whose existence the theater-going public is ignorant. He is a sort of human fare register, and is employed by the proprietors of the theater to see that the folks in the box office make honest returns. An hour or so after the evening performance or matinee begins, he invades the box office opens the ticket box with his key—which is the sole key to that receptacle—and carefully counts the tickets. As everybody knows, a complete set of tickets is printed for each performance. Those tickets not landed over as unsold should be in the ticket box. If they are not found then the human fare register notes that fact, and the box office people must pay for the missing ones. This method of supervision precludes the possibility of fraud or collusion on the part of ticket sellers and ticket takers.

A plump, petite and pretty blonde created no small sensation on Fifth avenue last Saturday afternoon, or, more accurately, a feature of her costume created a sensation. She was, perhaps, verging on her majority, was evidently of aristocratic family, and was dressed in excellent taste. The one startling feature of her makeup was a black plume, which adorned her Gainsborough hat. Not only did the plume adorn her hat, but was gracefully wound about her neck after the fashion of a boa, and the loose end hung down nearly to her waist. Every female passer turned to catch another glimpse of the innovation, and the seemingly unconscious belle was the observed of all observers.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

Judge Kelly, the famous Pennsylvania congressman, is an inveterate tobacco chewer. For fifty years he has munched the weed and slept with a quid in his mouth. The development of a nicotine cancer compelled him to give up the weed pending an operation on his mouth. On the morning when the surgeons were going to operate upon him the judge put a piece of tobacco slyly into his mouth. His daughter detected it and urged her father to take it out. "My daughter," said the sturdy congressman, "those doctors will be here to cut me up in just about one hour; they tell me that the chances are that I may die under the operation; now, before I die, I mean to have one more good chew."

A mother was one Sunday giving her child, a boy of 7 years, some bible instruction. She was telling him the story of Adam's fall. Having narrated the tale of the apple and what mischief it did, the mother asked: "Now, don't you think Adam did very wrong to eat the apple?" The little fellow thought a moment, and then answered: "Why, would it have been polite to refuse the apple when the lady offered it to him?"

Col. Fred Grant has a match-box which engages about as much of his attention as anything else. It is a handsome affair, being of Roman gold, studded with diamonds. One diamond in the collection is as large as a pea, and it is by pressing upon this that the box is opened. The box was given to ex-President Grant by the Shah of Persia. The Colonel is never tired of showing it and of talking about it.

A young married man has a quaint conceit in the shape of a scarf-pin, made from a pearly tooth that once belonged to a babe of his. The little bit of ivory, set openly in etruscan gold makes a very tasteful bit of jewelry. Nobody would recognize the baby's tooth in it.

Coleridge Smith—How do you like Sappington? He's a true Bohemian, don't you think? De Quincey Brown—Well, no; I saw him going in to take a Russian bath yesterday.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, APRIL 28, 1889.

No. 10.

Though the legislature has been adjourned some time, it would appear that the carelessness with which some of its work was done has not yet been fully discovered. In the latter end of the session it was found that gross errors had been made by the clerks in the engrossment and enrollment of some of the important bills. It now seems that in one instance a bill, which had been lost, afterward received the signatures in approval of the presiding officers of each house, and of the executive. Of late years it has been almost the rule in the legislatures of this state not to give the care and attention to the work of law making that its importance deserves. The organization of our houses is usually effected with indecent haste, and men are chosen in some instances to fill important clerical positions who are either entirely without qualification, or who are corrupt. Most of the officers are agreed upon by the caucuses of the dominant parties on trades. When the legislature comes down to the transaction of business, the work, as a general proposition, of framing and considering beneficial and advanced legislation falls upon a very few members. A great many men whom the people select to represent them are more interested in the "sacks" that appear, or may appear, than in legitimate work. The result has been that very many deserving bills have been refused passage, while some others which are disgraceful become laws, so far as that department of the government can make them, and the executive or judicial arm of the government has had to be invoked to protect the people from the work of the vicious elements that misuse the power which, through the carelessness of the people in the selection of their representatives, they are enabled to wield.

If a change could be made in the constitution, materially reducing the membership of the legislature, it would result in the selections being made with greater care; men of more ability and integrity would be chosen, and better work would be accomplished. Instead of bills being introduced by the hundreds and the files loaded down with propositions to cinch or steal, they would contain only measures properly entitled to legislative consideration. As it is now, bills are biennially introduced striking at industries and lines of business and professions with no expectation of their passage, but with the hope that the parties who believe they may be harmfully affected will purchase their defeat. So long as the political influences which at present control the nominations and elections of officers in the large cities exist, and so long as the people remain apathetic and do not rebel, little hope can be entertained for a better state of affairs. While condemnation of the methods of these political rings can not be too severe, the people themselves are to blame in permitting this flagrant usurpation of power.

In the city of San Francisco it would seem that the matter of the selection of officers has been taken from the people by political cliques, the leaders of which operate openly; they have reduced it to a business system. How much longer this state of affairs will continue depends on the temper of the people of that metropolis. A condition of things there, no worse than that which now exists, gave rise to a vigilance committee in 1856, and the summary execution of some of the more objectionable characters purified the political atmosphere for a time. It is not at all unlikely that some high handed acts against the public interest by some of these political criminals may bring about a repetition of the events of 1856. Should it so happen, it is not probable that those who may suffer will receive much sympathy from the people of the State.

A correspondent writes us inquiring upon whom the loss will fall of the cargo jettisoned from the steamship Missouri. If a contingency had arisen, that in order to save the Missouri and a portion of her cargo some had to be cast into the sea, the loss would be averaged, and all the merchandise with which she originally sailed would bear the loss pro rata. In this case, however, neither the ship nor the cargo was in danger, and the sacrifice was made to save the lives of the passengers of another steamer. Under the circumstances the insurers of the destroyed goods are relieved, and the consignees have recourse on the owners of the Missouri; but it seems clear that the Danmark owners must eventually foot the bill, in that the sacrifice was made at the suggestion of the captain of that vessel, and to save her passengers. Of necessity the most liberal latitude is allowed sea captains when such emergencies arise. In some cases, such as mutiny, they have been justified in inflicting the punishment of death.

Perhaps the most extreme case was that of the mutiny on the United States brig Somers, in 1842. A plot was discovered to take the vessel and convert her into a pirate. The ringleader was Philip Spencer, son of the distinguished statesman, John C. Spencer, who at that time was Secretary of War. It almost appears from the accounts published of the matter that the plot was but the silly conception of Spencer, who was a mere youth. Three of the parties were tried at sea by the officers of the vessel, convicted and hanged to the yard arm. The youth of Spencer, and the prominence of his father, created much sympathy for him when the ship arrived home and the news of his execution became public, and an investigation was instituted which lasted forty days. It resulted in the exoneration of the captain of the Somers. The case was ably reviewed by J. Fennimore Cooper, who condemned the action of the captain, but it seems that popular opinion generally justified him.

In the case of the Missouri, Captain Murrell had no other alternative. While it is true that the Danmark is known to have floated days after the removal of her passengers, and may yet be afloat, the indications were that she was in imminent danger of sinking, and had Captain Murrell permitted 700 souls to be swallowed in the sea by declining to jettison a portion of the cargo of his vessel, he would deserve to be execrated. His company have warmly approved his course, and one of the owners of the ship has said: "It is not probable, however, that the owners of the Danmark, or the Government under whose flag she sailed, will permit the Missouri people to bear the loss, even if, under maritime laws, the Danmark would not be obligated to pay it."

It would seem that in these days of progress it is not particularly expensive to publish a newspaper, and that it can be done with no extensive wear of editorial brains. A publisher who desires to avail himself of the luxury can run his paper from what are called "plates," and an intelligent boy can act as editor and printer.

These plates are simply metallic casts of type set up at some type foundry; they are sold to such papers as will publish them, and their cost is trifling. A paper can buy its editorial matter, ready written and in type, for $1.80 per column, general miscellany and humorous matter comes cheap—from 35 to 50 cents per column. Of course it results in a number of papers publishing the same reading matter, but it enables a publisher to make a great show at a nominal expense.

The using of plates in papers is a severe blow at printers, and should be deprecated by typographical and other trade unions. It is gratifying that the prosperous papers in the State that have used them are discontinuing the practice, and, with few exceptions, they are availed of only by papers in the smaller towns. The serious objection to their use is that printers are shut out of employment, and in many offices competent workmen are not used. A paper owes it to the community by which it is supported to have its work done at home, and by men who are practical printers. The editor of a paper should either do his own writing or have it done by someone in his locality, and he should exercise his own judgment in the selection of his miscellany.

An eminent divine once said that "Justice is like a pair of huge iron jaws, that opened and closed with mechanical regularity." This idea was to illustrate the inequality of the administration of the law. If some poor unfortunate wretch should appear just as these huge jaws were about to close, no matter what mitigating circumstances existed, he was doomed to be crushed; while those whom fate reserved for a more opportune time—the opening of those ponderous jaws—were likely to escape, unless held until the descending process occurred. Occasionally just about the time these jaws are to close, the court, and jurors and newspapers have a spasm of virtue, and every poor devil that is even accused of crime is rushed between the closing jaws. Then again, no matter how guilty or vile the criminal, these jaws are either opening or suffering an attack of lockjaw. The author of the sentiment told of two boys who robbed a famous orchard of some apples. One escaped; the other caught and convicted of theft. This conviction shaped his future course, and he went from bad to worse. Many years later the two boys met. The one who escaped was a judge; the other a criminal at the bar. The former had to pronounce the sentence of death upon the companion of their first crime. Originally what was the difference between them?

The name of Henry M. Stanley is a synonym for energy, pluck, endurance, tenacity and bold daring, added to a trained intelligence of a very high order. While the world is sounding his praises without stint, comes a suspicious person in the New York World and intimates that Stanley is but the employe of a mysterious syndicate, which is really engaged in a phase of the slave trade, and is pushing its speculation in slaves and ivory in the name of science, and seeking gain under the banner of glory.

Sir Charles Russell, leading counsel for Parnell in the contest with the London Times, and said to be one of the most universally accomplished men living, has given a newspaper man some good old things in a good new dress. He says: "I have only four ways of preparing my work: First, to do one thing at a time, whether it is writing a brief or eating oysters; concentrating whatever faculties I am endowed with upon whatever I am doing at the moment. Second, when dealing with complicated facts, to arrange the narrative of events in the order of date—a simple rule, not always acted upon, but which enables you to unravel the most complicated story, and to see the relation of one set of facts to other facts. Third, never to trouble about authorities or case law supposed to bear on a particular question until I have accurately and definitely ascertained the precise facts. * * * * My fourth rule is to try and apply the judicial faculty to your own case in order to determine what are its strong and weak points, and in order to settle in your own mind what is the real turning point in the case."

The leading and most intelligent colored voters of the Southern States propose to form clubs and enroll themselves into protective tariff organizations. This is wisdom on their part, and will serve a most excellent purpose in educating those people to their true position. Strength will be the natural result of such organization, and will be the strongest aid to the Republican party in the South. The South needs this much more than she realizes. Protection will enrich our Southern brethren.

SHAKESPEARE-BACON.

Recent Skeptical Literature—Donnelly's Cipher a Failure—Shakespeare is Shakespeare for all Time.

[Written for THEMIS by B. Collins, of Chico, Cal.]

CONCLUSION.

The following description of "Lear" (King Lear) is said to be an exact—perfect one—of the wooded district north of the Avon, including the celebrated forest of Arden; and also of the low-lying valleys and meadow lands between the Avon and the range of high lands separating Warwickshire from Oxfordshire. This country "Lear" gives to Goneril, one of his daughters:

"Of all these bounds—even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,
With plenteous rivers and wide-skirted meads—
We make thee lady."

In "As you Like it," "Love's Labors Lost," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Merry Wives of Windsor," and all through his writings, he displays a wonderfully precise knowledge of forest life, showing him to have been a close observer and deep lover of nature. When one becomes thoroughly intimate with the early life of Shakespeare; the varied scenes through which he must have passed in Stratford and vicinity, and in the country in Warwickshire, with the Ardens and other relatives, then, and not until then, can it be understood why and how he was able to portray the charming, sylvan scenes, the fresh and glowing pictures of country life scattered so profusely throughout his works. He was reared in their midst, and a mind so susceptible of impressions as his could never forget them. Like pictures in a gallery they hung in his memory, and in words as bright as the colors of the canvas he has faithfully spread them before us.

Ben Jonson in his "Discoveries," written in his old age, printed in 1641, says: "I loved the man (Shakespeare) and do honor his memory (on this side idolatry) as much as any. He was indeed honest, and of an open and free nature; had an excellent fancy, brave notions and gentle expressions, wherein he flowed with that facility, that sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped. His wit was in his own power."

Francis Meres, the author of "Wit's Treasurie," published in 1597, being "a comparative discourse of our English poets with the Greek, Latin and Italian poets," contains the following references to Shakespeare:

"As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for comedy and tragedy among the Latins; so Shakespeare among the English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage; for comedy witness his Gentlemen of Verona, his Errors, his Love's Labors Lost, * * * for tragedy his Richard the 2, Richard the 3, Henry the 4. * * *"

In the same work are found the following allusions to Shakespeare:

"As the soul of Euphorbus was thought to live in Pythagoras, so the sweet, witty soul of Ovid lives in mellifluous and honey-tongued Shakespeare. As Epinus Stolo said, the Muses would speak with Plautus tongue, if they would speak Latin, so I say the Muses would speak with Shakespeare's fine-fil'd phrase, if they would speak English."

Meres further proceeds to compare him with Horace, Pindarus, Anacreon, Callimachus, Catullus, lyric poets, and with Aeschylus, Euripides, Sophocles, Alexander, * * * Accius, M. Attilius, Secundus and Seneca, tragic poets. He also says: "The best poets for comedy are Menander, Aristophanes, * * * Plautus, Terence, Turpilus and Romanus, among the ancients," so the best for comedy among us be Edward Earle, of Oxford; Gager, of Oxford; Rowley, eloquent and witty John Lily, Lodge, Gascoyne, Greene, Shakespeare, Thomas Nash," and others.

In 1598, Richard Barnfield published some verses entitled, "Remembrance of Some English Poets," in which he thus refers to Shakespeare:

"And Shakespeare, thou whose honey-flowing vein,
Pleasing the world thy praises doth contain,
Whose Venus and whose Lucrece, sweet and chaste,
Thy name in Fame's immortal book hath plac'd;
Live ever you, at least in fame live ever:
Well may the body die, but fame die never."

Chettle, soon after the death of Elizabeth, in 1603, in a poem in which he reproaches Jonson, Dayton and other poets for not singing her praises, thus refers to Shakespeare under the name of Milicert:

"Nor doth the silver-tongued Melicert
Drop from his homied Muse one sable tear,
To mourn her death that graced his desert,
And to his lays open'd her royal ear,
Shepherd, remember our Elizabeth,
And sing her Rape, done by that Tarquin Death."

Did Francis Bacon, who had received position, honor and riches, under Elizabeth, write a poem eulogistic of the sovereign who had favored him? No. If he thought it unworthy of the position he held in the state to write a few stanzas in honor of the memory of the Queen under his own name, why did he not do so under the feigned title, "Shake-speare?" There is but one possible explanation for his neglect to do so, and that is his known cold-blooded treachery to friends. Well, his inability to do so might also be urged. If there was a man in "all England" who should have mourned in verse the death of his benefactress it was Francis Bacon. James could not object, she being dead and he being King. To have done so would not have subjected him to the loss of his official titles or positions, nor would it have been thought a capital offense. Here was a splendid opportunity for him who had been skulking under an alias to have advised the world that he was the real author of the plays published under the name of Shakespeare. If the death of such a constant, magnificent patron and friend as Elizabeth was of Bacon's would not stir, fire, enthuse and animate the soul of a poet, what would? Is there a line of poetry in her praise from the haughty Baron? Can a single line of poetry be shown wherein Bacon eulogizes James I on his accession to the throne, though the latter knighted him before his accession? These were occasions on which Donnelly's poet should have exerted himself. He did nothing, at least to the eye of the general reader. There may yet be a numerical revelation! Shakespeare did write a stanza eulogistic of him. Davison's "Poetical Rhapsody," 1602, contains a fine tribute from the pen of Charles Best to Shakespeare. Even the tombstone of his favorite daughter is made to speak his praise:

"Witty above her sexe, but that's not all;
Wise to salvation was good Mistress Hall.
Something of Shakespeare was in that, but this Wholly of him, with whom she's now in blisse."

Before the publication of the folio edition of 1623, a monument was erected to the poet's memory at Stratford. "It represented him sitting under an arch, with a cushion before him, a pen in his right hand, and his left resting upon a sheet of paper." Here is a part of some commendatory verses referring to it:

"When that stone is rent,
And time dissolves thy Stratford Monument,
Here we alive shall view thee still."

On a tablet below the bust were several inscriptions. Here is a part of one:

"Read, if thou canst, whom envious Death hath plast Within this monument. Shakespeare; with whom Quick nature died. * * *
Sieth all ye he hath writ," etc.

Anyone who is familiar with the life and character of Ben Jonson knows very well that he would not lend his pen to eulogy or commendation for pay. He knew Shakespeare as well as any man living, and furnished the testimonial lines set opposite to the engraving of the 1623 edition:

"This figure, that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;

O, could he but have drawn his wit,
As I have done his picture, but his booke."

But, since he cannot, Reader, looke
Not on his Picture, but his booke."

Jonson also wrote a somewhat lengthy poem, "To the Memory of my Beloved, the Author, Mr. William Shakespeare, and what he hath left us." Below will be found a few extracts:

"Soul of the age,
The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage,
My Shakespeare, rise! I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser; or bid Beaumont lie
A little further, to make thee a room;
Thou art a monument without a tomb;
And art alive still, while thy book doth live,
And we have wits to read and praise to give."

And though thou hadst small Latin, and less Greek,
From thence to honor thee, I would not seek For names."

Triumph, my Britain! thou hast one to show,
To whom all s'enes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time;

Nature herself was proud of his designs,
And joyed to near the dressing of his lines;

Yet I must not give Nature all; thy art,
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part."

* * * * *
For a good poet's made as well as born;
And such wert thou. Look how the father's face,
Lives in his issue; even so the race
Of Shakespeare's mind, and manners, brightly shines
In his well-turned and true-fil'd lines;
In each of which he seems to shake a lance
As brandished at the eyes of ignorance.
Sweet Susan of Avon, what a sight it were,
To see thee in our water yet appear;
And make those flights upon the banks of Thames,
That so did take Eliza and our James."

Davenant, Aubrey and Digges, contemporaries, also wrote eulogistic verses of him. Hugh Holland also wrote some lines in praise of him, which he entitled: "Upon the lines and life of the famous scenic poet, Master W. Shakespeare." In the edition of 1632 appear some lines from the pen of John Milton, being "an epitaph on the admirable dramatic poet, W. Shakespeare."

Aubrey, a writer who lived but a few years after Shakespeare, speaks in high commendation of him.

Heminge and Condell, who were actors and joint owners with Shakespeare at the Blackfriars and the Globe, and who collected the plays and published the edition of 1623, must have known whether Shakespeare possessed any dramatic talent—was a writer. Upon this point those who were with him most are the most fulsome in their praises. They all, doubtless, at different times saw him engaged in his literary labors, and knew of the fact of his ability to write, as well as I or any one else would know that a man was an artisan by seeing him actually engaged in some branch of his business.

The evidence of Shakespeare's contemporaries upon the question involved must be accepted. If it is rejected, then all facts recorded by authors of histories and other writings must be rejected as unreliable and uncertain.

In the writings, poems and plays of Shakespeare, there may not be a great deal of rant and nonsensical affectation shown about the place of his birth. It is also quite true that his youthful associates, with whom he strolled along the daisied banks of the Avon, or with whom he ranged through the woodland haunts and bosky dells of shadowy Arden, have not been immortalized in his dramas. Some, however, whom he had occasion to remember have been referred to in such a manner as to be unmistakable. Homer does not mention the place of his birth; nor did the ancient Greek dramatists think it necessary to cram their works with the names of persons and places unknown to fame. Does Ben Jonson do so in his dramas, or does Milton in his great epics!

Many of the sonnets of Shakespeare were written as early as 1598, while even an earlier date is given, but the whole were not collected and published until 1609. They were published as Shakespeare's, and under his own supervision. Whoever wrote the plays also wrote the sonnets. The latter contain expressions pointing to the author so plainly that his name cannot be mistaken. These expressions are involved in no obscuring doubts and mists, and they may be fitly denominated an open "cipher." They explain themselves. In sonnet cx, Shakespeare refers in a regretful tone to the fact of his having been a strolling player. He says:

"Alas! 'tis true I have gone here and there,
And made myself a molly to the view,
Gor'd mine thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
Made old offences of affections new."

Bacon never was a player. If not could he have used the foregoing language in characterizing himself. He never went here and there, strolling from place to place; exhibiting himself upon the stage to the public view. Shakespeare, as a host of the playwrights were, was an actor. There will also be found an evident allusion to the same fact in the next succeeding sonnet.

In sonnets cxxxv, cxxxvi and cxlii will be found a play upon the Christian name of the poet. The quotations made from each sonnet are only so much as is necessary for illustration.

"Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will,
And Will to boot, and Will in over-plus;
More than enough am I, that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making additions thus."

"If thy soul check thee that I come so near,
Swear to thy blind soul that I was thy Will;
And will, thy soul knows, is admitted there;
Thus far for love, my love-suit, sweet, fulfil,
Will will fulfil the treasure of thy love."

"Make but my name thy love and love that still,
And then thou lov'st me, for my name is Will."

"So will I pray that thou my Will have thy Will;
If thou turn back, and thy loud crying still."

The writer of the sonnets says my name is Will. If he had said my name is Francis, then it would have raised a fair, but not a positive presumption, that it was Francis Bacon, for there was another very competent writer of that time whose front name was Francis. There was no other writer of that time whose front name was Will but Shakespeare. Here, then, is indisputable, internal evidence as to the authorship of the sonnets. It shows beyond a doubt that Shakespeare wrote them. This being established, it corroborates the evidence adduced from contemporary writers that he had the capacity to and did write. The conclusion from the whole evidence is irresistible that William Shakespeare, and not Francis Bacon, wrote the plays and poems that have from 1589 been published under his name and ascribed to him.

The woman, Anne Hathaway, whom Shakespeare married, was nearly eight years his senior. This disparity in age has undoubtedly been referred to by Shakespeare in several passages of his plays. Coleridge says if it had not been for this fact the well known speech of the Duke to Viola, in "Twelfth Night" (act 2, sc. 4) would never have occurred. It is as follows:

"Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so near's she to him;
So sways the level in her husband's heart:
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women's are."

The Duke again:

"Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affections cannot hold the bent."

In Hamlet (act 3, sc. 2) in the celebrated play-scene, Shakespeare indulges in a little persiflage or badinage upon himself. Hamlet says:

"Would not this, sir, and a forest of feathers (if the rest of my fortunes turn Turk with me), with two provincial roses on my razed shoes, get me a fellowship in a cry of players, sir?"

Hor. Half a share.

Ham. A whole one, I.

For thou dost know, O, Damon dear,
This realm dismantled was
Of Jove himself; and now reigns here
A very, very — peacock.

Hor. You might have rhymed.

Yes, Shakespeare would rhyme with here.

One critical theorist, who, like Donnelly, determines everything by general supposition, claims that all that is said by Hamlet in this scene about players and playing, including the above quotation, was leveled by Bacon at Shakespeare. The proof is that Shakespeare was a fair actor, and always took the "ghost's" part in the play of Hamlet, in which there was no opportunity to "tare a passion to tatters." Moreover, Shakespeare, having a controlling interest in the theater, would not have permitted the acting of a play where he was purposely thus caricatured by the writer. To do so himself would be quite another thing.

Chaucer, says Hallam, was the production of the middle ages. If so, then were the great minds of the Elizabethan age the result of all preceding causes. Whatever of culture, of moral and intellectual force the Anglo-Saxon and the Anglo-Norman had acquired, converged and centered in the minds of this age. From this period forth, art, philosophy, science, poetry, the various branches of learning, with a more correct system of thinking and writing, marched with a surer and a swifter progress.

Apollo, the god of rocky Delos, was by antiquity accorded the protectorship of the Muses. Shakespeare, born in the isle of Albion, stands as preëminent in the modern world as Apollo did in the ancient, and like him is deserving of all praise and honor "this side of idolatry." He is best known by his works. They are inestimable and will convey his name, as it deserves to be, to remotest generations. His dramas will ever be a text-book to the student of human nature; will ever be admired for the intimate knowledge they develop of human affairs; for the finish and consummate taste displayed in their composition, and the prodigality of creative genius. Shakespeare's pen is always guided by a master hand whether dealing with the sublime or familiar. No writer discloses so clearly the mysteries of nature. He has but to wave his magical wand over the world when it springs into bloom like an Eden or withers into a desolation like Sahara. Nor halts his bold imagination on the confines of the material world, these beyond, like a glorious orb of light it flames, gilding and illuminating with an intellectual radiance the beauties of the world ideal, imperceptible to the soul less spiritualized than his own. With the rapidity of thought he carries you with him to fields of eternal light, where splendors on splendors bewildering rise, and in an instant surrounds you with the convolving shadows of limitless night. With a single dash of the pen he involves you in the storms of "grim visaged war," and in the next leaves you musing midst the calms of "piping peace." No pen since the times of Horace and Juvenal has flowed so freely with wit, humor, satire, jest and ridicule. Nature was his teacher, and she never had a pupil who learned so much of her philosophy. His works are Nature's open book wherein mankind may gather truths more precious than gold. He reigns by common consent monarch of the higher realms of poetry, though Greece boasts her Homer and Sophocles, Rome her Seneca and Terence, Italy her Dante and Tasso, Spain her Lope-de-Vega, France her Corneille, and Germany her Schiller. Shakespeare, with his earthly issue, "sleeps in dull, cold marble;" but his dramatic creations, children of his genius, are immortal and cannot die!

The Stage.

Frauk E. McNish in "Silence and Fun" will be one of the Tourists next season.

Barry and Fay have a burlesque on Little Lord Fauntleroy, which is said to be very amusing.

J. B. Polk, of Strategists fame, will soon produce The Silent Partner in the California circuit.

The circus will be here on May 31st. Young boys and old boys alike will find means and excuses to be on hand.

Manager Hall states that during the engagement of Little Lord Fauntleroy, both Flossie Elthyl and Wallie Eddinger will appear. On one evening they will alternate in the title role.

The number of actors and actresses now out of employment for the summer may be judged from the fact that over six hundred applications were received by Minnie Maddern for positions in her new Featherbrain Company.

Edw. S. Belknap, son of D. P. Belknap, the well known member of the late law firm, Winans & Belknap, and author of "Belknap's Probate Practice," has departed from the path of his father and adopted the stage as his profession.

So much has been written and said about The Little Lord Fauntleroy, that about the only thing remaining to say is that the remarkable dramatic creation will be presented in this city in its entirety, on Monday and Tuesday evenings, with two matinees. The indications are that there will be packed houses at every performance to witness the sensation of the hour.

Miss Della Fox, who will be remembered as one of the brightest actresses in the King's Fool during its recent presentation at Sacramento, will be starred next season by George Lederer in "Pretty as a Picture." THEMIS was the first newspaper to give this little lady a kindly notice in the state. We pointed out her merits as an artist upon her first appearance in California.

The greatest actors and actresses are most given to superstitions. Edw. Booth, it is said, will not sleep in a room with an odd number. John McCullough would never allow any garment to go over his head when dressing for a new part. Clara Morris will stop in the midst of a scene if she sees a nail on the floor, and will not proceed until the offensive object is removed. A pin on the stage upsets Ada Rehan. Fanny Davenport is exceedingly superstitious as to the manner of her make-up for the stage. Actors and actresses have their "Jonahs" and "Mascots," and believe in them reverently.

Theatrical managers might take a hint from the clever device which Phelps, the father of Edmund, who died in 1870, used to adopt during his famous management of Sadler's Wells. In Henry V., in the march-past before Agincourt, the troops, we are told, defiled behind a set-piece which rose breast-high. Madame Tussaud modeled eighty wax heads; these were fitted on "dummy" figures of wicker-work, clad in the costume and armor of the period. Every man of the gallant forty carried two of these figures, one on either side, attached to a sort of frame-work which was lashed to his back; hence it seemed that they were marching three abreast. As they traump past, banners streaming, drums beating, trumpets braying, the stage seemed crowded with soldiers, and the illusion was so perfect that the audience never once discovered the artifice.

We have had our first season of "The Little Tycoon." It could have been called "A Whale" with as much propriety. There is nothing in the name with our modern playwright. The comic little opera, with its two acts, was sparkling, with an occasional scrap of antiquity cropping out. Willard Spencer, the author, had the supervision of the work. C. E. Borgman was the musical director. The company was good and had a freshness about its members never witnessed here before—that is, they were all young people. Miss Linyard and Miss Cerbi are both clever actresses as well as musicians. There was, however, a slight lisp in the speech and song of each. Miss Arnold has an excellently trained voice, and also possesses fine dramatic ability. Graham, Libby and Wilson acquitted themselves handsomely in the leading male roles. The most taking effort of the opera was "The Fatal Step," with chorus and step. The gem of the opera was "Love Comes Like a Summer-Sigh." This is a clever work of art, sparkling with wit and humor. No display of female charms of a suggestive character. The costuming was rich and attractive. The whole work—artists, chorus, costuming, scenery, music, orchestra—was a delight to the audience. It was a success in all respects.

Way back in the "fifties," Lew Rattler and Albert Hart, with a number of improvised minstrels, went up to Iowa Hill, Placer county, to give an entertainment. Somehow the project was not a financial success, and this "great star combination" found itself stranded. This was not the term used in those days. The way the idea was then expressed was: "The show did not pan out"—"We were all dead broke." The gang was composed of devil-may-care fellows, and the fact of being without money in those days was not the cause of much worry. Lew Rattler, a natural imp of mischief, suggested to Albert Hart a plan to secure a good breakfast for the party, and at the same time to give the Iowa Hillites a little fun. Albert was to go down town and look and act as silly as possible, and stroll in front of a butcher shop, where he was to stare about vacantly. While doing this Rattler, as a huge joke of course in the eyes of the spectators, fastened a beefsteak on the tail of his coat. Albert then started off amid the laughs and jeers of the crowd, who pelted him with potatoes, and occasionally an onion from the front of a grocery store. Hart would turn around as he was being pelted and abuse the crowd roundly by swearing that he would kill some of them, not forgetting, meantime, to pick up some of the potatoes and onions as they fell near him. He kept on his march amid the fusillade until he reached the crest of the adjacent hill, when he was overtaken by the other members of the band. When a safe distance was reached, the party enjoyed a hearty breakfast of beefsteak, onions and potatoes, secured by the ruse of Albert Hart and Lew Rattler.

Book Chat.

Sir Percy Florence Shelly, the son of the great poet, is a musical enthusiast, and has composed the score to many of his father's songs.

The learned review of the "Shakespeare-Bacon" controversy, published in THEMIS, has attracted much attention among literary people. They are in accord with praise for the masterly handling of the subject by B. Collins. The demand for back numbers containing these articles has been so great that we have run out of copies.

The Bohemianism of college life is without doubt one of its most pleasant characteristics, but it seems to us that it is often carried too far. We are so largely separated from the rest of the world that the tendency is to make the disjunction complete. The college man regards it as his unquestioned privilege to sit in the front seat at the theatres, to walk upon any street at any hour, smoking a cigar or worse yet a "bull-dog;" to stare at pretty girls as his peculiar property; to lounge in the most comfortable position possible in chapel at those hours when his presence is required by the mandate of a nearly all-wise faculty, and to do many other things of a like nature. These habits are harmless enough in themselves, perhaps, but they fasten themselves so firmly upon a man that, when at last he wishes to be rid of them, he will find that they can be broken off only with the greatest difficulty and discomfort, and that even then they will leave an influence upon him for life. A certain Bohemianism is perfectly compatible with gentlemanliness, and we do not mean to frown upon it in its entirety, being, as it is, so thoroughly the essence of college life. But we do say that it ought to be chained up within the campus and confined to the association of student with student; and that in public the college man should show himself as he is, a gentleman.—Courant.

There are but few who are aware of the fact that James McClatchy, the veteran editor of the Bee was the first to assist Henry George in this state. James McClatchy gave him his first employment upon newspaper work, and finding that he possessed brains, and that he was also a quick observer, suggested the ideas upon land reform, and the policy of making land pay all taxes. It was a favorite subject of discussion with McClatchy—that of land reform and opposition to the monopoly of God's heritage. McClatchy impressed upon Henry George that land taxation is the best taxation. Land is the source of all wealth, and should pay the expenses of government. Actuated by the friendly advice of the veteran editor, Henry George in 1871 issued a pamphlet on Our Land Policy, using the ideas of Mr. McClatchy and adding some ultra views of his own. It was through the many discussions with McClatchy that Henry George conceived the project of "Progress and Poverty." Indeed it is known that McClatchy assisted him materially in the production of that work. There were many of the extreme views expressed by Mr. George, with which Mr. McClatchy was not in accord. But the general outline of the work, particularly land taxation and many of the ideas on political economy, emanated from McClatchy. His idea was that there was no possible way in which owners of land can shift the tax upon the user. The veteran editor of the Bee was never in accord with the license system. He always urged that a license tax to carry on a business was wrong upon principles of political economy, and that the amount of such a license came out of consumers. Not so with a tax on land. No matter how little or how much you tax it there will be no more of it. No matter how much you tax it there will be no less. For illustration: Here is a lot in San Francisco, which, irrespective of the building, is worth $100,000. What gives this value? Not what its owner has done, but the fact that 150,000 people have settled around it. This lot yields, say $10,000 annually. Where does this come from? Evidently from the earnings of the workers of the community. It is the settlement around land that fixes its value. These were the original ideas that prompted "Progress and Poverty."

Professional Chat.

When the matter of the estate of Supple was called on the law calendar of our Superior Court Friday, the attorney representing the applicant had rather a severe attack of rheumatism, and hobbled to the clerk's desk to get the papers. Judge Van Fleet called him to the bench and whispered: "I hope that your client is more supple than you seem to be today." The pains of rheumatism were forgotten to appreciate the joke by laughter.

There is one gentleman at least, who regards the methods of some lawyers as unfair. It developed in the trial of a murder case in this city not long ago. A woman had been shot in the heart, and an important question was how far she could have run after being shot. A number of physicians were called who testified as to the fatality of wounds in that organ with respect to time. Among others of the witnesses was Dr. H. W. Nelson, a prominent physician and surgeon here. The doctor gave his opinion in the matter, and in illustration of one of the points said: "In early days, when I was up at Greenwood valley, a patient of mine was down with fever, and in a quarrel with his nurse, the latter seized a big knife and plunged it through the body of my patient, and the point went into the bed clothing. The knife passed clear through his heart. The nurse was arrested and put on trial for murder, and I of course was called as a witness in the case. There was a little fellow of a lawyer defending, and don't you know"—and here the doctor arose impressively from the witness chair to emphasize his statement—"and don't you know, that confounded lawyer tried to make that jury believe that death was occasioned by my treatment of the patient, and yet that knife went plump through his heart."

Several years ago, while Gen. A. L. Hart was the Attorney-General of this state, he was called to San Francisco to attend a session of the Supreme Court. To say that Gen. Hart is an exceedingly proud man, and that the distinguished title of Attorney-General did not detract from his organ of self-esteem, could be no libel. Well, on this particular occasion it was mid-summer, and the General had purchased and was wearing a new straw hat of a fashionable pattern. In matters of dress he is very particular, and wears a boutonnieres on the left lapel of his coat. As has already been said he has a high opinion of himself and of his importance. Dressed as we have described, he was standing quietly on the corner of Kearny and Bush streets, not thinking of anything in particular, but like thousands of others, just listlessly looking around. Judge of his surprise, when a big burly policeman, of unmistakable Milesian accent, tapped him on the shoulder, saying "Jist stip along me bye, ther be no ladies fur the loikes of yes." The General's dignity was touched, and with a majestic move of his right arm, he said: "Look here my man, you don't know who I am. I am the Attorney—" "Howld on, howld on, yes moight jist as well gwan along, phat's that hat yez hav on, but a spalpeen of a dude." The General was speechless, but left that locality vowing that he would not wear any more dude straw hats, or a hat with a polka-dot band.

Sacramento Pioneers—Interesting Notes.

At the monthly meeting of the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers, held last evening, there was presented to the society, by Mrs. Jane Cooper, the widow of John H. Cooper, a whip saw that cut out the lumber used in the construction of Sutter's Fort and his saw mill at Coloma. The saw is seven feet long and of primitive pattern. It was given to Mark Stuart, who settled at 29th and B streets, in this city, October 16, 1848, by Captain John A. Sutter. The presentation was made to Stuart in December, 1848, and since then the saw has been in possession of the Stuart family. Mrs. Cooper, who presented the relic to the Pioneers, is the daughter of Mark Stuart. The Stuart property at 29th and B streets is the site of the tannery built by Captain Sutter. The original stone used in grinding the bark is still on the premises, but is broken. This relic will also be presented by Mrs. Cooper to the Pioneers.

At the last meeting of the board of directors of the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers a committee of three, consisting of W. H. Luther, J. S. Miller and N. D. Goodell was appointed to revise the constitution, by-laws and list of members, the same not having been revised since 1877. To the list of members will be added the names of those who have joined since that date, and the deceased members will be noted. The historian of the society was added to the committee to assist in the collection of data.

At the meeting last night was presented, by W. C. Hendricks, Secretary of State, a bound volume of the roster of the state government, recently published. A number of copies of the volume were also received from the historian of the society for distribution to the members, the portion relating to the early officers and history of the state having been compiled and written by him and gratuitously presented to the State on behalf of the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers.

The 30th, the anniversary of the inauguration of General Washington, the first President, will be observed by the Pioneers. They will keep open house from 2 o'clock p. m. So far as is now known, there will be no other observance of the anniversary of this historical event in this city. No doubt, however, flags will be generally masted and the bells will be rang.

A letter was received by the postmaster a few days ago, which was referred to the Pioneer Society. It is from Stephen A. Cornell, of Springfield, Mass. The writer asks that the letter be handed to a '92er, and requests that a directory map of the city be sent him. He states that he arrived in California, on the "Sea Eagle," in the fall of 1849, and in the following year engaged in the business of manufacturing mattresses on Third street, in Sacramento, being the first to establish a business of that character here. Mr. Cornell says in his letter: "We started on J street, and occupied a tent leased from an agent of the land owners. I was a witness of the squatter riots of that time (1850), and saw the men killed." From the records of the Pioneers we learn that the "Sea Eagle" arrived at San Francisco October 30, 1849, from Boston, after a passage of 235 days. She brought in 72 passengers.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest temperature during the past week was 84° on Wednesday, and 51° on Saturday, while for the same time last year the highest and lowest was 84° and 43°. This shows that during the same period last year in April the highest temperature was the same as last week, but the latter's lowest temperature was 8° higher than the lowest for the corresponding date of one year ago; this shows the uniformity of this climate for the same month, year in and year out. There were no marked meteorological features during the week just passed. No rain was precipitated and no frosts occurring. Yesterday was the most disagreeable of the week, on account of the increased velocity of the wind, wafting the dry particles of decaying and effete matter into the pedestrian's eyes, ears, nose and mouth, to the great annoyance of all, whether in or out of doors. The wind's velocity was from 20 to 25 miles per hour.

Five cities in Kansas have elected women for mayors. Whew! no wonder there are cyclones there.

Notes of Auburn.

Auburn is the governmental seat of one of the most historic of the counties of California—Placer. The county was organized by an act of the second legislature, passed April 23, 1851. Its name, meaning a place where gold is found mixed with alluvial detritus, is indicative of its mineral wealth. However, aside from the placers, some very rich quartz and gravel mines have been developed within its confines. We have before us a history and directory of the county, published in 1861, probably the first work of that character ever compiled. From it we learn that the legislative act referred to fixed Auburn as the county seat, and that at the first county election, held May 26, 1851, H. Fitzsimmons was elected County Judge; Samuel C. Astin, Sheriff; R. D. Hopkins, District Attorney; James T. Stewart, Clerk; Alfred Lewis, Assessor, and Douglas Bingham, Treasurer. No official record exists of the returns of that election, but a surprisingly large vote was polled, and several interesting contests resulted.

Auburn, then a town, but now a city, is one of the oldest settlements in the State, having been a mining camp of considerable importance early in 1849. The first mining in that immediate locality was a short distance above where the American Hotel now stands. In the spring of 1850 Auburn became the trading post of a very extensive mining district. The settlement was originally known as Wood's Dry Diggings, but late in 1849 a public meeting was held to select a more suitable name, and the present one was adopted at the suggestion of one of the principal traders, H. M. House, who had come from the New York Auburn. There have been several versions published of the origin of the town name, but we deem this the most correct.

For very many years Auburn was one of the most prosperous and important of the mining centers of California, and Auburn Ravine, which passes through the town, has perhaps yielded more gold than any other stream in the state of its size.

The county of Placer has furnished some of the ablest statesmen of the state; its bar in early days was equal to that of San Francisco. The Placer Herald was first issued at Auburn, September 11, 1852, by T. Mitchell & Co. It is one of the oldest newspapers in the state, and in the early days had for its editors such men as State Senator James Anderson and Lieutenant-Governor Joseph W. Walkup. The next newspaper issued at Auburn was the Placer Democrat, on April 19, 1854. This paper supported the Broderick wing of the Democracy, and its first editor was John Shannon. The paper was short-lived. The next journal was the Auburn Whig, edited by M. E. Mills at first, and afterward by Hiram R. Hawkins. It ceased publication May 19, 1855. On June 2d, following, the Placer Press appeared, under the editorial management of Hawkins. On October 1, 1857, A. S. Smith and James P. Bull took charge of the concern, and they were succeeded by J. W. Scooby, who held the editorial reins until December 4, 1858. The Democratic Signal, edited by R. C. Poland, was established in 1860, as the organ of the Douglas Democracy. Later on, and during the war, the Stars and Stripes was founded by John C. Boggs, now of Newcastle. We believe that the late Hart Fellows was its first editor. It was an organ of the Union party. Afterward it passed into the hands of W. A. Selkirk, later of the Mountain Democrat. All of the papers mentioned, except the Herald, have ceased publication. Shortly before the suspension of the Stars and Stripes, the Placer Argus was established, and later on the Placer Republican was founded. The Republican and Argus are now each printed on new cylinder presses run by water power.

In early years mining was the prominent industry about Auburn and throughout the foothill sections of the county. While mining is still a leading industry, fruit and vine raising is more prominent. At first little effort was made to develop the resources of foothill lands in the direction of fruit production. The pioneer in that line was Dr. J. R. Crandall, of Auburn. His orchard is perhaps the first that was planted in the foothills in this state. He demonstrated the value of that class of land in that line. Rev. N. R. Peck, of Ophir, engaged early in fruit raising. Gradually others followed their footsteps, and to-day the foothill belt of Placer county is regarded as about the best fruit raising district in California, and the exportation of its produce to the local markets and to the east has grown to an immense proportion. Large, however, as they now are, the industry is comparatively in its infancy, and the developments which may reasonably be looked for in a few years will be astonishing.

The city of Auburn has entered upon an era of permanent prosperity; the last fifteen months have been characterized by marked and important improvements. A new water works has been established, with pipes all over the city, and the water pressure from gravitation is the greatest in the state. All characters of machinery can be run by water pressure at a comparatively nominal expense. There have been completed some thirty new dwellings. Some of them—those of William Ambrose, Col. E. R. Hamilton, Mrs. Ford and E. C. Snowden, are elegant. The Placer County Bank has been instituted, with handsome furnishings, and it is located in a building having a modern city front of iron and glass. The improvements of "Tolia Heights," the joint property of F. Birdsall and Col. Hamilton are extensive. The court house yard has been platted and planted to lawn and ornamental trees. Seven or eight new streets have been opened. A park has been established near the railroad station and will be planted with flowers and trees, for the benefit of travelers on the railroad. It will be similar to the one recently established at Pino. There have been organized two fire companies, with equipments worth nearly $2,000; and a new firemen's hall has recently been erected at the station. Granite cross walks have been laid. St. Luke's Episcopal Church Society will soon erect a new church. Additions have been made to the county hospital, so that it is practically a new building. The indications of prosperity are marked, and there is no doubt that they are so far but a beginning.

Death of Philip A. Roach.

Philip A. Roach, ex-Public Administrator, and a well-known politician, died at San Francisco yesterday afternoon. Last Sunday Roach met with an accident on his stairway. He was seized with an attack of vertigo and fell backward, striking his head against the banister. It was thought at one time that he would recover, but instead he became worse. Roach came to this coast in 1848. He was Alcade of Monterey in 1849. He was Public Administrator for four years. He was once President of the Pioneers and a member of the Chosen Friends. —S. F. Post.

Mr. Roach was one of the earliest men of prominence in the state after American rule. In addition to the offices named above, he served as State Senator from San Francisco, and introduced the bill to punish wife beaters by corporal punishment. The bill became a law, but was declared unconstitutional by the courts. The deceased, with W. S. Moss and Geo. Pen Johnson, was for many years an editor and publisher of the San Francisco Examiner, then an evening paper. Since the organization of the state Mr. Roach took an active part in public affairs, and enjoyed the respect of the leaders of both political parties and of the better element of the city of San Francisco. The old Examiner had for its editors and proprietors the gentlemen above named, and Col. B. F. Washington. With Roach they are now all dead.

A Sacramentan Abroad.

Mrs. Julia Dunn, a member of the old Sacramento Bohemian Club, and sister of Mrs. Jos. P. Glover and W. H. Payne, of this city, has literally made her mark in Paris. Her fine landscape is given a place among the works of art in that place where only art is recognized, the Paris Salon. Mrs. Dunn has produced many small works of art, some of which are in private art galleries in this city. She is also an accomplished dramatist. Ahmed, a Tale of the Alhambra, an excellent spectacular drama, was a pronounced success a few years ago. Among other dramatic efforts was a comedy-drama, entitled Danger Ahead, which we believe the authoress never produced upon the stage. It was a work of real merit, and would eclipse many of the modern society dramas. Also, a drama, entitled The Governess, played by John McCullough in the leading role, at the old California theater, San Francisco. She was the author of a novel, called "The Bewitching Widow." The lady is a true Bohemian by disposition, and possesses varied accomplishments. A wit, songstress, artiste, authoress—in fact the embodiment of all the elements of Bohemia—perfectly independent. To illustrate her absolute independence of character, she, with Mrs. Geo. W. Chesley and Mrs. Alice Foye, made the tour of Europe without an escort. The three independent women traveled alone, and got along finely without the aid of the tyrant man.

B. Collins.

The readers of THEMIS for a number of weeks have been entertained by some learned articles on the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy, concluded in this number. Many inquiries have been made as to the author, B. Collins. We are not given to any fulsome adulation, and simply say that Mr. Collins is a lawyer of Chico, Butte county. He is a thorough student, and has one of the largest miscellaneous libraries in the State. His tastes are literary. We hope to move the gentleman again soon to favor THEMIS and the public with more of his literary work.

OAKLAND VICTORIOUS.

Sacramento Taken into Camp by Colonel Robinson's Noisy Aggregation.

Fully one thousand people witnessed the ball game at Snowflake Park yesterday afternoon between the Sacramentos and Oaklands, and were well pleased with such an exciting and interesting exhibition. Both teams batted the ball hard and often, and home-runs and three-baggers were common occurrences. It was a very pretty contest, the only error being Fudger's wide throw to first, which allowed the runner to reach third.

Each nine struggled hard to carry off the honors of the day, and a more magnificent and better played contest could rarely have been seen. Brilliant stops and difficult fly catching was the order of the hour, and the players seemed to vie with each other in playing good ball. To Goodenough, in centre field, belongs the fielding honors of the contest; his five put-outs were all difficult catches, and won for him the admiration of the audience. Promptly at half past three Umpire Young called game, with the home club to bat. They were retired in one, two, three order. The Oaklanders came, and, after two batters had been fielded out, Smalley was given a base on balls. Hardie, the next up, sent the ball flying to the wagon drive, bringing in two of Oakland's earned runs.

Sacramento made one run in the second, on Jevne's slow hit, which Fudger threw wide to first, allowing the runner to reach third; Newbert then made a single, on which Jevne scored. No more runs were made by the Sacramentos until the fifth, when, by heavy and timely hitting, three runs were scored. In the seventh three more tallies were added to their score after two hands were out. Goodenough and Sylvester both hit for singles, when Krehmeyer hit for a home-run, sending the ball among the carriages, and clearing the bases, making the score 7 to 8 in Oakland's favor.

The Oaklanders' half of the third inning was very disastrous to Sacramento. The noisy aggregation jumped on to "Big" Burke's delivery, and hit the ball hard and often, piling up five runs, which virtually won the game for them.

No more runs were scored after the fifth inning, and Colonel Robinson's face wore a smile of satisfaction when the last man was retired and his club walked off with the laurels.

The Oaklanders are now a close second, and are pressing the league leaders pretty hard, and before long Oakland will be leading the procession. Sacramento still remains in the same position. If they expect to make a showing in the league race they should be "up and doing," and play ball with a little more vim and dash.

The batting honors of the game belong to Hardie. His heavy and timely hitting materially aided the Oaklanders in winning yesterday's game.

Sacramento presents a spotless record, all of the team accepting the many chances offered them. Veach's playing on the initial was all that could be desired. He fields his position to perfection, and will surely lead the league's basemen, if he continues to occupy the position. O'Day is the king pin second baseman of the California League. His good work for the Sacramentos has won for him the encomiums of the public. Krehmeyer's work behind the bat was excellent. He is gradually getting his "eye" on the ball, and before long he will be a terror to the league's pitchers. O'Neill, the Oaklanders' shortstop, is a very fine player and coacher; he keeps his men on the move and works hard and earnest to save his team from defeat, and he very often succeeds. The game was a brilliant affair, and it will be a long time before the baseball fraternity will witness such another combination of good fielding and heavy hitting. The following is the score:

Legislative Appropriations.

In the issue of THEMIS of the 7th inst., in referring to the determination of the Controller of the State not to draw his warrant for $100,000, for the maintenance of the State Mining Bureau, and for some other appropriations, we said:

"There does not appear to be any ambiguity or doubt about the intention and purpose of the legislature in passing these laws. It is declared in express terms what the appropriation is for; the amount is certain and definite; and the funds are created by necessary implication. It is a well established principle of all law, that when the law-making power provides for any particular thing to be done, all things necessary to make such enactment effectual is implied."

Attorney-General Johnson on the 25th rendered an opinion to Mr. Heydenfeldt, a Trustee of the State Mining Bureau, on the matter to which we then referred, and holds that it is not necessary that the Act should contain a direction to the Controller to draw his warrant in express terms, but an implied authorization is sufficient. He also holds that it is not necessary that the Act should say that the money named as appropriated is appropriated out of the general fund, or out of moneys not otherwise specifically appropriated.

The Attorney-General holds that the appropriation is available. His views are in accord with those expressed by THEMIS several weeks ago, and when the question first arose.

Deaths.

John Donahue, an old citizen of Sacramento city and county, died on April 25th. He was a native of Ireland, aged 58 years. Mr. Donahue was formerly a resident of Folsom, where he was for years the district road overseer. He moved to this city about twenty years ago and engaged in the grocery business at 12th and D streets, where he continued his avocation until his death. He leaves a widow and several children. His funeral will take place to-day at 2:30 P. M. from his late residence, 12th and D streets; thence to Catholic Church, 12th street, where services will be held.

Major K. F. Wiemeyer, the proprietor of the Sacramento Journal, died on the 22d of April in this city. The deceased was an old and respected citizen, and one of the founders of the Abend Post, a German daily paper at San Francisco. He was an old soldier, having served as captain of a company of the 6th regiment California volunteers during the rebellion. For a number of years he was a member of our city Board of Education. He leaves a widow.

The funeral of John Sarti, who died in this city on the 26th, will take place under the auspices of the Italian military company, from the Y. M. I. hall, to-day at 6:30 o'clock P. M., sharp; thence to the new Catholic Church where funeral services will be held.

He wanted money with which to procure materials, and borrowed various sums, aggregating over $100. He then skipped out, leaving the confiding Yoloites to mourn.

An ordinance passed by the Board of Supervisors on the 22d inst., is being published for the ten times that the law requires. It reads: "All seines or nets used by fishermen fishing in any of the public waters of Sacramento county for shad or salmon shall, when drawn closely together, and measured inside the knot, be not less than seven and one-half inches in length." A mistake has been made. No doubt the intention of the Board was to forbid the use of nets having meshes of less than seven and one-half inches. As the published ordinance reads it is meaningless.

Street Sprinkling.

Trustee McLaughlin has taken a firm stand upon the question of the Board of Trustees exceeding appropriations and estimates. With regard to street sprinkling the Street Commissioner declares:

"I don't propose to have the street fund run short this year if I can help it, and that is why I didn't vote to let the contracts for a year." To the suggestion that it would cost but $500 more than the amount of tax levied for street sprinkling purposes, the Street Commissioner said: "Well, even $500 is some money, and a little here and there counts up. In the fall, when the contracts expire we could just as well extend the contract as now if the finances will allow it. I propose to keep down the dust."

If all the departments of the city government would adhere to these mandatory provisions of the law, and keep within the estimates made by the properly constituted authorities, there would be very little trouble. It was the reckless expenditures of the past, in excess of the lawful estimates for governmental expenditures, that foisted upon us the monstrous debt that now oppresses us. If Trustee McLaughlin is in earnest in the line of action he has adopted, the people of Sacramento will have cause to rejoice in the future.

CHESS DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY L. F. GRIFFIN.

Contributions to this column are cordially solicited. All communications pertaining to chess should be addressed to L. F. Griffin, box 402.

The Redding vs. Committee game has at last been concluded in favor of Mr. R. It has lasted over two months and sixty-one moves were made. There were errors of omission and commission on both sides, but, taking the game as a whole, it is a fair specimen of chess correspondence play.

It will soon be published in full in this column, with notes by Dr. Benjamin Marshall, of San Francisco. The concluding moves were:

Redding.	Committee.
59—K to K B 6	P to K R 6
60—R takes P	R to K S 7
61—R to Q S 7	P to K R 7
62—R to Q R 7	Resigns.

This fine problem is taken from the Illustrated London News, and was composed by Mr. G. Heathcote. The key move is not very adroitly concealed, but there is an after variation which we think will puzzle many. White—K at Q S 2, R at K R 3, Bishops at K 7 and Q S 6, Pawns at Q R 2, Q B 4, K 3, K B 4, K S 6, Knight at Q 6.

Black—K at Q 4, Pawns at K 5 and K S 2. White to move and mate in three moves.

We would like to have all of our readers who have the time to solve above and send us the solution.

This week's game should possess interest to California chess players, as one of the contestants visited San Francisco last year and played a little match with Mr. J. D. Redding. We allude to Mr. G. H. D. Gossip, of Australia.

Mr. Gossip's play in this game is highly complimented by the veteran editor of the N. Y. Clipper, who says he should be awarded the brilliancy prize.

Plant a Tree.

He who plants a tree,
Plants a joy;
Plants a comfort that will never cloy;
Every day a fresh reality,
Beautiful and strong,
To whose shelter throng
Creatures blithe with song,
If thou couldst know, thou happy tree,
Of the bliss that shall inhabit thee!

He who plants a tree—
He plants youth;
Victories won for centuries, in sooth;
Life of time that hints eternity!
Boughs their strength uprear;
New shoots every year
On glad growths appear.
Thou shalt teach the age, sturdy tree,
Youth of soul is immortality.
—Lucy Larcom.

Col. John Attaway, of Canton, Ga., has a most remarkable dog. It is keenly alive to the misfortunes of the animal world. A few days ago this wonderful canine happened upon a cow in the streets that had lost her tail. After looking with an eye of pity on that poor creature, he dashed off to the blacksmith shop, where an old cow's tail was being used to keep the flies from disturbing horses while the smith shod them, and snatching up the brush ran back and laid it down at the cow's feet. The cow, however, failed to appreciate the dog's kindness, and left in disgust.

In Paris there are 132 recognized butcher shops where horse flesh is openly sold.

MISCELLANY.

The latest "ridiculous nonsense" is to eat peanuts for insomnia cure.

There are more American women studying art in Vienna and Paris than ever before.

It is better to be respectable and poor, than "enormously rich" sans reputation.

The fashionable women forget that rudeness can never pass current for superiority.

The women in England exceed the men by 3,000,000, and yet Englishmen come to America for their wives.

A new powder adopted in the British army is the invention of a Mr. Hengst. It is said to be smokeless, flavorless and non-heating, with less recoil and report than the powder of the old sort.

A ringtailed raccoon, kept by a Lansing, Mich., man as a pet, broke loose the other night and eat up a wedding cake, sampled the rest of the wedding feast, and made the bride so mad that she almost postponed the wedding.

The women leaders throughout the country feel pleased over the statement of Dr. Chaille, the noted statistician, to the effect that the average life of woman is longer than that of man. But if the lives of the sex are so full of misery as they are represented to be by prominent feminine lecturers, where does the cause for rejoicing come in?

He puts his overcoat in pawn.

Edgar Saltus, the pessimistic, atheistic, realistic writer of fiction of the French school, is small, slender, dark and melancholy, and prides himself on his lack of manners, his total depravity and his tailor. He is one of the best dressed men of his generation, and, although handsome enough to find favor in the eyes of most women, he is convinced that in the drawing-room, as in the literary field, there is nothing like undiluted wickedness.

Belfast, Me., once had an eccentric clergyman known as Archie Harden. Among other stories that are told of him is one that a lady informed him that some one had stolen her ax. "Oh, oh," said he, "I'll get it for you." He appointed a prayer meeting for the next evening, and after talking a while he stopped, looked over the congregation a moment and said: "Somebody has stolen sister P's ax, and if it is not brought back by to-morrow morning I will tell who has it. Glory to God." The ax was leaning against the woodpile next morning. It is also claimed that he reformed a kicking cow by praying for her, and that he once corrected a brother minister by stopping him in the middle of a sermon and praying over the mistake which he said the preacher had just made.

A Minneapolis lady who was for a few days with the West-DeLaitre party on the continent, tells an amusing story of her visit to Munich. She says:

"I, like other tourists, was notified to appear before the officials to state my business in the city, how long I intended to remain, and many other, as I thought, impertinent questions. When I told them that my given name was Donizetti they stormed and took on dreadfully. They would not believe that my father would name his daughter after the celebrated Italian musician.

"The next question which astonished me was, 'Who is your patron saint?'

"We are not accustomed to having patron saints in America," said I, which statement I could not persuade them to believe. Their persistence was so annoying that I concluded to have a patron for the occasion, so I finally said:

"My patron saint is Uncle Sam."

"This was quite satisfactory, and it was solemnly recorded opposite my name.

"A few days afterward some one well versed in American affairs was looking over these records, and he laughed so immoderately at my patron saint that it upset the officials, who demanded an explanation, which was finally given.

"My most singular saint and my peculiar name were too much for the Germans, who sent for me and ordered me out of the city."
—Minneapolis Tribune.

A Very Wicked Story.

When Minister Thomas re-entered Portland society with a beautiful Swedish wife there was a sensation, and the story tellers, as well as the gossips of a less imaginative turn, found an abundance of material for their enjoyment.

The story goes that at a home breakfast one morning, before Mrs. Thomas had acquired much English, an awkward servant spilled some coffee on the minister's coat.

"That's a d—d pretty piece of work!" exclaimed the minister.

"What did you say then, my dear?" Mrs. Thomas innocently asked, in Swedish.

"I said it was a very fine cup of coffee," blandly replied her husband, in the same language.

That very evening, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas attended a brilliant party. With a laudable wish to compliment the refreshments and at the same time honor the English language by expressing her sentiments in it, the beautiful Swede exclaimed, sweetly, after a sip of fragrant Mocha, "That's a d—d pretty piece of work!"

Who do you suppose was so wicked as to invent this story?—Leicester Journal.

A Lawyer's Duty.

The very peculiar conduct of Assistant District Attorney Jerome in the Krulisch case is attracting a good deal of attention and is likely to lead to a discussion of the ethics of the bar. In his address to the jury—he began it with tears—he said that "he had lain awake all night thinking of the case, and he was forced by the long, unbroken chain of circumstantial evidence to the conclusion that the prisoner was guilty." The testimony, he averred, was "one complete mosaic, not a piece of which was wanting." As soon as the jury had rendered their verdict of "not guilty" Mr. Jerome hastened to thank them from the bottom of his heart, and assured them that the verdict was a righteous one on the evidence. A lawyer has the right and often the duty to defend a man whom he believes, or it may be knows, to be guilty, because every accused person has the right to the fullest protection of the law. He can only be convicted under the law, and if the evidence against him is not sufficient to convict him legally he is entitled to an acquittal. He may be guilty, but courts have no right to convict except in accordance with the rules of evidence, which are founded on experience and are designed for the protection of the innocent who might otherwise be unjustly condemned. Obviously it is quite another matter for a prosecuting officer to do his best or his worst to procure the conviction of a person he believes to be innocent. This is what Mr. Jerome admits that he did, and we should think that the judges or the bar association, or whoever has authority in the premises, would call him to account for conduct which disgraces an honorable profession. A prosecuting officer is not supposed to be playing a game for stakes. It is not his duty to convict regardless of the evidence. To do so by skill would be to commit a crime and make the courts justly odious. They are for the protection of the innocent even more than for the punishment of the guilty, and if an officer of the court may twist the law for the purpose of convicting innocent persons there is an alarming defect in the machinery of justice. Mr. Jerome seems out of place.—New Haven Union, April 11, 1889.

There is no excuse for the complications that are constantly arising in the administration of our city government. Sacramento is one of the most unfortunate cities that ever existed, so far as matters of finance and government are concerned. It has been, and is, oppressed by an indebtedness from which, it would seem, it can never be relieved. That the municipality did not get value received for the money which it will be compelled to pay to extinguish its indebtedness is conceded; that the city bonds will have to be paid in full is becoming every day more apparent; unless more financial wisdom is shown the city will be lucky if it will be permitted to pay its bonded indebtedness at par. We do not, however, propose now to deal with the question of the bonded indebtedness. Of that we will treat hereafter.

The present condition of our police department is one of the many absurdities in the administration of our municipal affairs. A police bill for this city was passed by the legislature March 6, 1872. It provided for the election of a chief of police, created a board of police commissioners, and limited the police officers to a captain, and not exceeding fifteen policemen. For a number of years the maximum number of policemen was not appointed, yet the police protection of the city was almost perfect. During the session of the last legislature there was apparently an epidemic of crime in the city; a number of persons were reported to have been garrotted and robbed. The press magnified the condition of affairs, and it was made to appear that the community was at the mercy of the criminal element. It is now evident that the state of affairs then was not as bad as represented. As is usual here, when attention is directed to any subject, action is suggested and taken without mature consideration. In this case a bill was hurriedly drafted and railroaded through the legislature to increase the police force to not more than thirty. The board of police commissioners appointed a force of policemen under the new law. The board of trustees now refuse to draw warrants for the pay of these officers, for the reason that the amount of money that will come into the police fund, under the official estimate, during this fiscal year will be inadequate to pay the salaries of so large a force. The charter of this city provides that on the first Monday in February of each year the trustees shall estimate the municipal revenue for the ensuing year, and an estimate of the probable expense of maintaining the municipal government is then made. In the estimate of this year provision was made for the payment of the salaries of fifteen officers. The question now arises, where is the money to come from to pay the salaries of the other ten? It is doubtful whether an obligation in excess of the annual estimate can be provided for from the revenue of a succeeding fiscal year. It is true that the Superior Court of this county decided that where there was a shortage in the police fund a diversion could be made from the general fund to meet it, but it is a serious question whether that decision will stand in the Supreme Court. The state constitution provides:

No county, city, town, township, board of education, or school district, shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided it for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose, nor unless, before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness, provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof within twenty years from the time of contracting the same. Any indebtedness or liability incurred contrary to this provision shall be void.

The charter of this city contains the same inhibition against the expenditure of money in excess of the amounts to come into the various funds of the treasury. It provides that should the board of trustees at any time deem it necessary for the interest and protection of the city at large, or any portion of it, or the property or health of the citizens, or any other matter or thing, the object of which would be to advance the interests of the city, to contract and create any debts or obligations against the city for materials furnished and labor and services performed, without having the funds in the treasury to pay the same, they may enter into contracts and create debts without interest; and they are empowered and authorized to levy and collect a special tax, annually or in one levy, to pay such debts and to provide the mode and manner of their payment; but this proviso is added: "Provided always, that no debts, obligations or claims shall be contracted or created against the city, without first having been voted upon by the qualified electors thereof." In the charter, in the section defining the powers and duties of the board of trustees, they are authorized:

To make appropriations, examine and audit, reject or allow, the accounts of all officers or other persons having the care, management, collection or disbursement of any money collected for, belonging, appertaining or appropriated to the city or any of its uses or trusts, and to determine, allow and pay the salary, fees or percentage which such officer or other person may by law be entitled to receive, except as otherwise herein provided; to make contracts and agreements for the use and benefit of the city—such contracts and agreements in all cases to specify the fund or funds out of which payment for the same is to be made—and that the same shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated to such fund or funds for the fiscal year; and in no case shall a liability be created or a warrant drawn against any fund beyond the actual amount of money existing in such fund wherewith to meet the same.

It would seem clear from the reading of the constitution and of the charter, that any indebtedness created in excess of the income for any year is void.

This subject has been, in effect, passed upon by the Supreme Court of this state. The original constitution provided that the legislature should not in any manner create any state debt or liability which, in addition to previous debts, would exceed the sum of $300,000, except in cases of war, etc. On April 18, 1856, the legislature passed a law providing for the construction of a capitol building in the public square in this city, between I and J and 9th and 10th streets, and empowered a commission to contract for and superintend the erection of the building. The proposed capitol was to cost not exceeding $300,000. The law also authorized the issuance of 30 year bonds to that amount to pay for its construction. The contract for the building was let at $200,000, and work upon it was commenced. The bill provided that the contractor should be paid in bonds as the work progressed. But the state officers refused to issue the bonds for the work which had been done, and the contractor instituted an action of mandamus to compel their issuance. In that case the Supreme Court held that the legislature had no right to create a state debt beyond the limit fixed by the constitution, and that it had no right to tax the people to pay avoid debt. The Court said:

The power of taxation for purposes contemplated by the constitution is unlimited in the legislature, but such power does not exist for purposes not sanctioned by the constitution, but expressly prohibited. The restriction upon the power of the legislature would be nugatory, if the same end could be accomplished by other modes. The evil intended to be prevented would still exist, and the injury to the people would be the same. If the power to create the debt is denied, the power to levy taxes to pay it must equally be denied. The power to pay is a necessary incident to the power to contract, and they both must stand or fall together.

In another case, where the legislature in 1855 passed an act providing for the construction of a wagon road to the Sierra Nevada mountains, and authorized a contract to be let at a price not exceeding $100,000, it was held that the appropriation was unconstitutional and void, as it would increase the state indebtedness above $300,000. In the decision of that case Chief Justice Murray wrote an elaborate opinion, which was concurred in by the other Justices. He quoted from the reports of the debates in the constitutional convention. In the decision the court said:

This feature of our constitution was admirably designed to check the improvident expenditure of money, and the accumulation of taxes. The people refuse to part with the exclusive right, and therefore restricted the authority of the legislature within certain bounds, reserving to themselves the power of determining beyond such limits. That the article was not intended simply as a limitation on the power to borrow money is evident from its language; the words are 'shall not in any manner create any debt or debts, liability or liabilities, which singly or in the aggregate,' etc. A debt or liability may be created in other ways than the borrowing of money; it may be created by appropriation, where there is no money to meet it; it may be created by drawing on a fund where there is no cash in the treasury, or incoming revenue, to satisfy such drafts; it may be done in various ways: yet the stern letter of the constitution imperatively forbids the legislature from creating, in any manner, except in the mode pointed out, such debts or liabilities.

Other states, in whose constitutions these restrictive provisions are contained, have uniformly held that any indebtedness contracted in excess of the limitation is void, and we have no doubt that if the matter of the payment of the salaries of the police officers, where they involve an expenditure in excess of the amount in the police fund, becomes the subject of determination by the Supreme Court, it will be held that no liability can be created beyond the amount of money in that fund.

The wisdom of these restrictive provisions in the constitution and city charter is exemplified in this very matter. These additional officers were not needed, and their appointment was provided for under a temporary excitement and in the very worst of judgment. In cases of emergencies the authorities are justified morally to create liabilities in excess of their estimates, but, as a general proposition, it is better that they should be held down to the strict letter of the constitution and laws. It is but fair to the men serving as policemen that this matter be settled judicially as soon as possible. During the excitement to which we have referred a number of special officers were appointed by the city authorities; they served and have not been paid; that is unjust to them. In this case men are working for the people of Sacramento with no positive assurance that they will be paid. We see but one way out of the embarrassment other than the dismissal of ten officers, and that is to submit the question of the levying of a special tax to increase the police fund to a vote of the people; if the people are satisfied that additional officers are necessary they will undoubtedly vote the tax upon themselves; such an election should be called at an early date.

We are of the opinion that a municipal charter can be amended by proper legislation, and it would not be special. It seems that under the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of article xi of the constitution, any proposed amendment passed after the adoption of the constitution which authorizes the imposition of additional tax burdens, or which delegates to any special commission or board the power to exercise any municipal functions, or to in any way interfere with the municipal affairs is void for unconstitutionality. The act of 1889, amending the police act, does interfere with municipal affairs and delegates municipal functions, and is therefore invalid. While the original act of 1872 might be in conflict with the terms of the constitution, it antedates that instrument and is therefore excepted from its operation. But any act subsequent to the constitution which contravenes its provisions is void. Thus we have the objection to the increased liabilities over the official estimates, together with an unconstitutional provision attempting to authorize additional burdens. It is this lack of knowledge of municipal affairs and science of government that has been the bane of Sacramento from its earliest history.

There is another matter of city government which demands early and serious consideration. It is the condition of the water works. If the pumping machinery were in perfect condition its capacity would not be sufficient to supply the water needed. As it is, it is old and badly worn. The Stevens' pump has been broken and patched up; it is barely serviceable. The Holly pumps have been in constant operation since about 1872, and of course have deteriorated from wear very materially. In case of a breakage at the water works at the time of a fire, the result would be extremely disastrous. We see no reason why matters of this kind should be concealed from the people. But it seems that the policy has been to cover up our defects in city matters, with the idea that public knowledge of them might affect Sacramento injuriously. This is a mistaken policy. Our governing boards should keep the people informed, and we have no doubt that if our citizens knew the condition of our water works money would be provided to make them more efficient. We do not believe in mincing words when dealing with public matters.

In what THEMIS will publish on political and public affairs we will represent matters as we know them to exist. We believe that by so doing we will curb to some extent the vicious influences which control the politics of this city, and that hold the yoke beneath which every man who is elected to office is compelled to bend. We are not to be understood as intimating that as a rule our officers are corrupt, but we do say, and we know what we are saying, that it has often happened in this city, that men have been defeated for office because they were too honest and could not be depended upon to act in obedience to the mandates of those who had axes to grind. As a matter of fact, of late years the people of this city have had nothing to do with the nomination of the candidates for office in either Republican or Democratic parties. As we have said in former numbers, the people are to blame. They permit a few men, whose motives are not always the very best, to formulate their tickets, and these men assume, because of the favors they have rendered the candidates, that they are entitled to receive almost any consideration at their hands.

The board of trustees of this city, acting upon the advice of the legal adviser of the city, has concluded that there is no power in the board vested to suppress dives and disreputable places where liquor is sold. It is probable that the crudely drawn ordinance upon the subject is defective in substance. The fact that no penalty is named or fixed in the ordinance is cured by the charter and the codes. This question was decided in Ex parte Keating, 38 Cal. 702. It is always safe to fix the penalty in the ordinance, but the omission is not fatal. Subdivision 9 of section 2 of the city charter empowers the trustees "to license, tax, regulate, prohibit or suppress all tippling houses," etc. This power has been sustained by the courts, both state and federal. By a properly framed ordinance all saloons and tippling houses can be regulated by requiring any reasonable and uniform restriction. The fact that any such saloon or tippling house may have a county, state or federal license to carry on or conduct such business does not amount to a protection. That question has been so often decided by our higher courts that a reference to particular cases would be useless. The question is elementary in its character. With all due respect to the trustees and city attorney, they are mistaken with regard to their powers.

As far as their duties are concerned the necessity exists for some stringent regulations in matters of this character.

In our last number we referred to the crude and loose manner of legislation in this state, and the fact that some bills that never became laws, were passed to the governor and actually have place on our statute books. In the short time of sixty days it becomes a physical impossibility for any member to read and digest the multitude of bills that are presented. The average number of bills introduced in both houses would figure up to something like 1300 or 1400. This mass of crude literature is so great that no member could find the time, even if he had the inclination, to read them, much less to digest or understand the objects and ends sought to be attained. This avalanche of legislative literature is prompted by ignorance in some cases, and from dishonest motives in others. There are persons who become members of the legislature who are impressed with the idea that their greatness is to be measured by the number of bills introduced, and like some policemen who think that the number of arrests, no matter for what cause, is the formation of their record. The remedy for this evil, for an evil it is, is the appointment of a permanent code commission of the best legal talent in the state, free from all partisan influence or dictation. With such a commission all the needed legislation could be prepared in advance of each session. All bills introduced at the session could be referred to this commission, and the recommendation or rejection of any measure by this board would simplify and facilitate good legislation. This would cut off all mercenary legislation and make it impossible for cliques or lobby schemes, unless there should be an absolutely venal majority in each house of the legislature.

SOME UNWRITTEN HISTORY.

Sacramento in Embryo—How Government was Established from Chaos.

PART I.

In its genesis every city has its myths. Authentic history shades off into tradition, and tradition into romance. In modern times the newspaper is the photographic plate which catches impressions of events brought to the focal distance of the camera, furnishing the negative from which impressions may be taken, and these may be multiplied and transmitted, narrowing the margins for romance and tradition, and furnishing ground work for authentic history.

Of the early history of Sacramento many of the elements of its growth can be now seen but dimly; others not at all. Newspaper reporters were not as industrious as now, and the number few. The population was transient, and but few of the elements of its history came within the scope of newspapers then in the territory. The consequence is that many interesting things occurring between the 7th of July, 1846 and the time our city became a municipal corporation by act of the state legislature are wholly lost to history, or are now found hidden away in the memory of the few still living who took an active part in those events, or in detached papers not readily accessible to the general reader. THEMIS will do its part in rescuing from oblivion such events as come within the scope of authentic history of Sacramento in embryo. In this we will be assisted by Judge J. H. McKune, whose connection with the late United States Land Commission furnished him rare opportunities for securing information concerning Mexican rule in California, and whose active life in our midst enables him to furnish us authentic data for publication. What we say to-day is intended as introductory.

Much speculation has been indulged in as to the origin of the name California. Neither Cortez nor any of his officers were of a literary turn. The name is not a compound of Latin or Greek words, as some friars learned in those languages at one time supposed; nor was it, or anything like it, found in any dialect of any tribe of natives on this coast. It has no meaning in any way connected with its etymology, nor had it any actual locality as a name until it became fixed to a territory lying north of Cape San Lucas and extending to the British possessions on the north. The name California was invented by Garci Ordoñez de Montalvo, a translator of Amadis de Gaule, and the author of an additional volume to that celebrated work. The author of the antecedent volumes is in dispute. The French claimed it, but no French author is named as composing it, and the original, if in French, has never been inspected by any English translator. The first four books were probably written in Portuguese by Vasco de Lobeira. That knight and author died in 1403, and his work, except as preserved in Spanish translations, is not extant. The plot in his work is disjointed and inconsequent. Knights always at war—hacking and hewing on every page; giants to overcome and beautiful maidens to be rescued from impending danger or durance; castles to be attacked or defended; wizards with hate in their hearts, and witches rivaling them in demoniac fury; kings, queens, lovely ladies and chivalrous champions everywhere. The date of this translation and the writing of Montalvo is disputed, but the better opinion is that it was about 1460. In this work the most excellent king Amadis is the principal hero.

Montalvo, in his translation of Lobeira's work, took many liberties with the original, altering, adding to and abridging, so that when it came from his hands it was a more valuable work. The French and English translations of the Amadis of Gaule were taken from the Spanish of Montalvo, including a fifth volume, of which he was the author. This fifth volume he entitled "El ramo que de las cuatro libros de Amadis de Gaule se le, llamado Las Serges del Muy Esforzado Caballero Esplandian hijo del exelent rey Amadis," which we translate: "That branch of the four books of Amadis de Gaul, called the exploits of the cavalier Esplandian, son of the excellent king Amadis." In this volume it is stated that on the right of the Indies, very near the terrestrial paradise, is an island peopled with black women, griffins, and other creatures of imagination, which Montalvo called California. This fifth volume of Amadis de Gaule had no doubt been read by some one connected with explorations of this Pacific coast under Cortez. That conqueror and those under his command had some general notion that the East Indies would be found near their discoveries north of Acapulco. At an early date that country now called California had these names, neither permanently fixed: (1) California; (2) New Albion; (3) Islas Carolinas.

The second of these names was given to it by Sir Francis Drake, who touched on this coast during his second voyage. Nearly a century later, Charles the Second of Spain sent out an expedition to conquer California, then thought to be an island near the East Indies. This expedition was abortive, and the name Islas Carolinas given to the country by him never fully attached. But in an atlas of the Spanish dominions made soon after by Father Shirera, presented to Philip V of Spain, on his accession to the throne, an island is located and called Islas Carolinas. This name was also carried into other Spanish maps of the time. As further explorations proved that the discoveries on this coast were part of a great continent, and not an island, the name California extended its significance until a territory, already an important factor in the history of English speaking peoples, and destined to take a front rank in our American Republic, came to be called by a name coined by a Spanish author to represent an impossible country, peopled by creatures of his own imagination.

California was a Spanish province of the kingdom of New Spain (Mexico), from the time of its first occupation by the Spaniards to September, 1812, until the independence of Mexico was acknowledged by Spain, during which time it was under the immediate direction of military governors, charged with political powers.

In 1768 Gaspar de Portala, military and political governor, appointed by the Spanish government, formed the first establishments in Upper California. It was under his administration that the first missions were established by Father Junipero Serra. Expeditions by land and sea arrived in Upper California. Portala was the commander-in-chief of the parties, and Captain Fernando Rivera y Moncada was the second in command. The first division arrived at San Diego May 14, 1769, and on July 16th following, a mission was established at that place. Other missions were subsequently founded. Portala returned to Mexico, and Felipe de Barri was appointed governor in his stead. He took office in 1771. Felipe de Neve succeeded him December 27, 1774. Pedro Fages became governor September 7, 1782, and Jose Antonio Romero was appointed to the office September 1, 1790. He took office April 17, 1791, but died April 9, 1792. Jose Joaquin de Arrillaga assumed the office, ad interim, on the death of Romero. Diego de Borica was appointed governor by a royal order of June 10, 1793. He left for Mexico in January, 1800, and died there July 18th of that year. In the meantime Arrillaga filled the office, ad interim. He died July 25, 1814, at the age of 64. The office was filled, ad interim, then by Jose Dario Arguello, who served until August, 1815, when he was succeeded by Pablo Vicente Sola, who served until the establishment of independence from Spanish rule, and for some time after California became Mexican territory. That independence became a fixed fact in September, 1821, and on the 9th of April, 1822, the authorities of California recognized Mexico as a sovereign power and swore allegiance to the new government. Thenceforward, until the government of the United States, under treaty with Mexico acquired California, its governors were appointed by a government having its seat of power at the home of the Montezumas.

In 1822, Pablo Vicente Sola became political chief of the Mexican province of California. He went to Mexico as deputy to the congress of that nation in 1823, and in his place Luis Antonio Arguello acted as political chief from January, 1823, until the beginning of 1825. In the meantime the federal constitution of Mexico was established in October, 1824, by which California became a territory of the Mexican United States. From early in 1825 to 1830, Jose Maria de Echandia was political chief of California. In the latter part of 1830, Manuel Victoria superceded Echandia. His administration was not a success. Mexico had become a country of revolutions, and California expelled her governor in the latter part of 1831, remaining in anarchy until 1833.

General Jose Figueroa was appointed by the Mexican government as political chief and military commandant, and arrived here in January, 1833. He held his office till his death, Sept. 29, 1835, during which time he put in active operation the colonization law of Mexico of 1824, and the regulations prescribed by that government in 1828 for the disposition of her public lands.

In September, 1835, Jose Castro was the eldest member of the territorial deputation in the province, and by the laws of Mexico he was required to act as political chief when there was a vacancy or the incumbent was unable to act. He acted as political chief before the death of Figueroa, from the beginning of September, 1835, until January 2, 1836, when Nicolas Gutierrez, a colonel of cavalry, assumed the office of political chief ad interim. By which we understand that as the power was with the military it mattered little, in a civil point of view, whether or not there was a statute authorizing him to administer the civil affairs of the government.

Mariano Chico was sent out by Mexico as political chief, arriving at Monterey May 3, 1836, terminating for the time being the ad interim power of Gutierrez. But the local authorities were dissatisfied with the change. Chico had no (or few) soldiers. His power was defied, and in July, 1836, he was expelled.

Nicolas Gutierrez resumed the command. His power was, however, of short duration, as in the beginning of November he was himself expelled. On November 6, 1836, the departmental assembly of California declared California a free and independent state, and Gutierrez was expelled from his office.

In the meantime news had been received in California that the revolution in Texas had become a success, and that the federal system of Mexico had been abolished by the success of its dictator, Santa Ana. Thereupon the territorial deputation assumed the powers of a constitutional assembly, and on the 6th day of November, 1836, declared California an independent state and proclaimed Mariano Guadalupe Vallejo as holder of the supreme power without giving his office a name. He, however, did not assume the powers conferred on him by the assembly.

California was a long distance from the city of Mexico. News traveled slowly. Santa Ana had a power not easily resisted, and the independent power did not at once assume shape or consistence, and after a series of troubles, in 1837 Juan Bautista Alvarado was declared by the people governor of the state of California, and a congress was assembled at Santa Barbara in April of that year to fully establish the state government.

But this condition of affairs did not receive the approval of the Mexican government, and Carlos Antonio Carillo was appointed by that government as governor of the department of California under the new or central system of government, under Santa Ana. But the people of California refused to recognize Carillo, and he never succeeded in displacing the power of Alvarado. Alvarado therefore continued to act as governor of the State. Santa Ana had enough to do to maintain his central power, and could not enforce obedience to his orders in California. A compromise was thereupon entered into between the authorities of Mexico and California, by which the home government recognized Alvarado as governor, and confirmed all his acts conformable to law. Thus the State proclaimed by the departmental assembly did not become an accomplished fact, and California remained a province of Mexico. Alvarado remained governor of California from the beginning of 1837 to the end of 1842, with Mariano G. Vallejo as commandante general.

General Manuel Micheltoreno arrived in California in October, 1842, as governor and military commandante, with extraordinary powers from the dictator, Santa Ana. The capital was then at Monterey, but Micheltoreno took office at Los Angeles, Alvarado still continuing to hold his office at Monterey till the end of the year 1842. During this time it was a matter of some doubt whether the appointee of Santa Ana would be allowed to assume control. But finally Alvarado quit Monterey, and Micheltoreno held his office and administered the government until February, 1845, when he was compelled (practically) to quit the country. He left in pursuance of an agreement between himself and the departmental assembly, always hostile to him and then too strong for him to resist.

Pio Pico was then (February 15, 1845) first member of the departmental assembly, and as such acted as governor until he received his confirmation as governor by the authorities of Mexico, and afterward as such appointee until California became a territory of the United States, July 7, 1846. In 1836, by virtue of a law passed by Mexico, Los Angeles became the capital of California, but the archives remained at Monterey, and practically Monterey was the capital of California till the country was occupied by the Americans. The two exceptions were the terms of Micheltoreno and Pico.

Among the most remarkable publications of recent date, is the work of Edward Bellamy, entitled Looking Backward. This sensation has prompted a movement called Nationalism, which embodies some of the ablest men and deepest thinkers of the age. An epitome of the book mentioned, which in itself seems chimerical, presents these outlines: The hero of the story is a young Bostonian. He goes into a mesmeric sleep in 1886. Awakes in the year 2000. Boston is changed to a bigger, brighter and brainier city. The social condition has undergone a change. The government is the employer of all—provides for everyone. Everyone between 21 and 45 must render service to the government. After that each has his income, but can pass his time as he pleases, without restriction. Machinery has reached such perfection that the laborer's hours are brief. There is no money, no wages, and as a substitute persons receive a non-transferable certificate entitling the holder to an equal share with all others in the product of the country. This certificate contains coupons representing values similar to dollars and cents, and when used to purchase anything the amount is punched out. There are no poorhouses, hospitals, jails, or churches. Sermon rooms, lecture rooms, concert halls, etc., are connected with every one's residence by telephone, so that one wishing to hear either can avail himself by using the telephone. The government absorbs all trusts and monopolies—in fact the people demanded their confiscation. The ideas enunciated in this queer book have been the means of the organization of exclusive clubs whose objects are to unite those who think that the nation ought to have charge of every industry. It is not confined to any political party. Women may become members. National control of railroads, telegraphs, express companies, and all character of trusts and monopolies, seem to be some of the objects. Among the distinguished names that have taken the initiative in this movement are: Edward Everett Hale, Prof. De Leon, of Columbia College, W. McIlvaine, of Harpers' Magazine, Thos. W. Higginson, and hundreds of others.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Salvini's daughter has shown some histrionic genius.

The great actress of the future will be one who has never been divorced.

Miss Ullie Akerstrom, in her play, Annette, the Dancing Girl, is said to resemble our Lotta in her methods.

The Bunch of Keys was given on Thursday and Friday evenings at the Clunie Opera House. It is about time this trashy affair was retired. While it was advertised that there would be new specialties, it was simply the same old hodge-podge.

There are few plays of American authorship with distinctive American character portrayals. It is claimed for that recent production, Old Jed Proddy, that it is purely Yankee in sentiment and individuality. It is the joint production of Rich and Harris, and is to be presented by Richard Golden, Charles Bowser and Dora Wiley.

It is said of Tamberlik, the great opera tenor, that in Madrid, where the artist lived, one day he was passing through the bird market, when he suddenly drew a 1,000 franc bank note from his pocket and bought up all the little creatures, opened the cages and shouted laughingly as the birds flew into the air: "Go, and be free, my brothers!"

Ward's Comedy Company will hold the Clunie Opera House boards Monday and Tuesday evenings, with Red Fox. On Wednesday and Thursday nights, Inshavogue. In preparation, White's dramatization of She. The company consists of James M. Ward, "Red Fox," Carrie Clark Ward, "Maye Carolan," Lou Belmore, Johnny Williams, R. C. White, J. Hall, Will Gordon, Chas. Ferris, J. P. Dunne, Timothy McCarthy, Kitty Belmore, Mrs. Belle Douglas, Mrs. Murphy, and Miss Mary Perkins. W. H. Gallagher is business manager. The company is strong and deserves patronage.

We are to have a local revival of Mikado, under the direction of W. H. Kinross. The opera will be presented at the Metropolitan on the 8th, 9th and 10th of May, for the benefit of the improvement fund of St. Paul's Church. There are some new features introduced, consisting of acrobats, etc. The dramatis personae is: E. B. Carroll, "Mikado;" R. T. Cohn, "Nanki Poo;" Maurice Hageman, "Ko-Ko;" Horace Crocker, "Poo-Bah;" M. H. Ravenscroft, "Pish-Tush;" Miss Irma Fitch, "Yum-Yum;" Miss Grace Hatch, "Pitti-Sing;" Mrs. Frank Kiefer, "Peep-Bo," and Mrs. Alice Carter, "Katsisha."

Hugo Mansfeldt and wife gave a concert at the Congregational Church on Friday night. It was largely attended.

Little Lord Fauntleroy has come and gone. Not to say that it is wonderful how children of such tender years can be trained and drilled to such a degree of perfection, where an exacting memory must be utilized, would be unjust. While the art work of the play was all that could be desired, it seemed cold and unnatural after all, and we left the scenes on the mimic stage with the thought that the creation of the Little Lord was unreal. The members of the company are excellent. Russell Bassett was at home as "Hobbs," the grocer. He is a pains-taking artist in all his work. Miss Everson could hardly be said to be fully up to the requirements of "Mrs. Errol." The crusty rheumatic "Earl" was in the right hands with Frank E. Aiken.

Many years ago Geo. Ciprico was an ambitious votary of the histrionic art. He became imbued with the idea that Hamlet was his particular forte. On some important occasion there was to be a performance, embracing the talents of a number of actors, including an act of the burnt cork order by Lew Rattler. Now, Rattler was a student of Shakespeare, as well as a minstrel, and was fully up in many of the characters, including the part of the "Ghost" in Hamlet. On the occasion named, Ciprico had selected a few scenes from Hamlet, particularly Scene V of Act I, where "Hamlet" has the interview with the shade of his departed father. Lew Rattler was urged by Ciprico to assume the part, and after much persuasion agreed to do so. All went along smoothly until the "Ghost" is to appear to "Hamlet," when Lew Rattler comes stalking upon the stage in full armor, but with an infernally black face. The idea of a black ghost of "Hamlet's" father simply paralyzed Ciprico, and he fled from the stage amid the most uproarious shouts of the audience, which at once realized and appreciated Lew Rattler's joke. Ciprico vowed vengeance, and was tempted to murder Rattler. However, Lew's joke did not murder the ghost scene any more than Ciprico did the character of the melancholy Dane. That was the first and last black ghost ever presented in the play of the Prince of Denmark.

In Harper's for May, Mr. Brandon Mathews has an article on the Dramatic Outlook in America, which is very interesting, and is a review of all the modern plays. "The 'decline of the drama' is a phrase frequently used and rarely defined." The writer claims that there is a steady increase of play-houses and play-goers. The leading actors of to-day are the foremost the world ever knew. The dearth of new plays with genuine merit is the chief decadence, if any exists, in the drama. Men of letters and brains do not devote their abilities upon the drama when there is such a field for honor and profit in the novel and other branches of literary work. Good dramas are few in these days, and a return to the dramatic works of the past century by all our great actors is certainly no sign or evidence of decadence in the art of acting, or the drama itself. One of the defects in the modern play is that it is generally a one-part play, with all the other characters incident to and built up around it. This is the fault of our present starring system that has grown up within the last few years, to the detriment of an aggregation of dramatic talent. As a rule we have been dependent upon the English and French for our plays. The first American play was written just one hundred years ago, by Royall Tyler, afterward Chief Justice of Vermont, and was entitled The Contrast. There was a genuine Jonathan or Yankee character, which gave us a picture of our own life and customs. Americans have since then recognized our plays with such characters as Mose, Rip Van Winkle, Davy Crockett, Col. Sellers, Judge Sloc and Josh Whitcomb. While Fedora, La Tosca and such plays serve a purpose for a time, we never tire of Richelieu, The Lady of Lyons and the old standard dramas, even though they are English.

Professional Chat.

That was not a Sacramento surgeon who was examining for deafness an applicant for a pension, and to test the man's left ear held a watch at some distance and asked him if he could hear it tick. The answer was "No," and the same reply was given to repeated questions as the watch was brought gradually nearer. "Put him down totally deaf in the left ear," said the surgeon, and, holding the watch to his right ear, the same questions were asked. To his surprise the answers were the same. The surgeon's watch had stopped.

About seventeen years ago, when the writer was a young attorney, Judge R. C. Clark was County Judge, and had jurisdiction of all felony cases except murder. Just about this time there was a large number of cattle-stealing cases, and a syndicate of cattlemen retained N. Greene Curtis to prosecute any offenders that might be captured. It occurred that a citizen of Folsom, a butcher, who had formerly borne an excellent reputation, was arrested and brought to trial for stealing cattle. The accused retained the writer to defend him. The case was a hard one and the evidence exceedingly strong. This fact Judge Clark knew, and having a strong sympathy for the defendant, with whom he was well acquainted, he suggested to the writer that great care and experience was required in the handling of the case in order to secure an acquittal, and that an older head should be associated. The defendant, however, reposed confidence in his choice, and no other counsel was employed. At this point, just before the commencement of the trial, James W. Coffroth, who was always the friend of the young attorney, quietly sat down beside the writer and whispered some instructions to him. Said he, "I want to play a good trick on Curtis; you follow my indication and we will trick Curtis and clear your man. When the trial commences you make as many objections as you can, and at each one get in a speech on the merits of the case for the defense. Never mind the point of objection, but pile on the speech." This was followed, and during the trial about all that could be said for the defense had been said. When all the testimony was in, and case ready for the argument, Coffroth whispered: "Now you keep quiet and let the District Attorney make his opening argument. Curtis will expect to have the close; here is where you must head him off." The District Attorney made the opening argument and sat down. Judge Clark, who was informed of Coffroth's plan, looked down to the counsel for the defense and told him to proceed with the argument. That counsel gravely informed the Court that he had no reply to make, and submitted the case. This brought Curtis to his feet instantly, who was primed with a speech, and who insisted on closing the case. "Oh no," said Judge Clark, "you have had one argument, and there is no reply, therefore you are cut out, sir." This little stratagem had much to do with the acquittal of the defendant, and Coffroth had the laugh on Curtis.

The first locomotive that ran on a railroad on this continent was imported from England. It was shipped from Liverpool on the 3d of April, 1829, on board the packet ship "John Jay," arrived in New York 17th of May, 1829; was sent up the river to Rondout, and arrived the 4th of July, 1829; from thence was transported by canal, and arrived at Honesdale July 23d, 1829; and on the 8th of August made the trial trip. The Senate now stands 39 Republicans to 37 Democrats. If Montana goes Democratic next fall and the other three new states Republican, the upper branch of Congress will have 45 Republicans to 39 Democrats. The House of Representatives, according to the roll as made up by the clerk of the last House, promises to consist of 164 Republicans and 161 Democrats from the existing thirty-eight states, and the new states, on the basis above indicated, would swell the strength of the two parties to 168 Republicans and 162 Democrats.

Mr. Bradley, of Kentucky, declined the Korean mission because the Korean representative of this country is obliged to support a great many impetuous Americans. It appears that a great many Americans who go to Corea, settle themselves upon the minister, who is compelled to maintain them or let them starve. As the salary is only $7,500, a Minister cannot save much if he becomes a charitable organization. Three Republicans besides Bradley have refused the appointment.

Murder at Penryn.

A man named Wm. Clark, alias Sacramento Bill, shot and fatally wounded a man by the name of Brown, alleged to be an ex-prison convict from the State of Nevada. The shooting occurred over disreputable women. Penryn is becoming somewhat notorious since the infamous scoundrel C. A. Bassett inaugurated his famous den in that locality. The parties connected with the shooting are all well-known low characters of Sacramento, and have frequently disgraced our city. It would have been a blessing to the entire community if all the parties concerned in this disgraceful affair had been consigned to the dark hereafter.

The police records of this city containing the pictures and descriptions of the prominent characters in the tragedy gives the following:

W. A. Howland, born, Illinois; age 27 years; height, 5 feet, 8 1/4 inches; dark brown hair, sandy beard and complexion; dark brown eyes; single, and a laborer; sent to Grand Jury March 14, 1877, for an assault to murder Charles Brooks.

Wm. Howland, alias Circus Bill, born, Illinois; age, 34 years; weight, 140; height, 5 feet, 8 inches; brown eyes, dark hair, mustache lighter than hair, dim vaccine mark on left arm; Goddess of Liberty on eagle, with American flag, on right forearm; two moles on top of right shoulder; 90 days county jail, Dec. 1884, for stealing case of canned corn from Shaden.

Wm. H. Clark, alias Sacramento Bill, American, aged 31 years; height, 5 feet 8 1/2 inches; medium dark complexion, hazel eyes, dark brown hair, rather corpulent, served terms in San Quentin; arrested with French Mike April 30, 1882, on suspicion of stage robbery; pal of Mike Dumas, alias French Mike.

The Weather.

The signal service reports show the amount of rainfall yesterday up to 7 o'clock P. M. was .80 of an inch. This is the heaviest rainfall for May since 1883, when there was 2.83 inches measured for the entire month.

The total rainfall for this season, up to 7 o'clock last night, was 17.25 inches, as against 11.44 inches to a corresponding date last year.

The rainfall for this season was distributed in monthly installments, as follows: September, 1888, .55 of an inch; October, none; November, 4.28 inches; December, 4.63 inches; January, 1889, .15 of an inch; February, .33 of an inch; March, 6.25 inches; April, .26 of an inch, and May to date, .80 of an inch, making, as above, 17.25 inches for this season. The average seasonal rainfall, as deduced from a record of 40 years, is 19.5 inches. The barometer last evening was low and falling. The signal service prediction for the next 24 hours is for a continuation of unsettled weather. The highest and lowest temperature during the past week was 82 on Tuesday, and 44 on Friday; while the highest and lowest during the same time last year was 89 and 46.

"Little Joe."

Little Joe Colla, a bright lad of 16 years, a faithful employee for over three years in the printing house of A. J. Johnston & Co., died last week, after a lingering illness. "Little Joe," as he was familiarly called by his comrades, was a most deserving and industrious boy, and made friends of all with whom he came in contact. His fellow-workers in the printing office paid a tender tribute to his memory, and placed upon his last resting place a magnificent floral piece, with the inscription "30," in violets—signifying in telegraphers' and printers' parlance "the end."

In a remarkable surgical case in England the patient had a small tumor in a large nerve in the arm. In removing it some of the nerve itself was taken away, causing a loss of sensation in those portions of the skin to which the nerve led. The surgeon, nothing daunted, performed a second operation 48 hours after the first. He then took a piece of healthy nerve from a leg he had just amputated and patched up the injured nerve with it. In 36 hours sensation returned, and there is now every evidence of complete recovery.

The Army Worm.

Reports are received from various parts of the State that the army worm has again appeared, and that vegetation is being destroyed. A prominent hop grower near Rautier's stated to us yesterday that a cloud of butterflies appeared in that section two weeks ago, and that their visitation was followed by the appearance of the army worm. The hop growers on both sides of the American have dug trenches to destroy the pests. The last visitation of these destructive worms in this locality was four years ago. Speaking of these worms the Colusa Sun of yesterday said:

"We hear of immense armies of caterpillars in spots. Some say it is the army worm and some say not. The greatest number we have heard of are on Cheney Slough, four or five miles southwest of Colusa. A Mead says they are after his orchard. They are traveling towards the east. They come out of the grain to the west of Mead's orchard, and climb his trees and eat the leaves. By striking the young trees with a stick they all fall off, and he has prevented much damage. He has also tied a thick piece of paper around, making a kind of cup on the lower side. They do not seem to have injured the grain much. We have had these worms in spots very often, and we would like to know if they are really the much dreaded army worm of the west. Some years ago there were myriads of butterflies passing over Colusa for several days, and we gathered some of them and sent to the State University to be classified, and the report was that the caterpillar was a comparatively harmless one. The area covered by the present crop does not seem to be great enough to cause any harm."

Baseball Notes.

Last Sunday the Themis nine of this city defeated the Golden Crowns of Auburn by a score of 10 to 6. It was a very interesting and exciting contest, and well pleased the large crowd that attended. The Themis nine outbatted and outplayed their opponents at every point. Russell Hapeman, brother of the young twirler of the Sacramentos, did the pitching for the Themis club, and acquitted himself in grand style. He struck out thirteen men and allowed but four hits off his delivery. McLaughlin ably supported him behind the bat. Raullet played an excellent game on third. The Golden Crowns are a very fine amateur team, and have among their ranks some excellent players. McGuire, their pitcher, is a fine twirler; he has plenty of speed and good command of the ball. Thoma supported him in good shape.

ALL OVER MUD AND GLORY.

The League Babies Overcome "Haverly Luck" Again.

Yesterday was a gloomy day for baseball; a constant, drizzling rain falling at frequent intervals throughout the game, making the ground soft and muddy and in no condition for play. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the Sacramentos and the San Franciscos struggled for supremacy, and played excellent ball under existing circumstances. Both teams indulged in a great deal of "kicking," and the small attendance kept constantly calling on them to "play ball." Game was called at 3 o'clock. San Francisco went first to bat, and were retired in one, two, three order. Sacramento made four runs in their half of the first on Sylvester's base on balls, Krehmeyer's double, Roxburg's base on balls, Veach's hit and Goodenough's out.

No more runs were scored by either side until the fourth inning, when San Francisco made two, and Sacramento five. At the beginning of the ninth inning the score stood 14 to 6 in favor of Sacramento. San Francisco came to bat, with a heavy shower of rain falling, and after two men were retired they bunched their hits, and with the assistance of Sacramento's errors, scored seven runs, leaving the score 14 to 13 in favor of Sacramento.

Sylvester played third base for the Sacramentos, and made four errors; he took McSorley's place, who had his finger injured in the game Thursday, but he partly redeemed himself by making some very difficult foul fly catches. Krehmeyer did some great catching behind the bat, stopping many wild pitches. Roxburg, the new player signed by Manager Gillis, had nothing to do in his position, but judging from his movements on the diamond the management has made no mistake in signing him.

Harry O'Day did great work at second, accepting every chance offered him, many of them difficult ones, proving him to be beyond doubt the king second baseman of the California League.

"Big" Burke pitched great ball for Sacramento; only three hits being made off his delivery up to the ninth inning, and had not the rain set in, to dampen the ball, probably the San Franciscos would not be credited with the additional hits.

Shea, the player who succeeded Doyle on third for the San Franciscos, showed up very poorly in the field, but did some good stick work and clever base running.

Donahue played a brilliant game at second, accepting his six chances in excellent style.

That "an umpire's lot is not a happy one" was clearly proven in this game. He made some bad breaks, and was raked over the coals very often by the audience.

At the conclusion of the seventh inning the rain began falling, and Captain Sylvester demanded of Umpire Young to call the game, but nothing could move Young, and he persisted in keeping the game going, much to the disgust of the audience and players.

The Sacramentos return from their trip in the same position as before they started, but Managers Gillis and George have determined to make their team play ball, and we hope before long to see them gradually climbing the championship ladder. No players in the league are treated better than the Sacramentos, and they should try and appreciate the kindness shown them.

To-day they meet the Oakland, and we hope will repeat yesterday's work. Following is the score:

Crossed the Dark River.

I. S. Brown, a practitioner of the law for nearly 50 years, and a member of the bar of this city for 28 years, died last Thursday night. The aged attorney—he was nearly 76 years old—was honest, faithful and industrious, and left a good record as a man and counselor. He occupied the position of township justice at the time of his death. The members of the bar took appropriate action in the Superior Court on Friday. Hon. Grove L. Johnson moved that the court adjourn in respect to the departed attorney, and paid a deserved tribute to his memory. W. A. Anderson, in seconding the motion, also made some appropriate and pertinent remarks upon the duty of members of the bar towards departed brothers. Judge Van Fleet, in granting the motion, took occasion to remind the members of the legal family of their duty and of the respect due each, and called attention to the imperfections and shortcomings which might be charged to any of the members. The deceased was an honored attorney and due respect should be paid to his ashes. The court then appointed W. A. Anderson, Grove L. Johnson and S. C. Denson to report suitable resolutions of respect, to be spread upon the records of the court. The Police Court also took appropriate action.

Suit to Set Aside a Deed.

The Central Pacific Railroad Company has commenced a suit to set aside a deed executed to Geo. O. Mills for 160 acres of land in Natoma township. There were three applicants to purchase the land—Mills, Tomliuson and Davis. It seems that there was a provision in the contract with Mills that he should have the right to purchase the land when the railroad company obtained title. Upon this contract the land officer of the company executed to him a deed. Now W. H. Mills, the land agent for the plaintiff, who verifies the complaint, alleges that this deed was made by mistake, and that it was the intention of the company to let Tomliuson have the land, therefore, it is asked of the Court to cancel this deed. The land is worth more than Mills paid for it, and the complainant offers to refund what he paid for the same. There will probably be a contest on the deed, as the grantee does not feel like giving up his purchase. Jos. D. Redding and S. C. Denson are attorneys for the plaintiff, and W. A. Anderson for the defendant.

Death of Mrs. Reid.

Mrs. Margaret McKune Reid, aged 83, a native of Perth, Scotland, died on Friday at her home in Washington, Yolo county. Mrs. Reid was the mother of Mrs. W. M. Siddons, Mrs. W. L. Knight, and Mrs. G. T. Witham. The good lady had a host of friends. We were shown some needle-work executed by this lady when she was but 8 years old—seventy-five years ago. It consisted of the alphabet, and some fancy devices worked in silk upon a peculiar kind of material we do not see these days. What is wonderful about it is that the colors are perfectly preserved. It was within this piece of work that the old lady's last will and testament was wrapped. The funeral will take place from her late residence, at 2 o'clock on Monday next.

A Good Record.

One of the neatest pieces of work that has happened lately about Sacramento took place Tuesday, on the occasion of the horse races at Dixon. A Sacramentan shipped two of his "flyers" on the 7 o'clock train, went to Dixon, carried away both prizes against a very stiff field, and was back again with his horses on the evening train, just $865 better off for his little trip.

Judge Van Fleet holds that where executors, administrators or guardians have money of an estate on hand, it is their duty to have such money of the estate invested in some safe interest-bearing security or deposit. If they do not do this, then they are liable to the estate for legal interest on all funds held by them. In all such cases the Judge strictly enforces this decree.

Every effort was made by the persons present to revive him, but the doctor pronounced his case hopeless, and he died without saying anything.

Some Old Maxims.

The sacred books of India contain the following maxims:

"Who is cursed by a woman is cursed by God."

"Who despises women despises his mother"

"It is time to appreciate all things at their true value."

"There is no crime more odious than to persecute a woman."

"Evil to him who laughs at woman's sufferings; God shall laugh at his prayers."

"It was at the prayer of a woman that the Creator pardoned man. Cursed be he who forgets it."

"Who shall forget the sufferings of his mother at his birth shall be reborn in the body of an owl during three successive trans-migrations."

"When women are honored the divinities are content; but when they are not honored all undertakings fail."

"The households cursed by women to whom they have not rendered homage due them find themselves weighed down with ruin and destroyed as if they had been struck by some secret power."

The Purest Thing on Earth.

I saw two little children,
 Two little baby girls,
 The one with raven tresses,
 The other golden curls,
 By chance stand by each other
 Upon the busy street;
 And as if some unseen spirit
 Introduced each sweet,
 They soft embraced each other
 And kissed a kiss of love—
 An imagery of angels
 Before God's throne above.

And as they were embracing,
 I thought a world like this Could treasure nothing purer
 Than a baby's kiss;
 But they had childhood's pureness,
 A truth they could not hide;
 So each forsook the other
 For its mother's side;
 For they had baby wisdom,
 Learned ere their mortal birth,
 Each one knew a mother was—
 The purest thing on earth.

MISCELLANY.

Who Wears the Ring?

This is an elegant application of the principles involved in discovering a number fixed upon. The number of persons participating in the game should not exceed nine. One of them puts a ring on one of his fingers and it is your object to discover, first, the wearer of the ring; second the hand; third, the finger; fourth, the joint.

The company being seated in order, the persons may be numbered 1, 2, 3, etc.; the thumb must be termed the first finger, the forefinger being the second; the joint nearest the extremity must be called the first joint; the right hand is one and the left hand two.

These preliminaries having been arranged, leave the room in order that the ring may be placed unobserved by you. We will suppose that the third person has the ring on the right hand, third finger and first joint; your object is to discover the figures 3, 1, 3, 1.

Desire one of the company to perform secretly the following arithmetical operations:

1. Double the number of the person who has the ring, in the case supposed this will produce	6
2. Add 5	11
3. Multiply by 5	55
4. Add 10	65
5. Add the number denoting the hand	66
6. Multiply by 10	660
7. Add the number of the finger	663
8. Multiply by 10	6,630
9. Add the number of the joint	6,631
10. Add 35	6,666

He must apprise you of the figures now produced, 6,666; you will then in all cases subtract from it 3,535; in the present instance there will remain 3,131, denoting the person No. 3, the hand No. 1, the finger No. 3, and the joint No. 1.

Early Saw Mills.

In speaking of pioneer sawmills, the Pacific Coast Wood and Iron says: The first sawmill put up in this country was at Santa Cruz by Isaac Graham, in 1843. In the fall of 1845, S. Smith, of Baltimore, put up a sawmill on Bodega bay, this being the second one erected in California. He afterward set up a steam sawmill on the same bay. A little later in the same year, General Vallejo built a sawmill in the redwoods six miles above the town of Sonoma. The following year, 1846, James Peace built a sawmill at a point about twenty miles south of San Francisco. It was located in the redwoods in the southern part of what is now San Mateo county. Then followed the Sutter-Marshall mill, erected in the fall of 1847, on the South Fork of the American river, where stands the town of Coloma, or rather, where it did stand, for it is now nearly all washed away. This mill, which exceeded in capacity any of its predecessors, made for its successive owners a great deal of money, for it passed through several ownerships before its site, like that of the town near by, was dug up by the miners, and all but the largest boulders emptied into the American river, which swept it away—not a vestige of this notable structure or anything pertaining to it is any more to be seen. In 1874, James W. Marshall, the gold finder, having in his possession some of the irons belonging to this mill, brought them to San Francisco and donated them to the Society of California Pioneers, in whose hall, on Fourth street, near Market, they are now to be seen. Save these, there is not probably a stick, stone or other relic of Sutter's mill left.—Placerville Observer.

Where Honor is Due.

The Marysville Appeal, referring to an article upon the "Honor Due Lawyers," has the following to say:

Law is certainly an honorable profession, and fair play entitles every man charged with crime to the best legal assistance that his money can command or courts accord. And the presumption that every man is innocent until proved guilty is the justification of any lawyer who defends a criminal for a fee. But it is vain to attempt to exalt the profession of law above other vocations, especially upon moral or benevolent grounds. No profession can ennoble a man, while it is in the power of any man to ennoble his profession, whatever it may be. A lawyer is noble when he espouses a poor man's just cause without hope of reward. So is the doctor who ministers to the sick for charity's sake, and so the priest or nun or missionary whose life is earnestly or wholly devoted to battling with sin and comforting the distressed. Nothing is more noble than the profession of the soldier, when it is embraced for love of country and a burning desire to preserve its government and its flag. The ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic embrace many truly noble men, who, animated by this spirit, tore themselves from the ties of home and business to face death upon the battlefield. Many were more than noble; they were heroes, and it is because of the undying memory of their gallant, unselfish devotion to the holy spirit of patriotism that flags and banners are fluttering in the streets of Marysville to-day. Patriotism is not a profession, but the humblest soldier who, animated by its promptings, took the field for the salvation of the Union, holds and deserves a place far higher in the hearts and minds of the people than the mere stamp of any learned profession can command.

All the work of the philanthropists to change the order of Nature is love's labor lost? When we keep a man from killing himself with whisky we only change the manner of his death! If we keep him alive to-day it is only for the pleasure of seeing him die to-morrow. War, pestilence, famine and the vices are all the creation of the Almighty. The vices that kill men are less to be deplored than the other engines of death—they take off the least worthy, and allow swing to the "survival of the fittest." The passions of men were given for man's destruction. It is the individual who wants to look and see that he is not one of the victims! This is the vein indicated by our Grass Valley contemporary. It is one man does not like to contemplate.—Colusa Sun.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE COUNTY of Sacramento, State of California.

In the matter of E. A. BRUNSON, an Insolvent Debtor.

E. A. Brunson having filed in this Court his petition, schedule and inventory in insolvency, by which appears that he is an insolvent debtor, the said E. A. Brunson is hereby declared to be insolvent.

The Sheriff of the County of Sacramento is hereby directed to take possession of all the estate, real and personal, of the said E. A. Brunson, debtor, except such as may be by law exempt from execution, and of all his deeds, vouchers, books of account and papers, and to keep the same safely until the appointment of an assignee of his estate. All persons are forbidden to pay any debts to the said insolvent, or to deliver any property belonging to him or to any person, firm, or corporation, or association, for his use. The said debtor is hereby forbidden to transfer or deliver any property until the further order of this Court, except as herein ordered.

It is further ordered, that all the creditors of said debtor be and appear before the honorable judge of the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento, in open Court, at the court-room of said Court, on the 16th day of May, 1889, at 1:30 o'clock P. M. of that day, to prove their debts, choose one or more assignees of the estate of said debtor.

It is further ordered, that the order be published in the Themis, a newspaper of general circulation published in the County of Sacramento, as often as the said paper is published before the said day set for the meeting of the creditors.

And it is further ordered, that in the meantime all proceedings against the said insolvent be stayed.

Dated April 13th, 1889.
 JOHN W. ARMSTRONG,
 Judge of the Superior Court.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, MAY 12, 1889.

No. 12.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

We have frequently heard Eastern tourists, visitors to our city, say: "People in the Atlantic States have been impressed with the idea that Californians are a very enterprising and go-ahead class, but if Sacramento is a sample of their enterprise, there is a very great mistake." This sentiment was prompted by the squatty one-story structures—which are but a degree above the dignity of shanties—that abound on J and K streets, of this city. Our visitors coming from the large solidly-built cities of the East, are surprised at the lack of enterprise disclosed by observing these apologies for buildings. We are deeply interested in our beautiful city, yet there is much truth in the expressions of our visitors. There is no good reason why substantial structures should not occupy the places where these low, repulsive-looking buildings exist. The owners of these premises are abundantly able to erect buildings which would be ornaments to the city, and at the same time increase their revenues. It is an old and true saying, however, that the wealthier most people become, the more miserly are their dispositions. We have some notable exceptions to this harsh sentiment, but as a fact the rule applies to many of our property owners, which is fully evidenced by the lack of enterprise, and a desire to secure as much rent as possible without any additional outlay. The policy is narrow, and those people who own these shabby-appearing buildings should be brought to realize the fact that they are only standing in their own light, and injuring the prospects of our city. Improve your property gentlemen, and you will soon realize the benefits by increased rentals, as well as having a beautiful city, which will attract the admiration, instead of the disgust of visitors.

The execution, interpretation and construction of wills has been the source of serious litigation from the origin of those important documents under the Roman law, down to the present. The most solemn act of one's life is the making of the last will and testament, and yet, where there are large property interests and heirs of diverse interests, there is almost a certainty of litigation of this last solemn act. There are many things connected with the execution of a will, and the disposition of estates thereunder that are of such a character that the greatest of care is necessary on the part of the testator. A will is the declaration of the mind, either by word or writing, in disposing of an estate, and to take place after the death of the testator. We use the formality of "last will and testament," although formerly a will related to the devise of land, and testament to goods and chattels. There is no distinction under our codes. Every person over eighteen years of age, of sound mind, may dispose of his estate by will. A married woman may dispose of her separate estate by will, without the consent of her husband. A husband cannot by will dispose of the wife's one-half interest in the community property. Wills are of two general classes—verbal and written. A verbal is called a nuncupative will. All such wills are subject to strictness, as there is great room for fraud. These wills are only admitted in extremis, or immediate apprehension of death, such for instance as the imminent dangers that beset soldiers and sailors, or any person in the face of death.

We referred recently to the will of James Nisbet, who was lost on the ill-fated "Bro. Jonathan," which was written in his pocket-book. This was admitted to probate. The olographic will is one written entirely by the testator. There must be nothing but his handwriting. The Supreme Court of this State, in Clarke vs. Ransome, held this to be a good olographic will:

Dear Old Nance: I wish to give you my watch, two shawls and also $5,000. Your old friend, E. A. GORDON.

Judge Wallace dissented, on the ground that the document expressed only a wish. Our statute provides that every will, other than a nuncupative and olographic, must be subscribed at the end by the testator, in the presence of attesting witnesses, and he must acknowledge and declare to the witnesses that the instrument is his will. There must be two attesting witnesses, each of whom must sign his name as a witness at the end of the will, at the testator's request and in his presence. In olographic wills it was formerly held that if the testator used his name in the body of the instrument, thus: "I, John Smith, give, etc.," and neglected to subscribe his name at the end, that this would be considered as signing. There is some diversity of opinion upon this question, but our statute seems to have been construed so as to require the signature at the end of the document, and some of our courts have so held. The tendency of the courts is to recognize the desire of testators, however informally expressed, and will construe it according to the intention of the testator. Where his intention cannot have effect to its full extent, it will be given effect as far as possible. It has been the custom to commence the document with: "In the name of God, Amen!" This is now discarded, and the simple words, "I, John Smith, etc.," are sufficient. No estate, real or personal, can be bequeathed or devised to any charitable or benevolent society, or corporation, or to any person or persons in trust for charitable uses, except the same be done by will duly executed at least thirty days before the decease of the testator. No such devises or bequests shall collectively exceed one-third of the estate of the testator having legal heirs. This enactment was made to prevent persons in extremis from being unduly influenced to dispose of their property to churches, charities, etc., against the rights of their family or kindred. The old statute of Mortmain of England, provided that no property in land could pass to such purposes unless by deed indented, sealed and delivered in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, twelve calendar months before the death of the donor or grantor.

The State of New York presents a case identical with California in relation to executive appointment of health officer and member of the board of health. It seems that nine years ago the then Governor of New York appointed a Dr. Smith health officer for the port of New York. Over six years have passed since his term of office expired. Three times have his successors been appointed by the Governor, and as many times refused consideration by the Senate. In the state of New York, like California, appointments of this character can only be made by and with the advice and consent of the senate. In California the case is on all-fours with New York. In November, 1888, the regular term of the secretary of the board of health, Dr. G. G. Tyrrell, expired. Governor Waterman appointed Dr. J. R. Laine as his successor. The democratic Senate refused to confirm the appointment on political grounds. The only difference between New York and California lies in the fact that the Governor of New York is a democrat and the Senate republican. In California the Governor is republican and Senate democratic. Here is what the democratic organ, the Argus, at Albany, says:

The words, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," were never meant to imply that the Senate should ignore executive nominations without giving any public explanation. It is a wicked perversion of law and a direct blow at the fundamental principles of our form of government. One of the duties imposed upon the executive of the State is to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, certain officials. No sensible person will contend that the consent of the Senate may be arbitrarily withheld without any public explanation. Our system of government will be severely shaken if each branch of it acted merely on the influence of a whim, or in accordance with the demands of an individual. Yet here is the State Senate holding a person in office for over six years after the expiration of his legal term, at the beck of a single self-constituted political boss. Surely this is a most outrageous abuse of the confirming power. The health and lives of the people are nothing.

We have been amused by the publication by the Record-Union of a note addressed to the editor of that journal by the pastor of a prominent church of this city, instructing that the Sunday issue of that paper be not left at his house. The gentleman says that he is opposed to Sunday papers on principle, and adds that "A Monday paper may be published without Sunday work, but seven papers a week cannot." We do not doubt the sincerity of the gentleman who wrote the note, but after the slightest thought it is evident that he penned a note of protest without having given the matter consideration. A newspaper published on Monday morning cannot be issued except all the real work be done on Sunday. A publisher of a morning daily who attempted to conduct his business so that the main work of the Monday edition was not done on Sunday, would carry very little news to his readers on Monday morning. The reverend gentleman evidently objects that our contemporary is to publish a paper dated Sunday.

In the early history of this country, in New England, the Blue Laws were enacted; they are obsolete. They prohibited even the preparation of meals on Sunday, and commanded that no kind of manual labor whatever, either household, kitchen or farm, should be performed on that day. The people were not allowed to take the ordinary physical exercise, except "to walk reverently to and from the place of worship." Civilization has advanced; our people have come to view the question of the observance of the Sabbath in the light of common sense. They respect religious and moralizing influences, but recognize that intolerant rules cannot be adhered to. It is impossible that the business of the world in this day can be carried on if all the workers are to cease labor on any particular day. It is not so much a question of when the work is performed as to the necessity for its performance. If a Sunday newspaper is a necessity in a community; if its contents are not detrimental to public morals, the people have a right to read it on their day of rest—the day they spend at home with their families, and are free from the business cares of the other six days. It is unfortunate that a few of our clergy still cling to the unreasonable and obsolete ideas. In this case the gentleman would be consistent if he directed the shutting off of his water and gas on Sunday; the withdrawal of the street and steam cars; the burial of the dead, because some would have to work. The press exercises an influence for good, as well as the pulpit; in fact, it speaks to a larger audience, and an audience of intelligence. While the minister of the gospel is speaking to a few, the influence of a moral and instructive newspaper is communicated to the multitude.

COUNTY NOMENCLATURE.

How the Counties of California Were Named—Their Derivation and Definition.

The names of the counties of California are derived from the Spanish language largely, yet some are from the Indian, French and Russian.

Alameda derives its name from the Spanish term "alameda," signifying a "grove of poplars," many trees of that kind having by the original settlers been found growing along the streams.

Alpine is derived from Alps, or Alb, signifying in the Celtic language "white." Alpine means "snowy mountains."

Amador (Spanish): The lover. The valley and county were named from Jose M. Amador, who located there in 1848.

Butte is a French word, signifying hill or mound. The Marysville Buttes were named by a party of Hudson bay trappers under Michael La Frambeau, who visited the country in 1829. The county was named after the peaks, which it was then supposed to contain, but which are really in Sutter county.

Calaveras (Spanish): Skulls. The stream was named by Captain Moraga, who headed the first expeditions made on the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers. He encamped on the stream, and was surprised in the morning to find that he had stopped among numerous bones and skulls of men. He had chanced upon an ancient battle ground, where had taken place a sanguinary conflict between two tribes of Indians. It is said that three thousand dead remained on the field.

Some incline to the belief that some devout friar, desirous of commemorating the crucifixion, slightly changed the name Calvary.

Colusa is an Indian word, and was the original name of a numerous tribe of Indians who lived on the western side of the Sacramento river. Its meaning is not known.

Contra Costa (Spanish): Opposite coast. The county was so called from its situation, opposite from San Francisco. It was at first proposed to name it Mount Diablo county, but the present name was adopted after a warm debate in the Legislature.

Del Norte (Spanish): To the north.

El Dorado (Spanish): The golden. In 1541, so tradition goes, Gonzalo Pizarro, brother of the conqueror of Peru, marched from Quito to seek the fabled kingdom of gold, which, according to the traditions of the aborigines, existed some place east of the Andes. The monarch of this fabulous kingdom was said, in order to wear a more magnificent attire than any other king in the world, to be adorned with a daily coating of gold. His body was anointed every morning with rare and fragrant gums, and gold dust blown over him through a tube.

Thus attired, the Spaniards called him El Dorado. He was said to reside generally in the superb city of Manos, in one street of which there were said to be not less than three thousand silversmiths or silver-workers. The columns of his palace were affirmed to be porphyry and alabaster, his throne ivory, and its steps gold; the body of the palace was of white stone, ornamented with gold suns and silver moons; and living lions fastened with chains of gold guarded its entrance. The county was so named from the fact that gold was first discovered within its limits.

Fresno (Spanish): White ash. The river was so named from the circumstance that its banks were lined with white ash trees.

Humboldt bay was named after the famous German savant and traveler, Baron von Humboldt. The county was named after the bay.

Inyo derives its name from the following circumstance: In 1860, a party from Tulare and Kern counties entered Owens valley. Desiring to better acquaint themselves with the language of the Indians, they frequently inquired the names of different objects, as the mountains, the lakes, etc. The invariable answer was, "Inyo." From hearing it applied to so many different natural objects, they supposed it to be the Indian name for the entire country, and accordingly adopted it, and it was subsequently applied to the county.

Kern: Kern river is said to have been named after a man named T. Kern. The county was named after the river.

Klamath is of Indian origin, and was first applied to the stream near its source by the early trappers, who asked the natives there what they called it, and were answered Klamat or Tlamat (it was spelled by Fremont Tlamath). The tribes that lived along the banks each had their own name for the river, but the name adopted by the whites soon became known from its mouth to its source, and was also applied to the lakes from which the river springs. The name is said to signify "swiftness." The county was named after the river.

Lake derives its name from the fact that it contains one of the largest lakes in the State.

Lassen: Lassen Peak was named after Peter Lassen, a famous old hunter and trapper, who was killed by the Indians in Utah on April 29, 1859. The county was named after the mountain.

Los Angeles (Spanish): The angels.

Marin was the name of a famous chief of the Lacatuit Indians, who originally occupied this part of the country. After having vanquished the Spaniards in several skirmishes that took place between the years 1815 and 1824, he was finally captured by his enemies. Making his escape, Marin took shelter on a small island in the bay of San Francisco, and which, being afterward called after him, communicated its name to the main land adjacent. This chief having fallen into the hands of his foes a second time, barely escaped being put to death, through the interference of the priests at the Mission of San Rafael, who subsequently enjoyed the satisfaction of seeing him converted to the true faith. He died at the mission in 1834.

Mariposa (Spanish): Butterfly. In June, 1807, a hunting party of Californians pitched their tents on a stream at the foot of the Sierra Nevada, and whilst there myriads of butterflies, of the most gorgeous and variegated colors, clustered on the surrounding trees, from which circumstance the stream was called "Mariposa." The county was named after the stream.

Mendocino (Spanish): Cape Mendocino was named in honor of Antonio de Mendoza, the first Viceroy of New Spain. He was appointed by the emperor, and, arriving in the city of Mexico in 1535, ordered a survey of the coast of California, wherein the cape was discovered. The county was named after the cape.

Merced (Spanish): Mercy.

Modoc is named after the somewhat noteworthy tribe of Indians who lived in that region. Their true name is Moadoc—a name which originated with the Shasta Indians, and means all distant, stranger or hostile Indians. The name was applied by the whites to this tribe in early days from hearing the Shastas speak of them.

Mono (Spanish): Neat, pretty. Possibly the word comes from the Greek "monos," signifying alone, solitary, deserted. The name was first applied to the lake.

Monterey (Spanish) is composed of two words, "Monte" and "rey," meaning literally "King of forests." The harbor was discovered in 1603 by Admiral Sebastian Vizcayno, and was named in honor of Gaspar de Zuniga, Count de Monterey, as well as from the neighboring forests. The county was named after the harbor.

Napa was the name of a tribe of Indians that occupied the valley. They were brave and greatly harassed the frontier posts. They were very numerous up to 1838, when they were mostly carried off by the smallpox.

Nevada (Spanish): Snowy.

Orange: The derivation of the name of the last county created by the legislature is too obvious to require explanation.

Placer (Spanish): A place where gold is found mixed with alluvial detritus.

Plumas (Spanish): Feathers. In 1824 a Mexican exploring expedition penetrated to the north and named the stream "Plumas," on account of the feathers of a waterfowl which were found floating upon its bosom. The river is now called the Feather, but the name was applied to the county.

Sacramento (Spanish): Sacrament, or the Lord's Supper. The river was given that name by Lieutenant Moraga, an early Spanish explorer. In the fall of 1848 the site of Sacramento city was selected and called New Helvetia by Captain Sutter, a Swiss. The first surveys of the city were made late in that fall, and in January, 1849, the name "Sacramento" was applied to the new city.

San Benito (Spanish): Benedict.

San Bernardino (Spanish): Bernard.

San Diego (Spanish): James.

San Francisco (Spanish): The Mission of San Francisco de Asis (Dolores), was named in honor of the religious order of Franciscans. The mission was established in 1776 by Father Junipero Serra. The name had before that time been applied to the bay, and the town was called Yerba Buena (good herb). On January 30th, 1847, the chief alcalde, Washington A. Bartlett, issued a proclamation legalizing the name of San Francisco, and ordaining that that name should thereafter be used in all the official communications. The new name was not adopted by the California Star newspaper until March 17, 1847, and on the 20th that paper said:

THE NAME OF OUR TOWN.—Our readers will perceive that in our present number we have conformed to the change recently made in the name of our town, by placing at the head of our paper "San Francisco," instead of "Yerba Buena." The change has now been made legally, and we acquiesce in it, though we prefer the old name—the one by which the place has always been known in this country. When the change was first attempted, we viewed it as a mere assumption of authority, without law or precedent, and therefore adhered to the old name of Yerba Buena. It was asserted by the late alcalde, Washington A. Bartlett, that the place was called San Francisco in some old Spanish paper, which he professed to have in his possession. * * * Yerba Buena is pronounced yairba bwaina, and means good herb, and is applied to a species of mint formerly used for tea.

San Joaquin (Spanish): The meaning of San Joaquin has a very ancient origin in reference to the parentage of Mary, the mother of Christ. According to divine revelations, Joachim signifies "preparation of the Lord," and hence the belief that Joaquin, who, in the course of time, was admitted into the pale of sanctity, was the father of Mary. In 1813, commanding an exploring expedition to the valley of the rushes (vale de los tulares), Lieutenant Gabriel Moraga gave the appellation of San Joaquin to a rivulet which springs from the Sierra Nevada, and empties into Lake Buena Vista. The river derived its name from the rivulet, and the county was named from the river.

San Luis Obispo (Spanish): St. Louis, the Bishop.

San Mateo (Spanish): Matthew.

Santa Barbara (Spanish): Barbara.

Santa Clara (Spanish) derives its name from this legend: Cortalana, the pious mother of Santa Clara, while kneeling before a crucifix, praying earnestly that, being with child, she might be happily delivered, heard a voice whispering, "Fear not, woman, thou wilt safely bring forth;" whereupon a brilliant light suddenly illuminated the place, and the mother baptized her child "Clara," the feminine of clear or bright. Clara was afterward sanctified, and the Mission of Santa Clara, which was founded January 12, 1777, was named in her honor.

Santa Cruz (Spanish): Holy Cross.

Shasta: The word Shasta is derived from the Russian language. Many years ago, and among the first travelers who visited that portion of the coast, were a party of Russians, who passed through California, going from the north to the south. They gave a name to many of the more prominent land marks which they encountered on their journey. To the peak now called Shasta Butte, a mountain clothed with eternal snow, they gave the name of Teheste, signifying white, pure, chaste, clear. Subsequent travelers and geographers changed the name to "Tchasta." The early Americans adopted the name, and spelled and pronounced it "Chasta," but time has changed the spelling as at present. The name was also applied to the valley that lays at the northern base of the mountain, to the river that pours its cold snow-waters into the Klamath, and to the tribe of Indians in that vicinity. When the counties of the State were first organized, Mount Shasta was in Shasta county. Afterward a new county was created (Siskiyou), which embraces this lofty mountain within its borders.

Sierra (Spanish): Saw—a serrated mountain range. The county was named after the range.

Siskiyou: The following is an extract from the dictionary of the Chinook jargon, by George Gibbs:

Siskiyou, Cree (Anderson), "a bobtailed horse." This name, ludicrous enough, has been bestowed on the range of mountains separating Oregon from California, and also a county in the latter State. The origin of this designation, as related to me by Anderson, was as follows: "Archibald R. McLeod, a chief factor of the Hudson Bay Company in the year 1828, while crossing the mountains with a packtrain, was overtaken by a snowstorm, in which he lost most of his animals, including a noted bobtailed race-horse. His Canadian followers, in compliment to their chief, or bourgeois, named the place the pass of Siskiyou—an appellation subsequently adopted as the veritable Indian name of the locality, and thence extended to the whole range and the adjoining district."

The Alta California of May 7, 1852, contained the following on the same subject:

Siskiyou, the name given to the new county recently constituted on the northern boundary of the State, has excited considerable curiosity in regard to its origin and definition. Mr. Snyder's definition of the word, which was read in the Senate yesterday, shows that the name is well chosen and most appropriate. He stated that the French words, "six Callieux," were given to a ford on the Umpqua river, at which place Michael La Frambeau, with a party of Hudson Bay trappers, crossed in the year 1832; six large stones or rocks lay in the river where they crossed, and they gave it the name of "Six Callieux," or "Six Stone Ford," and from this the mountain took its name, "Six Stone Mountain."

This explanation offered by Mr. Snyder is recorded upon the journal. Per contra, in the Sacramento Democratic State Journal of April 19th, C. E. Pickett denies the correctness of the above, and gives the annexed version of the origin and meaning of the name:

In the company with which I traveled from Oregon to California, in 1846, were several Canadian French and half-breeds, a portion of whom had accompanied this same La Frambeau in his trip between the two countries; and had any such origin for this name as given by Snyder existed, I should certainly have heard of it. So far from it, I recollect asking these very men the day we crossed the mountain, the origin and meaning of the name, and was told it signified a bobtailed horse. Why this appellation was given has escaped my memory, but is, I think, put down in my notes of travel, which are not by me now for reference. Mr. Freaner, who ought to know something about the meaning of the word, says the "bobtailed" part is right, and signifies the sudden falling off or bluff termination which is the case with this range of mountains on the coast. If it be an Indian name, therefore, there is clearly a coincidence in our definition of the word, as the savages in this region, in essaying to make it known by signs to the early travelers, doubtless pointed to the bobtail of one of the horses in the caravan, by way of illustration, which the trappers supposed meant the whole animal, and have called it the "bobtailed horse" mountain, instead of the "bobtailed" mountain.

Of course we cannot pretend to decide a question of so abstruse a character, and one in which the two disputants are so far apart in their suggestions; but, we were at once reminded (on reading Snyder's explanation) of the paragraph in Sir George Simpson's "Overland Journey Round the World," wherein is a reference to a lake in Kamschatka, called "Ciss Kule," or "Spine lake," from which two rivers issued at opposite sides, and flowed into different oceans. The lake is situated on a high ridge or spine.

Now, when we take into consideration the fact that is generally believed, that this portion, at least, of the American continent was peopled by the Yakut races from Kamschatka, who crossed at Behring Straits, or by the Aleutian Islands, and that they gradually found their way southward, thus populating this northwest coast, it does not seem surprising that a great similarity between the sound Ciss Kule and Siskiyou should happen. If we examine a little further we shall also discover that the mountain in question is a dividing or spinal ridge running nearly due east and west, from whence the waters flow north through Oregon to the Pacific, and south through California to the same ocean. "Ciss," in the Yakut tongue means "spine," and "Kule" means "lake." It may be possible that on the mountain in question there is a lake or springs which correspond with the description of Ciss Kule, by Sir George Simpson; but, even supposing this not to be the truth, it is an easy transition to make Kiou of Kule, and to make Kiou signify a mountain, as Kule does lake.

Another account is to the effect that on the summit of one of the mountains there is a beautiful level spot that overlooks the country for miles around; that there the Shasta, Rogue River and Klameth tribes were accustomed to congregate, smoke their pipes, indulge in dancing and games; and that they called this place Sis-ki-you, or the council grounds.

Solano (Spanish) was the second name of the celebrated missionary Francisco Solano, and was also borne by a great chief of the Suisun Indians. The word in Spanish signifies an easterly wind.

Sonoma is an Indian word, signifying "valley of the moon," by which the aborigines designated the valley of that name.

Stanislaus: The Stanislaus river was named from the fact that on its banks in 1829, the forces of the Spaniards were defeated by the Indians commanded by a chief called Estanislao. The county was named after the river.

Sutter: Sutter county was named in honor of Captain John A. Sutter, who settled at Sacramento in 1839, and who died at Washington, D. C., June 18, 1880.

Tehama is an Indian word of unknown significance.

Trinity (Spanish): Trinity bay was so called from having been discovered on the anniversary of the festival in honor of the Most Holy Trinity, June 11, 1775, by the second naval exploring expedition under Captain Bruno Ezeta and Juan de la Quadra Bodega. Trinity river received its name from P. B. Reading, who trapped on its headwaters in 1845. It was so named because he supposed that it emptied into Trinidad bay, an error which misled thousands of gold-seekers in 1850, who sought to reach its famous mines by entering the bay in vessels and passing up the stream.

Tulare signifies a place of tules, and the name was first applied to the lake. The county was named after the lake.

Tuolumne is a corruption of the Indian word "tal-malame," which means a cluster of stone wigwams.

Ventura (Spanish): Ventura means luck, chance or venture.

Yolo is a corruption of the Indian word "Yoloy," signifying a place abounding in rushes, with which the Indians composed the term "Toloytoy," or Tule-town, which was situated in early days on the western shore of the Sacramento river.

Yuba (Spanish) is a corruption of the Spanish word "uva," meaning grapes. The river was so named by an exploring party in 1824, because of the immense quantities of wild grape vines which grew on the banks.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

When we attend the play or opera we expect to be amused, entertained and instructed by the actors and the play. We do not go to the theater to listen to silly gossip, or to be annoyed by the vulgar and ignorant auditors whom chance may seat near us. It is strange, yet true, that upon the appearance of any noted play or actor, where there is a large attendance, there also appears in the audience a certain percentage of ignorant, boorish people, of both sexes, to vex and annoy those who came to witness the performance of the actors, not the display of stupid ignorance of some of the auditors. Here we find the person who insists upon munching candy, and whose jaws make a noise like an embryo quartz mill, disturbing all who sit near them. Again, do we have the fellow who enthuses so easily that he insists upon offensive applause at unseasonable times. Another desires to display a deep knowledge of the actors, actresses and play, and insists upon telling his or her companion all about the play and the artists, and how he or she saw the whole presentation at San Francisco, or at New York, at the same time, offensively to others, giving a history of all the surroundings while the play is progressing. With such idiots we have no patience. Then we have the giggling young girls, who keep up a running fire of conversation during all the performance. The intolerable fan nuisance is another great annoyance, because of the noise and obstruction to others' views and comfort. Just think of hundreds of fans in motion, all at the same time. How can such things fail to disturb the ones who go to see and hear the play for the sake of the play? The high hat has been so often ridiculed we should think that women, with any degree of good breeding, would desist in wearing such to the theater, when they know they interfere with the comfort and pleasure of others. Each and every one of the above annoyances occurred here during the recent opera season and other dramatic entertainments. We have had our growl, but presume the same scenes will occur so long as theaters exist and ignorant and boorish people are admitted thereto. The crying baby and troublesome youngsters can be easily suppressed, although at times these become a very great nuisance. The fellow who beats time with his foot or cane during some exquisite strains of music or song, should be taken out and ducked in China slough.

The cleverest soubrette on the London stage had a magnificent black cat, the admiration of all who saw that "enemy of the evil one." One night an ungallant lord, her neighbor, cruelly shot the cat, and a few days after she received the stuffed skin of her pet. Miss Soubrette immediately collected all the mice she could secure—about 200—and had them carefully boxed to the address of his lordship's wife in the country. When the box arrived at its destination her ladyship opened it herself, expecting it to contain some of the latest fashions. As she raised the lid the mice jumped out and literally filled the house. Of course there was consternation. At the bottom of the box was a note, which read: "Madam, your husband killed my cat. I send you our mice."—Dunlap's Stage News.

That great double combination and enormous hippodrome and three-ringed circus of Sell's Brothers and S. H. Barrett's congress of circus artists, museum and menagerie, will be here on Friday, May 31st. When these shows appeared separately they were wonders. Now that they are combined into one master show, there can be no doubt of insuring great crowds. There will be a showy and novel parade divided into four divisions, each preceded by a brass band. The two shows will be distinguishable by different colors of the cages and different wardrobes, in order that their characteristics may be observed.

To-morrow evening Effie Ellsler will present Laura Don's peculiar play Egypt. The opportunities of Miss Ellsler in this play are very strong and partake somewhat of the Meliss order in the first and second acts. She becomes a heartless, relentless woman of the world. Her rendition of the character is somewhat at variance with Lady Don's ideas. Ethel Brandon plays "Katrina Allyne," a wicked sister though weak in character. On Tuesday evening Judge Not, a play never presented here, in which Miss Ellsler will personate the character of "Katherine Clare." The company is said to be a good one.

Dr. von Bulow is a very nervous man. At a recent performance he left the stage in the middle of a piece and returned with a helper, who moved the piano some distance to the left. He then sat down and finished the performance. The difficulty was that a lady who sat directly in the range of his vision was fanning herself vigorously—against time. He said that if she had only kept time with the music he could have stood it; but her false beat nearly drove him frantic.

Some German critic is trying to create a sensation by insisting that Lessing and not Goethe is the author of Faust. He lacks the cryptogram and cipher of Donnelly. By the way, did not Christopher Marlowe, in his Tragic History of Dr. Faustus, furnish the material for Faust? This was written in 1604, and embodies most of the salient points of the modern Faust.

The New California Theater at San Francisco is said to be one of the prettiest theaters in the world, and will be opened on Monday, May 13th, with Othello—Booth as Iago and Barrett as Othello. Al Hayman has spared no costs to make this house beautiful as well as novel. The box sheet the first night shows sales amounting to over $9,000.

Jennie Reiffarth has left the Conried Opera Company. She was the Countess of Pompadour in the King's Fool, which was presented here February 21st. She was a former resident of this city.

The Ward Comedy Company held the boards of the Opera House all last week to a fair business. To night Ten Nights in a Barroom will be given with the full strength of the company.

Emma Abbott has arranged for an $85,000 monument for her husband. She intends to have her body cremated and ashes deposited in the same tomb when she dies.

Henry Irving will make a tour of Germany with Faust.

Book Chat.

Among the fragments of the writings still extant of the Grecian poet Simonides, who wrote about 500 years before the Christian era, is a satire that the gods formed the souls of women from the characteristics of the different animals and elements. Some are formed of those ingredients which compose a fox; of this class some are vicious, others virtuous. Another made up of canine principles; these are snarling scolds, living in perpetual clamor. Those made up of the earth are indolent, ignorant, slovenly. The sea is the source of a class which are of variable, uneven tempers, sometimes storm and tempest, at others storm and sunshine. The cat furnishes material for a species who are unamiable, melancholy, repugnant to love, and who fly into the faces of their husbands without cause. They are likewise inclined to little thefts, cheats and deceit. Some females are taken from the ape, and are ugly and ill-natured, having nothing beautiful in themselves, are envious of the beauty and honor of others. The species of women who take their origin from the mare with the flowing mane which was never broken to servile toil, have little regard for their husbands and pass their time in dressing and primping generally for the admiration of others. The woman who is made out of the bee is faultless. She is happy, and loves her husband. Her family flourishes under her good management. She brings forth a race of noble and virtuous children. She never, never wastes her time with the loose tribe of women, nor indulges in wanton discourse. Prudence and virtue are her attributes and the best gift to man bestowed by Jupiter.

Everybody has read Robinson Crusoe, but so great has been the fame of the work that the author has been almost forgotten. Daniel de Foe was the son of James Foe, a London butcher, and was born in 1661. The prefix de was subsequently assumed by the author, and has since formed a part of the name by which he is known to posterity. In 1701, De Foe published a satire, "The True-Born Englishman," written in defense of King William, which poem proved a wonderful success, 80,000 pirated copies of it being sold in the streets at a moderate price. In 1719, appeared the famous "Robinson Crusoe," the most popular of all his works. Its success was immediate. The publisher, who had accepted the book after all the others had refused it, cleared one thousand pounds by its publication, no small sum in those days. De Foe in rapid succession produced his other works of fiction, "Moll Flanders," "Journal of the Plague," "Col. Jack," "Adventures of Roxana," and the "Memoirs of a Cavalier," the last of which the Earl of Chatham used to commend as the best account of the civil wars then extant. So graphic were De Foe's descriptions in the "Journal of the Plague," that Dr. Mead long believed them to be genuine.

Thomas Otway, dramatic author and poet, was the author of several successful plays. His tragedy of Venice Preserved long had first place on the stage. Yet this brilliant writer died in a public house while hiding from creditors and in utter destitution at the age of 34 years. That was in 1685. Rather poor encouragement for brilliant writers. Perhaps that is why we are poor.

A new and novel branch of education has been introduced in some of the eastern higher grade schools. The instructor has a bulletin board upon which he requires his pupils to paste each day clippings of important home and foreign news, taken from the newspapers. Historical and geographical matters are given special attention. It seems to us that such a system would prove very instructive and serve to instill into the minds of pupils the first principles of history, art and the science of government. The newspapers are in reality the great educators of the world at this time.

"In Memory of John McCullough" is the title of a handsomely printed book, containing an appropriate biographical sketch of the great actor's life, and some of his big generous-hearted acts. The touching funeral oration by Henry Edwards is also printed in this little volume. It is for private circulation, the edition being limited to 500.

Professional Chat.

Before the adoption of the present constitution of this state, Yolo county was included in the Sixth Judicial District. While Judge S. C. Denson was Judge of the District Court, Dau Burns, who was then county clerk of Yolo, told a good story on the Judge. Judge Denson has an aversion to hotel cooking—in fact has the bitterest prejudice against all hotel cooking. At one term of court in Yolo a Chinaman was tried for murder, and the jury convicted him of murder in the second degree. This celestial was of more than ordinary intelligence, and there were some doubts of his guilt, the testimony being exclusively Chinese, and it was Judge Denson's intention to not inflict the extreme penalty. The day for pronouncing sentence arrived. The Judge made the usual formal statements to the defendant, such as: "You have been tried upon an indictment, tried by a jury of your own selection," etc., etc., and then asked the defendant if he had any reason to offer why the penalty of the law should not be imposed. The Chinaman, in his imperfect English, said: "Me good man. Me no killum. Allee samee work for 'Melican man heap good. Me cookee!'" "You are a cook, are you?" said the Judge. "Where do you cook?" "Me cookee all Woodland hotels." "Oh! that's it. You cook for a Woodland hotel. Mr. Clerk," (that is what Dan Burns says) said the Court, "enter up judgment that the defendant be imprisoned for the balance of his natural life. You are a hotel cook, are you?"

Among the floral offerings at the funeral of the late Judge Stanley Mathews was a design with the sentiment:

"Say not 'Good night,' but in some brighter clime
Bid me 'Good morning.'"

This was from President Harrison. The lines were from a poem by Mrs. Barbauld, and are from the stanza which reads:

"Life! we've been long together
Through pleasant and through cloudy weather;
'Tis hard to part when friends are dear;
Perhaps 'twill cost a sigh, a tear;
Then steal away, give little warning,
Choose thine own time;
Say not 'Good night,' but in some brighter clime
Bid me 'Good morning.'"

The great actor Macready often read these lines, and with him they were a favorite. It is said they were recited at his grave.

How About This?

Does it not suggest itself as rather humiliating on the part of the Capital City, through its Mayor and Board of Trustees, to send to a little country town for a copy of its local laws, as a guidance for framing an ordinance to do that which our charter and the constitution of the State plainly points out and directs us how to do? There are certainly persons in this city competent to frame a suitable ordinance for the regulation or suppression of those dens of infamy which are a festering sore on our body politic, without seeking to utilize the work of others of lesser importance. We congratulate our contemporary in following up the suggestions made by THEMIS regarding the municipal powers of the Board of Trustees in the suppression of dives. We have given the law and the manner of enforcing it. Let the Board of Trustees pass a properly constructed ordinance and the work is done.

Who is Our Best Known Lawyer?

The Bee is again alarmed. As is usual with newspaper reporters who pick up legal opinions on the streets from lawyers of prominence for garulosity—lawyers who have more legal wisdom out of court than in—they jump at conclusions without any particular consideration of the facts. The reporter of our contemporary has learned that the District Attorney under the law must file an information against any person held to answer by a magistrate within thirty days after the holding; that W. P. Harlow was held to answer by Justice Devine on April 17th, and that no information has yet been filed in the Superior Court. The judicial reporter gravely concludes that, although the thirty days have not expired, the District Attorney intends not to file an information, and that that officer does not intend to prosecute the case. The intelligent reporter adds: "And one of the best known lawyers in town told a Bee man to-day that he had never known but one case where the District Attorney neglected to comply with this section for any length of time. In that single instance, the District Attorney forgot the matter." The best known lawyer, whose opinion the Bee man took, evidently did not know what he was talking about, for any one at all conversant with the practice in the courts of this State knows that informations are filed after a reasonable time to examine the record after it is written out—and within the thirty days. It would be a valuable piece of information if the intelligent reporter of our contemporary would publish the name of our best known lawyer, upon whose street opinion he is willing to rely; the people would then be able probably to select the second best known lawyer to advise them.

The Oroville Road Sold.

General Manager Towne, of the Southern Pacific, states that the negotiations pending with the owners of the Northern California road have resulted in the sale of that line to the Southern Pacific. The details of the purchase can not yet be made public, because all the business incidental to the purchase has not been completed. It is expected that within the next two weeks all matters will be arranged and the road with its rolling stock and equipment will be turned over to the Southern Pacific people. The road will be operated, it is presumed, as a part of the Sacramento division, of which J. B. Wright is superintendent. Mr. Towne states that his company takes the road with the intention of completing the extension across Sutter county, from Marysville to Knight's Landing, connecting with its branch from near Woodland. This extension of the Northern California was begun by Mr. Rideout and his associates during the past year, but was pushed only as far as Nelson's Point, on the Feather river. This connecting link in the Southern Pacific system will shorten the distance considerably for travelers between this city and Marysville, Oroville, Chico and surrounding points. It is now 168½ miles from here to Oroville, but the cut-off extension to Knight's Landing would lessen this distance by about twenty-five miles. Regarding terms of the sale nothing is yet made public. From good authority it is learned that about $15,000 a mile for the main road of 26½ miles will be paid, and a cost figure for the new road south of Marysville. This would make a round sum of about $450,000. The original cost of the main road was $1,781,000. N. D. Rideout and A. J. Binney were the late owners of the line.—S. F. Bulletin.

Since the general election of 1886, in the House of Commons, the Liberals have gained 14 seats, counting 28 on a division. Tories have lost 6, the Unionists 8. Tory-Unionists majority, which was 116 at general election, is now reduced to 88, and even that includes some twenty shaming Unionists. In view of these facts the friends of Ireland may well feel hopeful.

"Mikado" and Amateurs.

We believe in encouraging everything like enterprise, instruction and nourishing amusements. The young ladies and gentlemen who form amateur associations for social enjoyment and the entertainment of their fellows, are deserving of praise and recognition. It would be much better for the community if there were more of these amateur entertainments. They show a healthy state of the public mind, when liberally patronized.
The ladies and gentlemen who labored so earnestly and well last week in giving the people a first-class representation of "Mikado," superior in many respects to a professional performance, are entitled to the generous plaudits of all amusement loving citizens. Aside from the charitable object, if it was only for their own benefit, they deserve credit and applause. We are glad to see this unselfish interest, and trust that the accomplished members of this amateur band may keep up this organization, and enliven the city frequently with their entertainments. W. H. Kinross is an excellent drill master, and his labor was not wasted. The stage management of Mr. Hageman disclosed experience, and his "Ko-Ko" was equal to any we have witnessed. The "Three Little Maids" were in the hands of Miss Irma Fitch, Miss Grace Hatch and Mrs. Frank Kiefer. Miss Fitch, as "Yum Yum," surprised her friends by the ease and grace of her acting. Mrs. Addie Carter was born for "Katisha," and her clear, rich voice, coupled with an artistic conception of the character, made the lady shine out resplendent as an artiste. Ed. Carroll made all that was possible of "The Mikado." R. T. Colu did well as "Nanki-Poo." His singing was unexceptional, but his dramatic powers were not on a level with his musical training. It is a rare accomplishment to find a good singer a good actor. The "Pooh-Bah" of H. A. Crocker made the audience realize that he was the Lord-high-everything. H. N. Ravenscroft made all out of "Pish Tush" that the author intended. The "Neeban" of M. Bodefeldt, while he had little to do, did it well. We see nothing in all the performance that merits censure or harsh criticism. The chorus, particularly the female voices, was superior to anything we have heard here, the grand opera excepted. Young ladies and gentlemen, you have done well.

Accidentally Shot.

Friday evening Martin Lavroni, an Italian, called at the junk store of Charles Shoemaker, on I street, and desired to trade a pistol which he had for a cheaper one. During the negotiations, and when Shoemaker was turned, the pistol in the hands of the Italian was discharged. The bullet struck Shoemaker near the right nipple and he fell to the floor. Lavroni started to run, but the brother of the wounded man struck him over the head with a club, and he was arrested. The wound to Shoemaker was pronounced serious when he was examined at the city receiving hospital by city physician Nichols and Dr. Huntington. The injured man stated that he believed the shooting was accidental, and that seems to be the fact, as no motive for the commission of a crime appears.
City physician Nichols stated last night that the wounded man had recovered from the shock, but that fever had set in, and the chances, generally speaking, were against his recovery. The physician thought it would not be advisable to probe for the bullet in the present condition of Shoemaker, who is still at the receiving hospital. Last evening his sister arrived from Oakland to be at his bedside.

TARGET BEARERS STILL.

The League's Infant Lowers a Peg in the Championship Struggle.

The San Franciscos, with a winning smile depicted on the faces of their veterans and elated over the overwhelming defeat they administered to the slough city boys last Thursday, met the Sacramentos at Snowflake Park yesterday afternoon, and defeated them after two hours of ball playing, pausing continually to wrangle over some disputed points which were frequently occurring throughout the game. The central figure on whom the disputants cast their always-convincing arguments was Umpire Young, and the noiseless tenor of his way was somewhat disturbed by the ever-kicking ball players. The audience took a hand in the kick, and when some of our local baseball enthusiasts will have to account for their remarks, they will be surprised to answer for sayings which were made in the moments of anger and excitement.
The San Franciscos presented their new acquisition from the amateur ranks, and up to the seventh inning he pitched a brilliant game; in this inning he became rattled and excited, and retired from the box in favor of catcher Swett. Captain Powers wanted to place Meegan in the box during the inning, and, after a wordy war lasting fully 20 minutes, he submitted to the rulings of the Umpire, and placed Swett in to twirl, Farrell going to right field, and Stockwell taking Swett's place behind the bat.
At 3 o'clock game was called, with Sacramento at bat, and were retired with no runs. San Francisco scores one run in the first on Shea's base on balls, a steal to second and Levy's long flyout to the field.
In the second Sacramento scored two runs and San Francisco is shut out.
The third inning opened with Sacramento in the lead. McSorley flies out to Stockwell. Veach reaches first on balls and is retired on O'Day's hit to Hanley, in which a pretty double play is made.
Shea comes first to bat for San Francisco and receives his base on balls, steals second and scores on Perrier's hit to center. Levy is out on O'Day's assist to first.
Stockwell flies out to McSorley with two men out and one on second. Donahue hits for a single, on which Perrier scores, netting San Francisco two runs. Powers retires his side by flying out to Sylvester.
Sacramento scores one run in the fifth on Goodenough's single, a stolen base and McSorley's hit to left. Again in the eighth, Sacramento scores three runs more on timely hitting and the wild pitching of Farrell. These were all the runs scored by Sacramento, while the bay city boys kept continually increasing theirs till the end of the game.
The game was not what could be called an interesting one, although at times some very pretty playing was witnessed. Shea, the San Franciscos' third baseman, played very poorly. Besides playing badly, his attempts at coaching were far more off. He is the poorest coacher that has been seen on the home diamond, and he would greatly favor a Sacramento audience if he would desist from his senseless remarks.
Hapeman was very wild, sending seven men to base on balls, but altogether he pitched a clever game, allowing his opponents but two earned runs.
McSorley had two costly errors on third, which allowed as many runners to score. Roxburg showed up fairly behind the bat, and saved his pitcher many wild pitches.
Hanley and Donahue played brilliant ball in their respective positions, as also did O'Day and Newbert.
The Sacramentos play the Oakland at San Francisco to-morrow, when we hope they will recover the lost laurels of yesterday.

The First Conviction.

The following, from the Winters Express, is a record of the first conviction under the law for the protection of inn-keepers passed by the last Legislature:

Deputy Sheriff Womack took a young man named Frank Rusk to the county jail on Saturday last, to serve a term of twenty days, in lieu of $20 fine. Rusk was committed on a plea of guilty of a misdemeanor in "beating" the hotel out of a board bill. He was tried under the provision of the new law enacted last winter, making it a misdemeanor to intentionally defraud a hotel, boarding or lodging house keeper.

In Relation to Postmasters.

The Postmaster General has announced as follows: "As far as Presidential postoffices are concerned I wish to say that the present incumbents will be allowed to serve out their four years to date from the time of their appointment." As many of the Presidential appointments were held up by the Senate for a long time, some of them nearly two years, this is a most important ruling. They will be permitted to serve four years and no longer, and those who think that the department will not take any notice of the time during which their names were before the Senate are very much mistaken.

A New Paper.

A newspaper is about to be established at Loomis, by Paul Kemble. Mr. Kemble is the son of E. C. Kemble, one of the original proprietors of the Alla California, in San Francisco, and who established the Placer Times, at Sutter's Fort, the first newspaper published in the Sacramento valley. Mr. Kemble, Sr., was a prominent journalist in early days, and was, we believe, the partner of Edward Gilbert. We suggest as the name for the new journal The Citrus Bell.

Attorney-General Johnson has commenced quo warranto proceedings against the Board of Commissioners appointed by the Governor for the new Orange county. STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

Office of the Treasure Box Mining Company, Sacramento, California, May 11, 1889.

Several dealers in pianos are claiming that their pianos are just like the Mathushek. I wish to make it clear to the public that the Mathushek Piano, of New Haven, Conn., is the only piano made which has the tuning pins bushed into solid iron. Iron plates without the bushing are a detriment, and gotten up to deceive the public, and when they pull over are as bad as if the tuning pins were cast into the solid iron plate.

Call and examine the Mathushek at Cooper's Music Store.

CHESS DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY L. F. GRIFFIN.

Contributions to this column are cordially solicited. All communications pertaining to chess should be addressed to L. F. Griffin, box 402.

The latest from the chess congress shows that the Austrian, Max Weiss, still retains his lead of a half game over Blackburn.

In the second round, Mr. Weiss lost his game to Mr. Blackburn, which is the first defeat he has sustained.

To the uninitiated we will explain that drawn games count one-half for each player.

We were in error in calling this the fifth American chess congress. It is the sixth.

Major Hanham, of the Manhattan Chess Club, New York City, distinguished himself by defeating Mr. Blackburn in the second round.

The score to April 26th is as follows:

	Won.	Lost.
Max Weiss	20½	4½
J. H. Blackburn	20	5
M. Tchigorin	19	6
Amos Burn	19	7
I. Gunsburg	17	7
S. Lipschütz	15	10
James Mason	14	10
J. Taubenhau	14	11
Max Judd	13	13
D. F. Delmar	12½	11½
D. G. Baird	12	13
H. E. Bird	10½	15½
W. H. K. Pollock	10½	15½
J. W. Showalter	10	15
C. F. Burille	9½	15½
J. M. Hanham	8½	14½
D. M. Martinez	8	17
G. H. D. Gossip	6½	16½
J. W. Baird	5	20
N. McLeod	4½	21½

It will be seen from the above that Amos Burn has taken a step forward and Isador Gunsburg one backward.

We think it was in 1884 that Mr. Burn visited San Francisco. His admirers in that city will gladly learn of his taking a front rank among the world's masters.

Mr. E. F. Washburne, of San Francisco, visited the club rooms of the Sacramento Chess, Checker and Whist Club last week. Mr. W. points out that the Sacramento committee, in the Redding vs. Committee correspondence game, had a clear win of a piece at their twenty-fourth move. This was entirely overlooked by both sides.

Our game this week is the grand battle between D. Eugene Delmar, of New York, and Michael Tchigorin, of Russia. It occurred in the first round of the world's tourney.

And black wins.

"Pipes and Beer."

An institution known as "pipes and beer" is becoming, or rather has become, an unique feature of club life in the city. The charm of the custom lies in its simplicity, the entertainment being as unostentatious as the name by which it is designated. At several clubs "pipes and beer" has become a weekly institution, and on the established nights, generally on Saturdays, the club steward furnishes for a moderate fee unlimited tobacco with fresh corn-cob pipes, and no end of beer. The fee is usually 50 cents for each partaker. The feast, if such it can be called, is made further attractive by a special dish in harmony with the flavor of the pipe and the taste of the beer. If singing becomes a feature of the symposium it is known as a "smoking concert." By whatever name known, however, it is a delightfully bohemian affair, and its attractions are so varied that it promises to be widely introduced in the clubs of the country.—New York Tribune.

The politest thing we have heard for a blue moon was said by a 'bus-driver a few days ago. He was driving along the narrow part of the street when an old gentleman slipped, and sat down in the mud just in front of the horses. Pulling up, the driver observed, "Beg parding, sir—sorry to trouble you, but if you'll kindly allow me to pass, you can sit down ag'in as long as you like!"

Girls of All Kinds.

There's the pretty girl and the witty girl,
And the girl that bangs her hair;
The girl that's a flirt and the girl that is pert,
And the girl with the baby stare.
There's the tender girl and the slender girl,
And the girl that says her prayers,
There's the haughty girl and the naughty girl,
And the girl that puts on airs.
There's the tolu girl and the fool-you girl,
And the girl that bets on the races.
There's the candy girl and the handy girl,
And the girl that has two faces.
There's the well-bred girl and the well-read girl,
And the girl with a sense of duty.
There's the dainty girl and the fainty girl,
And the girl that has no beauty.
There's the lazy girl and the daisy girl,
And the girl that's a merry joker.
There's the girl that's shy and the girl that's fly,
And the girl that bluffs at poker.
There are many others, oh, men and brothers,
Than are named in this narration.
There are girls and girls, and they're all of them pearls.
They're the best thing in creation—
That is, American girls are.

A Meddlesome Spook.

A ghost has caused a divorce suit and broken up a once happy family. James Martin, a well-to-do farmer, is the owner of one of the oldest homesteads in that county. The place has been owned and occupied by several generations of Martins, and the mansion, a large frame affair, is a very old one, and is much the worse for age and want of repair. About five years ago James Martin married a Miss Noel, one of the belles of the county. The young couple went to live at the old Martin home, and all went well until one year ago. Mrs. Martin, naturally very timid, heard a ghost rambling through the old house one night and was badly frightened. She told her husband about it, but he could hear nothing, he said.

The following night Mrs. Martin heard the ghost again, and from that time it became a nightly visitor at the Martin home. Mrs. Martin wanted to leave the old house at once, but her husband objected, declaring the strange noises were made by rats. Several times Mrs. Martin, so she says, saw a white-robed figure wandering through the wide halls and dark rooms of the old house, and soon her nerves and health began to give way under the strain. She begged and pleaded with her husband to move away from the haunted house, but he still refused. Mrs. Martin was finally prostrated by her fear of the ghost, and went to the home of her parents to recover her health and strength.

Her relatives and friends joined her in appeals to her husband to give up the old house, but he still refused, when fear of the ghost overcame love of husband and Mrs. Martin refused to live with him again. Martin tried in vain to induce his wife to return to the haunted house to live, but she refused, and a few days ago he filed a suit for divorce on the ground of abandonment.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

New Light.

"In my opinion," said Rev. Mr. Sincrusser to a pretty, though pious, young woman of his congregation, "the waltz is very, very wicked indeed."

"So I have always thought," she replied, "and have never indulged in it."

"Yes, yes," he continued, "the waltz whirls its gay kaleidoscope around, bringing hearts so near that they almost beat against each other, mixing the warm breath together, darting the fire of electricity between the meeting fingers, flushing the face and lightening the eyes with a quick language, pulsing every fiber—"

"Jerushy, Mr. Sincrusser," she exclaimed, jumping up, "is it anything like that?"

"More," he said solemnly, "much more." "Well, that's enough. I guess I'll go and learn. I never knew before what I was missing."—Washington Critic.

"I'm not a jealous woman," "but when I see a smooth, egg-headed old swindler with his arm round the girl's waist next door as she's hanging out the week's wash, and when that old Ananias says he's only practicing the garden scene in Faust, and he's making believe the flannel petticoats are rose trees, and the pillow-cases lilies, then I ups with my basketful of patent pegs, and lets him have such a snowstorm about that old hat of his, that he's glad to hide behind the dust-bin for the rest of the day, and clean his boots with shedding tears over 'em."

Cholly—Ah, Tiedrich, I see you have my trousers ready. I am forever indebted to you. Tiedrich—Foreffer indebted? Nein, mein frendt, dose trousers don't go oudt mit dis store till dot bill was seddled, spot cash, right away, aindt it!—Life.

To owe gratitude oppresses a coarse nature; to receive it oppresses a fine one.

To correct one's style means to correct one's thoughts—nothing more.

Boulanger has again been interviewed. He says if the French government intends to prolong the sitting of the deputies until next year the action is equivalent to a coup d'état against universal suffrage, and it would be the duty of every citizen to rise in opposition. He would not be the last man to rise in such a condition of affairs.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, MAY 19, 1889.

No. 13.

Sacramento possesses advantages equal to those of any other city in the State; we are vain enough to believe that they are not surpassed by those of any other city in the union. We refer particularly to the advantages in the matter of the salubrity of climate, the fertility of the soil of the surrounding country, the potableness and inexhaustible supply of water, the river communication with the great grain-producing sections to the north, with the rich fruit orchards below, and to the seaboard. These advantages are natural; man had but to avail himself of them; he is only to be credited with his sagacity that he saw them and profited.

Combined with these natural advantages this city has others of artificial creation—rail communication with all important points in the State and in the union; flouring mills and canneries, the manufactured products of which find a market not only in our own country, but in foreign lands; manufactories in iron, leather, wood, etc., that supply the local consumption, and sell their goods in this State, in the Territories, in Mexico, Central America, and the Sandwich Islands. That there is abundant room for the establishment of manufactories in various lines is apparent; the raw material is produced about us, and requires but the application of the skilled labor of men and of machinery to transform it into finished goods. It is surprising that smaller cities—Stockton, San Jose, Marysville, and others—excel us in the volume of manufactures, when population and natural advantages are considered. There is some reason for it.

Very largely we attribute this lack of enterprise to a few gentlemen who have assumed to act as the leading citizens of Sacramento—the gentlemen who are periodically holding public meetings, who speak and pass resolutions, but who never accomplish anything practical. We venture that there is no other city in the union that is more progressive and enterprising, if judgment is to be based on the amount of voice and printers' ink that is expended. A public meeting can be gotten up on almost any proposition by our leading citizens, and whenever an occasion arises, or seems to arise, for their action, the newspapers open a fresh keg of ink, and the familiar voices of the gentlemen who have undertaken the job of shaping public thought peal forth from the halls in which they are accustomed to meet. The public have about come to regard the matter as a farce, and it might well be suggested that a hall be built for these meetings, and that its walls be covered with large mirrors, that the main participants may have a better opportunity to admire themselves. If we have many more of these useless meetings we will rob Stockton of the soubriquet "the city of windmills."

We do not deprecate the encouragement of local improvement, but we believe in practical encouragement. The rule has been here that if a proposition is made to exterminate an injurious insect, or to establish a new enterprise, meetings are held presumptively to help the matter along. As much voice is expended on a proposition to exterminate the insect as on one to erect a factory for the manufacture of pile-drivers of assorted sizes to supply the demands of the world. The difficulty, however, is that the offending insect flourishes and the factory never materializes. Generally the men who are encouraged to lock up their capital in an enterprise are prudent enough to profit by the experience of those who have heretofore inaugurated important enterprises here. If the encouragement manifested at the outset were kept up all would be well, but whenever an enterprise has been carried to the point where the encouragement is really needed, its projectors find themselves hosed with cold water, and they are beset by obstacles placed by the very ones who had fostered their scheme.

The Messrs. Carey are engaged in operating street railroad lines here. Their road is of great service to the people. If we are to judge from the expressions of the press, made from time to time, their track should be torn up; the people should not be tempted to ride in their cars in a city where the walking is so good. The Central Street Railway Company recently laid their tracks; there was no end to the encouragement they at first received; their capital is locked up; they naturally expected no back-set from the people whose property values would be enhanced, and who would be personally inconvenienced by the construction and operation of the road. They find, however, that before they have advanced far enough that a penny of profit can be realized, those who encouraged them are either members of the cold-water brigade, or are standing by with their hands in their pockets, viewing matters with indifference. We recently had an exhibition of this spirit of what might be termed petty meanness on the part of a few of our people. The chain-gang of the city and county was engaged in cleaning J street, and in the course of their work cleaned the space between the rails of the street railroad. The press became alarmed, having been informed that "numerous citizens" had complained that the gang was employed to do private work, and the thing was stopped. It costs $6 per working day for the salaries of two officers who look after the chain-gang; the county pays 12½ cents per head extra each working day for the meals of each man in the gang. It was not possible that the cost to this big and enterprising city and county of cleaning off the space between the rails of the street railroad company, aside from the cleaning of the rest of the street, that is not objected to, could have exceeded $20 or $25. The total assessed valuation of the property of Sacramento county is upwards of $32,000,000; the appreciation of real estate values along the line of this road, when it will be operated, cannot now be estimated, but it will be very considerable. Yet prominent officials were alarmed that the public should nominally have to pay $25 for the benefit of some gentlemen who engaged in an enterprise that will be of more benefit to the people than to themselves. THEMIS takes a different view of local improvements; it believes that encouragement should be substantial; if we had twenty chain-gangs here we would favor their employment for the assistance of those who will benefit the public, and if any man, company or corporation invests money to benefit and build up this city, whatever we can do through the columns of this paper to assist, we will gladly do. We do not believe in encouraging investments here, and, when the money has been spent and before return is possible, to jump on the enterprise with both feet and heels down.

Not long since there was considerable agitation over a proposition from non-resident gentlemen to erect a woolen mill here. They were encouraged. We believe that the usual amount of printing ink was shed; the customary public meetings held; the stereotyped resolutions passed. Where are the mills? Did it never occur that the gentlemen whose money was to be spent in the enterprise may have ridden about our city? Possibly in their drives they viewed the magnificent ruin at Sixteenth and B streets. It is striking; it is on the line of transcontinental rail travel, a silent monument of the enterprise of the capital city of California. Suppose these gentlemen concerned in the proposed woolen mills had inquired what the ruin had been, and had been informed that it had formerly been a prosperous woolen mill? Their query would have been, "Why was it not rebuilt?" The answer would have been that the owner was crippled by the fire; that local capital had not come to his assistance.

We have an abundance of capital here. We can never expect outside capital to seek an investment in Sacramento unless our own manifests confidence. Nothing practical in the way of great and beneficial enterprises can be accomplished with wind and paper, and nothing for good can be expected so long as encouragement is offered at first and a black-eye is given at the most unfortunate time.

No place like a great banquet for gush and slopping over. Here we generally find a mutual admiration society. Speeches will be made and sentiments expressed that would seem to cement the truest, grandest union of fellowship. The great southern dinner that followed the demonstration in New York, on the occasion of the Washington inauguration ceremonies, is an illustration of what splendid expressions of brotherly love can follow the filling and emptying of the wine cup. The Governor of North Carolina, and the Governor of South Carolina, as well as Governors of Georgia, Virginia, Alabama and Kentucky, clinked glasses with President Harrison, Chauncey Depew and other noted statesmen of the north, pledging eternal friendship and the most devoted patriotism. Orator Grady became hoarse in his rapturous love for the union. These gentlemen talk by the hour of solving the negro problem; and are loud in their devotion to the glorious constitution; yet when they return to their people there is a wonderful change in the sentiments expressed. There the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments are invalid and repugnant to all southern ideas of justice; there "this is a white man's country and we are democrats you know." Why, gentlemen of the solid south, with all your eloquence you have not hit upon the true constitutional solution of the problem which seems to interest you so deeply. We tell you that this solution is merely and simply to enforce the principle underlying all law, which teaches us that all men are free and equal before the law. Your ideas that the south must enforce its decrees; that your peculiar system of government must obtain, no matter by what means, are all wrong, and so long as you attempt to avoid a free and full expression of the public will by the terror process, so long will you have the contempt of the generous and patriotic people who believe in equal and exact justice to all. If these eloquent and eminent southern gentlemen would practice a tenth part of the generous sentiments they give utterance to over the banqueting board, the southern problem could be quickly solved and there would be no more North against the South.

Pittsburg, before its stringent restrictions, had 720 saloons, and an average of 14 arrests per day for drunkenness. Now there are but 98 saloons, and only 3 arrests for drunkenness a day. Besides this, divorce cases have decreased over one-half, and all classes of misdemeanors reduced more than 60 per cent. Is not this a good argument for the regulation and restriction of the lower class of places where vile liquor is sold? Ought not the more respectable saloons, where decency is in order, and all vileness exorcised, be strongly in favor of restrictions that would render it impossible for dives and disreputable places to exist? No good citizen would desire to injure or impair the legitimate business of another. It is only the abuse of the prerogative that causes the good citizen to enter his protest against the toleration of these dens of infamy and vice. As a matter of business, it would be greatly to the interest of the decent saloon keeper to fasten stringent restrictions on the low dives and dens of infamy.

The iniquitous origin of the debt of Sacramento is so familiar to all our older citizens, and the fact that we have now no remedy against this iniquity, because it is claimed the bonds have passed into innocent hands, precludes any fruitful discussion of the matter or any defense on that ground. The great mistakes of the past have been in the unbusiness-like manner of dealing with this question, and allowing it to become so great and powerful as to exercise potential influence in our political and governmental affairs.

When we say that a few years ago the whole obligation could have been purchased for less than $400,000 we but tell the true fact. When we say that through the meddling of those who assumed the functions of administering to the welfare of the city, we have paid out nearly $1,300,000—$400,000 of which was barred by the statute of limitations—and that the debt still remains over $1,500,000, it is the unadulterated truth.

Thus we have the astonishing fact that, for what we could have redeemed for $400,000 we have actually paid out over three times that amount, and are still staggering under a debt of $1,500,000. As the city is at present situated there is little hope of any escape from this incubus, but by good management and a due regard for the taxpayers, we can hold the rapacious creditors in check. Not, however, by increasing the sources of revenue for them either by additional water rates or other taxation. Not by permitting any commission or board to levy a larger tax for funding debt purposes. The safe course just at this time is to avoid the increase of the interest and sinking fund. The first issue of the bonds of 1859, amounting to about $400,000, fell due January 1st, 1888. Those, under the decision of the Supreme Court, and clearly under the recent able decision of Judge Hunt, do not bear any interest.

In this condition, they are not a profitable investment, as there is nothing provided or likely to accrue for their redemption, unless through the agency of great increase in the interest and sinking fund. The interest on all the remaining bonds will have to be paid before anything is applicable on the overdue bonds. There is no power that the bond creditors can invoke to enforce any claim for interest either on overdue bonds or coupons. The city cannot be sued upon any of its bonded obligations, and the courts have declared that mandamus will not lie for any such a claim for interest. Now this large amount of overdue bonds might be utilized as a means of effecting an equitable and just refunding scheme whereby the city might adjust the debt so as not to fall so heavily upon the present generation.

There is a great contrast between the enterprise bestowed upon the residence district of the city and that of the business portion. Beautiful and costly residences abound in all the eastern part of the city, which are the admiration of all visitors. It is only the business center where this want of pride and enterprise exists. Just think what impressions the tourists who pass through our city must have of us. On the north, as the train draws into the city, the first objects that catch their eyes are the rickety shanties and disgusting spectacle of I street, from Sixth to Second. On the south and west, when entering or leaving in that direction, the gaze is invited on Front street, from L to R, with its tumble-down and repulsive structures, which do not reach the dignity of respectable ruins. There is no possible excuse for this perverse silurianism.

We have our local pride. Our home production we are glad to honor. We must not be charged with selfishness when we urge the claims and merits of one of our fellow-citizens for the highest office in the State, because he seems to have a State indorsement. When Governor Waterman and Congressman Morrow vacated the field in the race for chief executive of the State, the people, not only of Sacramento, but the business centers of the State, turned their eyes toward Eugene J. Gregory as the coming man. There are elements of strength surrounding Mayor Gregory that no other man in the State possesses, and which would insure his election, if nominated. He is not a politician; has no enemies; is a Native Son, has encountered no opposition from the mining counties; is well thought of among the farmers, and possesses the friendship of all the business community. With such elements of strength no person can defeat him before the people. We do not say this because he is one of us, but because it is the truth, and the republican party will quickly realize it if he is made our standard bearer.

John Hunt, Jr., has been suggested by the leading members of the bar of the State as the successor of Jackson Temple on the Supreme bench. The writer of these lines has been long and well acquainted with Judge Hunt—we were admitted to the bar in the same class, including Hon. Joseph McKenna. As a jurist, deep thinking, close reasoner, he has no superior on the coast. An untiring worker, possessing those requisites of a Justice—learning, honesty, fearlessness. He has been twice elected Superior Judge of San Francisco, and was once the nominee of the republican party for Supreme Justice, but it was during a year when a democratic tidal wave swept the State and he failed to reach the exalted position he would have adorned. Governor Waterman would reflect honor alike upon himself and the bench by appointing John Hunt, Jr., to the position. He is just the man to act with the present bench, and would make a clearing of the crowded calendar, because he is industrious, young and vigorous.

The following inquiry to the Examiner, and reply, was published in that journal on the 15th:

To the Editor of the Examiner—SIR: Please tell us whether Harrison carried any of the southern States last election. It is to decide a bet. MISSION ROAD.

Harrison carried not one of the southern States so-called. It is wrong to bet.

The sentiment of the Examiner editor is concurred in by a number of our democratic friends in this city, who lost the savings of four years by over-confidence in the reflection of Mr. Cleveland. It looks just a little mean for the republicans to permit the democrats to do all the work of running this big government of ours for four years, and then win all their accumulations and turn them out of their offices. Of course it is wrong to bet.

From the Advertiser, Montgomery, Alabama, we clip the following, which discloses that the old southern hatred still exists, and that they do not accept the inevitable without a protest:

So far as the fifteenth amendment to the constitution is concerned, under which it is provided that there shall be no discrimination in voting on account of race, color or previous condition, it is a notorious fact that the amendment never was ratified in the manner prescribed by the constitution itself. But for the votes of legislatures not elected by the people of the state, the amendment never would have received the necessary votes by states for constitutional ratification.

If such as the Advertiser could obtain control of the supreme bench of the United States, it would be but a brief time until the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments would be abrogated.

John Hay, President Lincoln's private secretary, and one of the brightest and wittiest writers of the day, has been selected to succeed Whitelaw Reid on the New York Tribune. John Hay is the author of "Banty Tim," "Little Breeches," and several dialect poems that have become famous. Years after he wrote these little gems he attempts to apologize for their publication. This reminds us of Bulwer, who in the after years of his life wrote an excuse for the production of one of his best novels, because it was the emanation of his youthful brain and filled with the fire of youth, while he was a student of metaphysics. John Hay, like Bulwer, looked upon the earlier efforts as wanting in that higher standard of ability.

A Romance of War Times.

The most remarkable case I ever noted of individual friendliness between northern and southern soldiers, occurred at a camp on the Rapidan, said a prominent G. A. R. man the other day. Videttes of the opposing armies were stationed on either bank of the narrow stream. Just after dark one night the silence was broken by the shout: "Hello, Johnny Reb," from a union man. He was answered in a moment by his opposing sentry with "Yello, Johnny Yank." Then this colloquy occurred: "Who are you?" "Taylor, of Company A, First Massachusetts. Who are you?" "Taylor, of Company E, Fifth Louisiana." "What is your first name?" "Charles E. What's your's?" "Charles E, too." The peculiar coincidence attracted attention from all of the two armies within hearing, and they listened to the story yelled across the river from one army to another on the eve of battle. It developed that they were father and son. The former had opposed his son's marriage to a factory girl, and the son had married just the same. He and his bride had taken the money the wealthy father had allotted him and suddenly disappeared. Then the father relented and continued an unavailing search until the war had called him. The son had gone to New Orleans, it transpired, and there gone into business and grown wealthy. He had been imbued with the southern spirit by his surroundings, and had taken up southern arms. Next day two boats, under flags of truce, met in the river, and two armies witnessed the reunion. The following morning Charles E. Taylor, Jr., was missing from his command, and we never saw him until after Appomattox, when he walked into camp and told us he had gone over, taken the oath, and gone to his old home, where he had remained with his wife until Lee's surrender made it safe to see his old comrades. His desertion had been to avoid fighting his father.—Minneapolis Tribune.

A Lost Opportunity.

Terry Haute Express: Jiggers—Darn an ignoramus anyhow.

Wiggers—What's the matter now?

Jiggers—I was calling on little Miss Pertly last night and she asked what the phrase "indulging in osculatory exercise" meant. Said she found it in a novel.

Wiggers—Well, did you tell her?

Jiggers—I didn't know what it meant until I looked through the dictionary this morning.

Friend of my soul, do you drink wine? Do you pride yourself on instantly selecting by its "bouquet" the most delicate of the products of the grape? Do you dream as you look through the golden mist of the Chablis or the Johannisberger of the luring Lorelei by Rhine waters? As you sip your "Rudesheimer," does that fair land of vineyards rise before your vision as you label yourself connoisseur? Be not deceived. That wine never saw Europe. Doubtful if some of it ever saw a grapevine. In a talk with the proprietor of an uptown wine house one night last week I learned some queer things about the merits of various wines. "If you drink cheap wine," said he, "drink the California product. That country will yet be the vineyard of the world. Ten to one, if you buy a cheap 'imported' wine, you'll only be drinking California wine after all, and that badly doctored. There are tricks in all trades, ours as well as others, but I don't like them. Here, just look at that circular."—Minneapolis Tribune.

Stories about calls upon the President and members of the cabinet are very popular just now. One of the latest is this story about Secretary Blaine: It is said that the other day at the White House he mistook a noble attache of the German legation for a lackey of the executive mansion, and requested that he assist him put on his overcoat. The German doesn't understand English, but he couldn't misinterpret the gestures of the secretary, and he rushed out of the door and into his carriage in a tremendous passion. It is asserted that he really discussed the advisability of sending the secretary a challenge to a duel, but if so the affair has certainly been smoothed over, as there is no blood on the face of the legation moon. Mr. Blaine was amazed to see the fellow rush away, and when informed of his error, laughed immoderately.

"It is a fallacious theory," said a physician, "that the children of the poor get hardened by privations, while those of the rich become delicate through over-care and coddling. In poor people's children the doctrine of survival of the fittest is most strikingly exemplified. Only the hardiest survive, the naturally delicate die early. As an example, there is the case of the little girl who died of pneumonia. Exposure to the cold air killed her as surely as a bullet would have done. I believe the children of the poor struggle through in spite of their surroundings, and those who survive are only those fittest for the struggle with a hard world. The first blasts of it drive the tender ones to the 'Unfailing Shelter in the hollow of His hand.'"

Brazil sends us 69 per cent. of the total amount of coffee imported, and the cost per pound is six-tenths of a cent cheaper than any other, viz., ten cents.

In the Beginning.

In the beginning, lo, some mystic tie
Bound the still moon as lover to the sea,
And at her voice the great heart, throbbing free,
Flung its waves upward with a yearning cry.
Death paled the moon's wan face long ages past,
Yet still the sea remembers the far call,
And night and morn, with rhythmic rise and fall,
The tidal waters at her feet are cast.

Time may not deaden love's quick listening ears.
Nor death lay silence on a voice which thrills
Like unseen echoes through the silent hills.
Lo, the Eternal, ere the birth of years,
Breathed through still lips this strangely gracious breath
Which distance changes not, nor time, nor death.

—Lucy E. Tilden.

Qualifications for a Nebraska Preacher.

He must be a man of wide, deep and varied understanding, able to tell a Greek root from a rutabago; and second, to know a man by the cut of his jib.

He must be a Hercules in strength, an Apollo in form, a Talleyrand in bearing and a Chesterfield in deportment.

He must be as wise as Solomon, as patient as Job and as meek as Moses.

He must be somewhat of an oculist, so that he can be able to extract the mote from the eye of the wayward sister and pluck the beam from the optics of the misguided brother.

He must be a good singer, with a voice ranging from F below the staff to C above.

He must possess such great humility that when smitten on one cheek he will whirl around as if on a pivot, presenting his other to his adversary.

He must possess such largeness of heart that when asked for his coat he will ask the one making the request if he does not wish his shirt also.

He must be ever ready to throw open his doors to the entire community, and allow the young people every chance to extract the juice from the festive gum.

He must be a financier, able to cope with the great problem, how to make the weekly collections more than suffice for lodging, food and raiment, and should the collection at any time fall below $1 37 he should submit without a murmur and curtail his expenses accordingly.

Should any person deeming himself the happy possessor of these qualifications desire to make an application, it will be considered by the committee, and if his examination proves satisfactory he will be engaged for an indefinite period.

The Fashion in Jewels.

Fine emeralds, says the New York Tribune, have been in greater demand in the last six months than diamonds. They cost from $50 to $300 a carat, according to their size. It is nearly ten years since there was any craze over emeralds before. Two years ago opals were in fashion, and five years ago catseyes were all the rage. The fancy for gems varies almost with the seasons. The demands for diamonds are not so great now for large stones as for fine ones. The average choice is for stones from 1½ to 3 carats in size. Rubies are in favor in New York and other large cities, but in the west one can hardly give them away. Rubies are worth more than ever before, on account of their scarcity. A carat ruby is worth $500, while a carat diamond is worth $100. A perfect ruby, however, is hard to get hold of, while a fine diamond can easily be matched.

New York Press: There is one bar-room in this city the decoration and furniture of which cost $200,000. There are scores of them that are fitted up at an expense of over $50,000 each.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Sybil Sanderson, daughter of that brilliant jurist, Judge S. W. Sanderson, whose genius she seems to have inherited, and niece of William R. Ormsby, of this city, produced Massenet's new opera, Esclarmonde, at the Opera Comique, Paris, on Wednesday evening, May 15th. Miss Sanderson was born in California, and her early youth was spent in this city. The plot of Esclarmonde is a chivalrous romance. She is the daughter of the Oriental Emperor, Phorcas, and is endowed with magic power, on condition that no man looks at her face. She is half human and half superhuman, but despite this command of the genii that protects her, she loves, and is loved by a French knight, "Roland." She gives him a talisman that renders him invisible, and aids him to deliver the City of Bois from a state of siege, but is unfortunate enough to betray his secret. "Esclarmonde" loses her power, and is separated from her knight. They both atone for their faults, and all comes out well. The music is entirely new. The California girl scored a success.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings the theater goers were the recipients of a dramatic treat. Effie Ellsler, with her excellent company, played Egypt and Judge Not to good houses, but not such as her high art and that of her support deserved. Miss Ellsler ranks among the first artistes on the stage, and her rendition of "Egypt," in the play of that name, was indeed a marvel. The sudden transition from the happy, light-hearted little girl to the cold "Princess," was a piece of art rarely seen upon the modern stage. Frank Weston, Orrin Johnson, and the other members of the company did good work. In Judge Not Frank Weston divided the honors with his talented wife. Orrin Johnson and James Willis were fine support. Miss Ellsler, as "Katherine Clare," has few equals in this line. Miss Judith Berolde assumed the parts formerly held by Ethel Brandon, and, while her stage presence is not pleasing, her voice and conception of the characters were good.

Cecil Clay, the exceedingly tall and English husband of the charming Rosina Vokes, was complaining about the towns embraced in what is known as the "Crawford circuit." He pronounced them very bad, and said: "In one place we went to the theater and found only the cornet player in the orchestra. After waiting awhile I asked him where the other musicians were. 'Oh, they're playing up at the ball,' he replied. I then asked him if he alone was to play for us, and he informed me that such was the fact. 'Well,' said I, 'you must be a great cornet player—you must be the greatest in all the world in your line.' He fingered the keys of his instrument, looked at me a moment, and then said: 'Oh, no, I'm not much of a cornet player; if I was worth a — I'd be playing up at the ball, too.'"

During his recent stay in Constantinople the great Italian tragedian, Ernesto Rossi, had the honor of performing twice before the Sultan—once in Othello and once in Sullivan. The theater at the harem is described as small, but tastefully decorated, and is lighted by electricity. The ladies of the harem were in the boxes, but were hidden from the public gaze by gilt cross-bars. The stalls were occupied by court dignitaries. The entrance to the theater was guarded by police agents, armed with sticks and revolvers. The actors were driven to and from the theater in closed carriages and were accompanied by a police escort. The Sultan was much pleased with both performances, and presented Sig. Rossi with the order of the Osmanie, besides a handsome gratuity.—London Telegraph.

Those who become particular character actors, and devote their talents to one character, rarely ever amount to much in anything else. Joe Jefferson, W. J. Florence, W. H. Crane and Effie Ellsler are exceptions. Frank Mayo was a long time getting out of the groove of Davy Crockett. It was thought that Joe Jefferson could never lose his identity with Rip Van Winkle, but his "Golgithly," in Lend Me Five Shillings, is a wide divergence from his former masterpiece. Effie Ellsler can absolutely change her individuality so that no one could recognize her; the change is in personel as well as voice. This is the highest form of art.

At the Royal Theatre at Munich they are going to try the presentation of Shakespeare's plays with scenery and stage fittings as nearly as possible a reproduction of those with which the plays were originally produced. At any rate it will not be a very expensive experiment. The scenery, we believe, was limited to a small placard bearing the inscription "Forest of Arden," "London," "Venice," etc., as the case might be.

E. H. Sothorn will appear to-morrow evening at the Metropolitan, in Lord Chumley, which had an excellent run in San Francisco. It was first announced that Mr. Sothorn would play two nights, and present The Highest Bidder, which is said to be his greatest creation. The company is one selected by Sothorn for his special tone of plays.

The dramatization of Robert Elsmere is a dismal failure. This is a just punishment for an attempt to place such a work on the stage. There is nothing in the novel that even looks toward a dramatic effect on the boards. It has gone the way of The Quick or the Dead, and been buried in the cemetery of defunct sensational dramas.

Lydia Thompson is about to abandon burlesque, and assume high comedy. We fear that Lydia's broken voice will greatly retard any efforts she may make at putting on long clothes and playing high comedy. It is strange that some people fail to realize that they are getting old, and outliving their usefulness.

Ella Russell is on her way home from Warsaw, where she had a great triumph. Her great success was "Romeo," which she sang fifteen nights. The students broke the windows of her carriage to get flowers from her bouquets.

Annie Pixley, a California favorite actress, is lying seriously ill at New York. She is one of the Pixley Sisters, and a prime favorite in California. She is the wife of Rob't Fnlford.

Isabelle Coe will be Nat. Goodwin's leading lady next season. Miss Coe made a hit as the "Schoolma'am" in A Mid-night Bell.

The three St. Felix sisters will return to this country in July, and appear in a new musical comedy, A Royal Hand.

There are three new operas now running in New York, Clover, The Brigands, and The Oolah. The rivalry is great.

The opera Doretta died a natural death at the Standard, New York. The libretto killed it.

Louis Harrison will introduce his new play, The Noblest Roman of Them All, next season.

Mrs. Potter has a mascot—Probably its color is Bellew, and its hair Kyrle.

Minnie Hawk was hissed off a German stage while singing Carmen.

During the war, an act was passed by the legislature requiring all lawyers to take an oath of allegiance to the United States government. It was known popularly as the "ironclad oath." Several of the prominent democratic lawyers—A. P. Crittenden, Tod Robinson, T. H. Williams, J. H. Hardy, B. F. Myres, and others—refused to take it. Myres had been Judge of the Eleventh Judicial District, but was about that time defeated by Judge T. B. McFarland, now one of the Justices of the State Supreme Court. Myres, not having taken the oath, was not permitted to practice law, and at the first term of court that McFarland held at Auburn, Myres was among those drawn as jurors. The first case on the calendar was that of a man named Patrick, charged with the murder of one Shannon. Col. Charles A. Tweed was the District Attorney, and General Jo Hamilton assisted him in the prosecution. One of the first jurors called into the box was Judge Myres, and he happened to take a seat near enough to Hamilton to whisper to him: "As a matter of course, Jo, you will excuse me, won't you?" Hamilton replied: "As a matter of fact, I will not, but I will teach you that you should have taken the lawyers' oath." After the usual questions had been put to and answered by the jurors, Judge Myres was challenged by neither side. He sat as a juror in the case. Judge C. A. Tuttle and J. P. Dameron represented the defendant. Dameron came into the courtroom dressed very nicely, with a swallow-tail coat, black tie, etc. Among other things he brought into the court-room was a small table, upon which was piled a stack of law books and authorities on medical jurisprudence that reached almost to the top of his head. In his address, some parts of which were more laughable than a circus, he finally came to his main defense, insanity, claiming that the defendant was insane on the subject of love; that he had fixed his affections on some lady in the neighborhood, and she had repelled his advances. To illustrate the power of love he used the following expression: "Sometimes it makes a mau as gentle as a sucking dove, while at others it will make him as fierce as the Norwegian lion that roams the Alpine Hills of sunny Italy," and in his earnestness brought back his hand, striking the stack of law books, knocking them and the table over. The expression and the accident threw the court, counsel and jury into a fit of merriment. Hamilton in his characteristic tone said: "Why, Dameron, don't you mean the Numidian lion? There are no lions in Norway." "Certainly," exclaimed Dameron; "it was a slip of the tongue; everybody knows there are no lions in Norway!"

In early days the people of Nevada City elected a Justice of the Peace named Ezekial Dougherty—"Uncle Zeke." At one time a man was examined before him, charged with horse stealing. Several witnesses gave testimony rather strong against the defendant, and the case appeared to be plain. The counsel for the accused, Judge Belden, arose at the conclusion of the evidence for the people, and said: "Your Honor, I now propose to introduce a few witnesses to establish the good character of my client." "What the devil," said Uncle Zeke, "is the use of trying to prove his good character, when it has already been proven that he is a d—d thief?"

Tom Reed, Congressman from Maine, who made some of the most effective speeches in California during the late Presidential campaign, tells a good anecdote of himself and how he was admitted to the bar. He was examined in California by Chief Justice Wallace. Reed says: "The first question Judge Wallace asked me was, 'Is the legal tender act constitutional?' I didn't hesitate a moment. I said simply, 'It is constitutional.' 'You can pass,' said Judge Wallace; 'we always pass a man who can settle great constitutional questions off-hand.'"

A number of years ago Justice Field, of the United States Supreme Court, told a prominent lawyer, that the worst briefs submitted to the Supreme Court were those of the late Jere Black. He was a great lawyer, but often careless in the preparation of his briefs, sometimes quoting authorities on the wrong side. We believe it is the experience of our higher courts that the ablest lawyers, by reason of their exacting practice, do not furnish as complete preparation of their cases as the younger members of the bar of less practice.

It is said that Justice Gray, of the Supreme Court of the United States, does his own marketing, getting up at early dawn to catch the vegetable vendors and marketmen. Why should he not do this as well as any other citizen?

That bright Irish poet, Sir Aubrey de Vere, has contributed to the Spectator the following lines in praise of Edmund Burke, his famous countryman:

The age was sordid; Christian hope burned low;
Old crowns of kings, like mist that o'er a moor,
When tempest nears it, wavers to and fro,
Shook on weak heads portending overthrow
By some deserved. The Gallic Siren's lure Sang to their death-doom prince at once and boor,
Blind pupils of Helvetius and Rousseau,
Daily to England's shores the infection spread,
Of Unbelief and Faith Republican
In pagan league. Then forth there stepped one man:
He stood between the living and the dead;
He raised his hand. The Spirits of darkness fled—
To them that Prophet's rod was flail and fan.

That unsavory story of Emile Zola's "Nana" was founded upon the tragic and miserable death, by smallpox, of the once celebrated actress, Blanch d'Antigny, whose acting in London and Paris ten years created a sensation, and the populace talked of her as of a queen. At the zenith of her brilliant career she was stricken down by the smallpox and died alone in a deserted house in Paris. Zola has in "Nana" utilized this event for the frame work of the revolting story.

Julian Hawthorne, in talking about his literary work, made the astonishing statement that his great father never, during his lifetime, made $5,000 out of anything he ever wrote. "Literary labor," said he, "poorly as it is paid now, was far less remunerative in the days when my father wrote his famous stories."

Skeletons of the ancient mound-builders just discovered, prove them to have been of the very lowest order of intelligence, the bones being even inferior to the Neanderthal skull. So perishes the pleasant dream of ancient civilization in America, about which so much has been written on insufficient premises.

In a recent letter, Robert Louis Stevenson says he expects to live to dance on the graves of half the fellows who are killing him off before his time. This would not be a very edifying spectacle, but we hope he may have the ability to make such an exhibition, even if he has not the inclination.

A Berlin editor declared if Bismarck lived four years longer free speech and a free press would be unknown in Germany, and old Bis. at once had him arrested and thrown into prison, which is pretty good evidence the editor told a solid truth.

Scribner & Wilford have issued a reprint of Edmund Burke's "Treatise on the Sublime and Beautiful." Very few have read this dissertation on the elements of æstheticism, and its reproduction will be a valuable addition to modern libraries.

Rider Haggard is getting ready another of his impossible romances. He has gone to Asia Minor and Persia to obtain material for his story. Queen Esther will be the heroine of the projected novel.

A copy of the first edition of Charles Lever's works recently sold in England for $1,375. The craze now seems to gather in first editions of noted authors.

N. P. Willis is the only poet of distinction born in Boston. The modern Athens does not give birth to genius; it simply fosters and cultivates it.

John Ruskin will soon publish a new edition of "Modern Painters." There is already a large demand for copies.

When a poet is germinating he naturally has a seedy appearance.

ALLEN THORNDIKE RICE.

This is the state of man: To-day he puts forth The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms, And bears his blushing honors thick upon him: The third day comes a frost, a killing frost; And—when he thinks, good easy man, full surely His greatness is a ripening—nips his root, And then he falls.

Allen Thorndike Rice, the editor of the North American Review (the ablest magazine published), and the newly appointed Minister to Russia, is dead. This announcement will be received with sincere sorrow by the literary and political world. Mr. Rice was young, born in 1853, yet his career was marked, and he has made an impress upon the history of his country. Since 1876 he has been editor of the North American Review, and under his management it has become the leading magazine of the world. He early interested himself in politics, and allied with the Republican party. In 1886 he was nominated for Congress, but was defeated by the political leaders of his own party! He demanded an investigation into the causes of his defeat. It resulted in his vindication, and his opponents were expelled from the organization. He was the first to propose the introduction of the reform election ballot method that has been adopted in several of the States. Last month President Harrison nominated him for United States Minister to the Russian Empire. He was stricken down when the political honors he coveted were about to fall upon him; a killing frost came; he fell.

Why Do the People Submit?

It is a notorious fact that there is a wholesale violation of the law in the sale of lottery tickets in this city and State. We have upon our statute books, together with a stringent constitutional provision, laws prohibiting the conducting of any lottery scheme, and the sale of lottery tickets. Yet those tickets are not only held in stock as merchandise and sold upon order the same as any other article, openly, but they are hawked and peddled upon the streets. It certainly would be an insult to the intelligence of any peace officer or policeman to say that he does not know that this infamous traffic is being carried on. With this knowledge how can it be accounted for that no arrests are made? Some of the officers say when questioned on this matter that they are satisfied that these crimes are being committed, but that they do not see the act. Officers are appointed to see that the laws are enforced, and it is their duty to ascertain when and where and how the laws are infringed. It is not expected that the criminal will call on the officer and inform him of his intended criminal act. It is the sworn duty of the officer to ferret out crime, and take all necessary steps to bring the culprit to justice. The trouble with this class of crimes is, that we have so long tolerated the offense that the officers do not attempt to enforce the law, unless, perchance, some unfortunate Chinaman is caught selling a ten cent lottery ticket, and then a great parade of vigilance is made, and the coolie is made to suffer the penalty. It is time to make the police department, as well as the other peace officers of this city, realize that not only is the law being hourly violated, but that an irreparable injury to our financial and commercial relations is being inflicted. Any means whereby large sums of money are drawn from the channels of business without any equivalent is a source of injury to business. This lottery scheme drains this State annually of over $300,000, for which we get nothing in return. As a plain business proposition, how long would it take, with this constant depletion of our wealth, to reduce us to poverty? It is, then, a question of political economy and the protection of our currency. When this vast amount of wealth departs from our midst and no return is made for it, the natural and certain result will be impoverishment. This matter calls for immediate attention, not only from a criminal standpoint, but upon purely business considerations. It is an absolute fact that many people are so infatuated with this lottery craze that they deny themselves and families the common necessities of life to purchase chances to win a prize. Some will neglect to pay their household bills to invest in lottery tickets. Let the business community and the officers unite to suppress this drain of money from the State and coast. While we have great wealth and great resources, we cannot long stand such a depletion of that wealth as is caused by the lottery schemes.

The Adjutant-General at Washington has received a telegram from General Miles, at San Francisco, confirming the Associated Press report of the capture of "Cyclone Bill" and Cunningham, and their identification by Frank C. Stratton, as Paymaster Wham's robbers.

THE RACES.

Closing Day of a Most Successful Spring Meeting.

The spring meeting of the Capital Turf Club closed yesterday with the best day's racing of the week.

The first race was a three-quarter mile dash for two-year olds. The starters were Trahern, s Rettie B and Thornton's Alice. The former was the favorite and won in 1:19.

The second event was a mile dash for all ages. The entries were Garland's Jackson, Byran's Moses B, Appelby's White Cloud, Lynch's Jou Jou, Kelly & Sammel's Welcome and Reavey's Bessie Shannon. The latter won, Jackson second, Welcome third. Time, 1:43½. Moses B was favorite in the pools.

The owners' handicap for all ages, one and one-sixteenth miles, was the next event. Kelly & Samuel's Ed. McGinniss, Byran's Moses B and Ashe's Mozart started. McGinniss, the favorite, won, Moses B second. Time, 1:49½.

The consolation handicap for all ages, mile dash, was run for by Thornton's Joe Hoge, Johnson's Reward, Chase's Glen Ellen, Trahern's G. W. and Williams' Lucknow. They came under the wire in the above order. G. W. was the pool buyer's choice. The time was 1:44½.

The day's sport closed with a match race, half mile dash, between Sir Charles and Emma Nevada, which was won by the latter.

Fourth of July.

A much larger assemblage than usual was in attendance at the Court House. Meeting organized by the selection of Eugene J. Gregory as President, C. W. Baker named as Secretary, and David Lubin, Treasurer. R. B. Harmon moved the appointment of a general executive committee of eleven, who shall have the power to select all sub-committees.

W. A. Anderson moved to amend to make the committee include the President, Secretary and Treasurer, which was accepted by the mover.

M. R. Beard moved that the selection of the committee be deferred, and that the President, with the advice of the Secretary and Treasurer, make the appointments, and announce the names at a subsequent date, and that the Secretary notify the members of that committee by written notices.

David Lubin addressed the meeting upon the proper observance of our natal day, and that it should be such as to teach the idea of patriotism to our children. Suggested that our public school children should be taught to sing a number of patriotic songs, to be repeated during the celebration. That such demonstration makes a deep impression on the mind of the child.

Geo. Boyne agreed with Mr. Lubin's ideas. Rev. Thos. Filben also held the same views.

J. A. Woodson indulged in some severe strictures on former celebrations, on the ground of selfishness on the part of some, whose aim to think that these demonstrations are for the interest of some individuals or classes. He agreed with Mr. Lubin.

M. R. Beard fell in with the suggestion. P. E. Platt thought the feature proposed was a good one.

There was a generally expressed idea that we have an old-time celebration, with procession, fireworks, etc., with such new features as might be agreed upon. All the details rest in the executive committee. The meeting extended an invitation to Governor Waterman and staff to participate with the people of this city in celebrating our natal day. Capt. Sims Emory, on behalf of the colored citizens, agreed to take part in the exercises.

Dropped Dead.

Yesterday afternoon D. W. Thorndyke, who had been undergoing treatment at the Railroad Hospital for heart troubles, against the expressed wish of the doctors left the hospital, as he thought he had recovered sufficiently to enable him to go to his home at Truckee, where he had been employed by the railroad company as a car inspector. After a walk of a couple of blocks he dropped dead from heart disease. The coroner took charge of the remains, and decided that an inquest was unnecessary. The deceased was an Odd Fellow and a member of the G. A. R. His body was shipped last night to Truckee in charge of H. B. Neilson and Ben Wilson, of the I. O. O. F. relief committee.

Mathushek Pianos.

The tuning pins in these pianos which, when once placed, are literally held in a grasp of iron, and there is no chance for the action of the atmosphere to lengthen or contract the strings (as is the case when the pins are inserted in the wood frame); and yet they have all the advantages of a wood bearing, and the pin is firmly held to the very point at which the string takes hold. This is one of the reasons why these pianos require but one-fourth of the tuning necessary for others.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Last Year's Champions Drop Two Consecutive Games to the League's Baby.

Yesterday was a gala day for the Sacramentos; they defeated the Stocktons for the second time last week, and presented them with the target they have so long carried, and which was beginning to be a cumbersome article in the hands of the infants. The Stocktons tried hard to avert defeat, but the brilliant work of the Sacramento's pitchers made their hearts heavy and sad, and placed them the target-bearers of the California League. A happy and contented smile adorned the genial countenance of Manager Gillis after yesterday's game, and he thought of the days in the near future when his club would be carrying the championship banner; and such will be the case if the boys keep on playing the ball they are now. The crowd attending the game was not as large as usual, owing, maybe, to the many reverses suffered by their club. This gave the small boys a chance to occupy the seats in the grand stand, which they did. In one corner of the stand the youngsters congregated, and they kept up a continuous prattling throughout the game.

Umpire Sheridan called game at 2 o'clock, with the Stocktons to bat. They were retired in regular order; Sacramento was treated in like manner, two of the put outs being made on a double play, in which five of the Stocktons took part. The Stockton's in their half of the second shared no better than they did in the first. In Sacramento's half of the second, Krehmeyer, the first batter, hit for a single, and reaches third on Stickney's error of O'Day's hot grounder; O'Day goes to second on a passed ball, scoring Krehmeyer; he goes to third. O'Day scored on Sweeney's error of a thrown ball from short field, hit by Newbert. Newbert steals second, and scores on Roxburg's two-bagger to center field. Roberts flies out to Behan; Goodenough fells out to Whitehead, and Sylvester is thrown out on Stickney's assist to first. This ended the run getting for Sacramento in this inning.

The Stockton's did not score until the fifth inning, when they made 4 runs. Harper, the first batter, flies out to Krehmeyer; Fairhurst reaches first on missed third strike; Behan hit safe and Fairhurst reaches third, and both score on Howard's hit. Stickney hits to pitcher and Howard scores; Stickney reaches first on Hapeman's throw to home to catch the runner, steals second, and comes home on O'Day's error of Whitehead's grounder, thus netting Stockton 4 runs, the only tallies they received through the game. None of these runs were earned.

Nearly all of the players are complaining of the way they are treated by the scorers, and they say that if favoritism continues to act as a factor in scoring, they will be up in open rebellion. Scoring is an important element in baseball, and if it is done at all it should be done properly.

Thy runs scored by the Stocktons placed them one in the lead, and when Sacramento came to the bat for the last time the scores stood 4 to 3 in favor of the slough city boys. In this inning, Roxburg reaches first on Stickney's error, steals second and reaches third on Goodenough's hit to the pitcher. Sylvester receives his base on balls, steals second and both base runners score on McSorley's pretty drive over second for a single. This concluded the game, and Sacramento won the battle. It was a very interesting game, marred only at stages by the yellow ball playing of Stickney. The balance of the Stockton team played great ball, and can owe their defeat to their inability to hit the Sacramento pitchers. McSorley's great work on third was the feature of the Sacramento's fielding. His six chances were all difficult ones, and his playing elicited rounds of applause from the spectators. Hapeman pitched for 5 innings and had his opponents completely at his mercy, but in this inning he became a little rattled at the costly errors of some of his players, and the Stocktons scored 4 runs. Burke was then substituted in his place, and held the Stocktons down without a hit.

Roxburg caught a brilliant game and gave his pitchers excellent support. Besides catching well he is a hard and sure hitter, something that the Sacramentos have needed for a long time—a catcher who can field and bat. Roberts, the young fielder lately signed by Manager Gillis, is a good one, being an excellent hitter and sure fly catcher.

O'Day still keeps up his brilliant work at second, as also does Krehmeyer on first.

The Sacramentos are now in third place, and if they win to-day's game, and the Oakland lose, the Sacramentos will be second.

Considerable sensation was created last week over the arrest and prosecution of Annie Donahue upon the charge of grand larceny, in presenting and having cashed an apparent winning coupon. The coupon was presented to a lottery-ticket broker, who says that he is a broker for the purpose of cashing winning lottery tickets, and by him paid, deducting $25 discount. The prosecution was conducted by C. L. White, G. G. Pickett and W. S. Church, and the defense represented by W. A. Anderson. After an exciting examination, Judge Buckley discharged the defendant, amid the tumultuous applause of the audience, which had packed the court-room to almost suffocation.

The Circus.

On Friday, May 31st, that grand combination of Sells Brothers and Barrett will appear in Sacramento. In the morning there will be a magnificent parade on the streets. When it is known that it requires seventy cars to transport this circus and menagerie, some idea of its great proportions can be formed. Over fifty cages, two droves of camels, two herds of elephants, and many other features, will make the parade a show of itself. One of the new additions is the Children's Dream of Fairyland, exemplified by golden chariots, among which are Robinson Crusoe, Old Mother Goose, Cinderella, Blue Beard, Little Red Riding Hood, Santa Claus, and the Old Woman who Lived in a Shoe. The chariots are drawn by ponies.

Real Estate Activity.

The results of the boom have been to increase real estate values all over this city and county. Particularly, however, have the values been increased in the southeastern portion of the city, and especially along the line of the new Central Street Railroad. Investors will find a rare opportunity in the sale at auction of the block between Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth, V and W, on the 23d inst. This is about the only block on the line of the road that is intact; the property is desirable. The sale will take place on the premises at 3 o'clock on the day named. Bell & Co. are the auctioneers.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

Maurice Hageman, who devoted so much attention to the production of Mikado in this city by the amateurs, has decided to locate here and give instructions in elocution and music.

Wm. Ham. Hall has been appointed one of the engineers to prosecute the surveys for the government plan of storing water in the mountains for the irrigation of arid sections of the country.

Coroner Clark last evening received a dispatch from justice of the peace Sturges, of Folsom, that a man had been killed at the State Prison by a derrick falling upon him. The justice was authorized to hold an inquest.

The matter of Grace Cook, heretofore declared an incompetent, came up before Judge Van Fleet yesterday upon the petition of Eli Mayo that she be legally restored to competency. After the taking of the testimony of Mrs. Cook, the Judge held that she was competent and an order was made that her guardian be discharged.

Thad. J. McFarland, late of the Wheatland Graphic, has purchased the Folsom Telegraph, and will hereafter conduct it. The Telegraph is one of the oldest papers in the State. From our knowledge of the abilities of its new proprietor, we predict that it will, under the new management, rank among the best of the weeklies of the State. Folsom and vicinity is growing; the growth is substantial; the Telegraph will do good work to aid growth and prosperity.

That Bridge.

Over a week ago the Board of Supervisors ordered their committee on roads and bridges to proceed at once to construct a bridge over the Cosumnes at the place where the former one fell. An urgent necessity for the bridge exists, and the work should have not only been commenced, but well on toward completion by this time. What is the matter with the committee on roads and bridges? The business men and merchants of this city are interested in the rapid completion of this bridge, as well as the people living in that neighborhood.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest Signal Service temperature during the past week was 77° on Saturday, and 47° on Wednesday and Thursday, while the highest and lowest during the same week last year was 90° and 50°. The total precipitation during the week was .07 of an inch, making 3.25 inches for the month, and 19.70 for the season, as against 11.44 inches to an equal date last year.

A Lively Shake Up.

At 3:10 this morning two distinct shocks of earthquake were felt in this city. The vibrations seemed to be from north to south, or nearly so. People rushed into the street without donning street apparel, and many who live in the taller buildings were exceedingly timid about returning to their homes "for fear the thing was not all over." It was the liveliest shake up experienced here since March 1872, when such sad havoc was made in Inyo county, wrecking the entire town of Independence, and in which many lives were lost.

World Renowned.

For many years the Chickering piano has occupied a foremost position in the estimation of the leading pianists of the world. Such artists as Franz Liszt, Charles Gounod, Sir Jules Benedict and Stephen Heller commend it for concert purposes. It is in use in more households of Europe and America than any other two pianos of American make.

GENERAL NEWS ITEMS.

A fifteen thousand barrel tank at Pratt's Oil Works, Williamsburg, N. Y., is on fire, with the prospect of the flames spreading.

A receiver was appointed yesterday for the Waldauer Electric and Magnetic Brake Company, of Cincinnati, which has a capital stock of $600,000.

The State Prison investigation has assumed the proportions of a magnificent farce. An adjournment was taken, to be resumed on call of the Governor.

Heury Villard has secured the absolute control of the Oregon Transcontinental railroad. The financial struggle was fierce and desperate, but Villard won.

The Queen yesterday laid the foundation stone of the new college buildings at Eaton, Eng. The boys attending the college presented Her Majesty with an address, to which the Queen replied.

McAuliffe has covered Myer's forfeit for another fight to a finish for the championship. Myer proposes that the fight be near New York or under the auspices of one of the California athletic clubs.

At Chicago, John S. Cosgrove and wife, Annie, have been arrested by the federal authorities on complaint of C. T. Smith, of Los Angeles, Cal., charged with using the mails for purposes of blackmail. The authorities decline to give particulars, but say the case is an important one.

At Stockton, Joseph T. Ferral, janitor of the Presbyterian church, was beaten over the head with a pistol yesterday by Joseph Badger, a well-known citizen. Badger accuses Ferral of tampering with his ten-year-old daughter when she entered the church to return a hymn-book. Ferral is 45 years old and has a wife and five children. He is in jail on a charge of criminal assault.

Local Self-Government.

An important decision has been rendered by the Supreme Court—that sustaining the validity of the Los Angeles charter. This is a triumph against anything like bad government. When the people by their expressed will at the polls adopt, and the legislature affirms such action by resolution or otherwise, it is a strict compliance with the technical forms. Los Angeles will now have a new and better form of government, something that Sacramento has long needed. We trust that light will dawn upon the benighted ones of this city before the next session of the legislature and that the people may have an opportunity to pass upon the needed form and reform of our local self-government.

Johnson and Slavin's Minstrels.

This is a strong combination, with several new and novel innovations in minstrelsy. Carroll Johnson is a fine artist, and reminds us very much of our Billy Emerson. His line of business is the same. Bob Slavin is not in good voice. Burt Haverly was exceedingly clever in his character personations. The singing of Will Stephens was good. Taken as a whole there is no room for adverse criticism.

The latest exhibit from the Chess Congress shows Messrs. Weiss, Blackburn, Tschigorin and Burn still in the lead, with Messrs. Gunsburg and Lipschutz close seconds.

Mr. G. H. D. Gossip has a new chess treatise in print. It is published by Dick & Fitzgerald. Price, 75 cents. It is mainly for beginners, though it is said advanced students will find much of interest in its pages.

 (l) Another excellent move, virtually closing the game.

A Daughter of Eve.

Eyes like the sky, and hair like the sunshine,
 What is she thinking, the precious pet,
 As she sits there, holding, 'twixt pink palms tiny,
 That gold-streaked apple, untasted yet?

Is it the flush of joy's red dawning
 That runs round the little maid's rosybud lips?
 Is it the shadow of sorrow that lurks there
 In the curves of the mouth that downward dips?

The light in her eyes that dims and darkens,
 That glooms till the violet grows to gray;
 The glance half glad, and yet full of wonder,
 What, oh, what do all these things say?

Ah, me! the apple that child-hand holds there,
 Is it a sign and a symbol set,
 Since Time began, of a woman's taking
 And giving? Of Love and Grief and Regret?

Will its taste in her mouth be sweet or bitter?
 Will it be both? Ah, sweet little maid!
 She gazes with eager eyes on the golden
 Fruit, not afraid or unafraid.

Clasping it close, she sits there waiting,
 With wistful wide eyes while the weird sisters weave
 The web that fore'er from her childhood's
 Eden
 Shall shut out this little daughter of Eve!
 —Boston Globe.

There are two things of which a burglar always stands in dread," said a detective last evening. "First is a small black-and-tan dog in the house. This pesky little animal is easily alarmed, and makes noise enough to awaken the neighborhood. A burglar will never enter a house where there is a young baby if he knows it, for the babe's mother is always a light sleeper, and any little noise awakens her, because she is constantly on the alert to attend to the child. A little dog or a young babe is better than all the burglar alarms ever invented."

I have always favored the idea that great men ought, for their families sake, to have died in the flush of triumph. Caesar owes much of his immortality to having been knifed at the right time; Brutus for having thrown himself on his sword, and had Napoleon killed himself at Waterloo he would have been lifted beyond the tame history of St. Helena. Lives, like the drama, need climaxes upon which to drop the curtain. Heroic men require heroic ends.

The Nichi Nichi Shimbun says that the following telegram from Seoul, Corea, dated the 22d ult., was received: Mr. Denny, the adviser to the Korean King, having received $30,000 from Li Hung Chang, has decided to resign his post and return home. The China Mail discredits the report, so far, at least, as the $30,000 is concerned.

Poet (reading from manuscript)—"Twas she who awakened his passions and fired his love." Friend—"Hold on, there; you've got a mistake in that line." Poet—"Have I?" Friend—"Yes, you have: 'Fired his love.' It's generally the lover who is fired, as I know from sad experience."

The jury in the case of William Kemmler, at Buffalo, charged with killing his mistress, Tillie Ziegler, rendered a verdict of guilty in the first degree. Kemmler is the first murderer in that State to be executed by electricity.

Frauk Cody, who was reported to have been killed and roasted by Apache Indians in Arizona, it seems was killed by three Mexicans.

From the native papers it is learned that there is a proposal to encourage Japanese emigration to Mexico.

Japan is to have a training school for jail officials, under the instruction of a German expert.

FLASHES.

Fine horses are often driven by very different men.

The enthusiasm of youth is often chilled by experience.

We do not contradict those we love or those we despise.

The society fellow who pays his respects seldom pays anything else.

As there can be nothing new, memory is often mistaken for originality.

There is not much milk of human kindness in the pale of civilization.

A police officer need not be an agriculturist, but should be able to pull beats.

When one throws himself in the balance, his mind was weighed beforehand.

It is always the indifferent doctor or lawyer that chatters about his patients or clients.

California has the finest wines, fastest horses, and prettiest women. Easterners swallow the first, buy the second, and win the third.

It was rather an amusing discussion. John Grubler was endeavoring to convince Win. Davis that if California was fenced in from the outside world and ruled by a king, then all would be right. But Al. Johnston broke in on the conversation, and suggested that it might happen that Aleck Anderson would come in with three kings—where would Grubler's one king be?

These lines were written on the fly-leaf of a bible:

"Within this awful volume lies
The mystery of mysteries.
Happiest he of human race
To whom his God has given grace
To hear—to watch—to hope—to pray,
To lift the latch, and find the way;
But better he had ne'er been born
Who reads to doubt—or reads to scorn."

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

Is modern journalism degenerating? Is the influence of the press waning? We think so. Our leading papers print too much matter, and they are carelessly edited. When papers are issued with eight pages daily, the temptation is to put everything in, without particular regard to its interest; the readers are surfeited with uninteresting matter, and but scan them over; the meat is buried in the mass of useless matter. Time will soon come when smaller and more carefully edited papers—papers that will present the news in a compact body—will receive popular favor. The work of editing a small paper is greater than that of supplying the matter for a blanket sheet; in the case of the latter, the shears largely takes the place of brains; it becomes a question of the amount and not the quality.

Time was when a newspaper represented the individuality of its principal writer or owner. The Tribune was Greeley, the Times Raymond, the Herald Bennett, Sr.; in our own State, until the last few years, the same rule prevailed. It has come to be that the great newspapers of the country are the property of men of wealth or corporations; many of them carry at the heads of their columns the names of men as editors who never write a line, and who are perhaps not capable of penning a correct sentence. The editors have to express the views of their employers; their own opinions are not presented in their prints; their abilities are simply purchased. We can conceive of nothing more humiliating than for a man of genius being compelled to write at the dictation of others, and in some instances when the objects sought by the publication are not precisely in the line of good morals. In very many instances the editor of to-day is but a creature to pen the ideas of his masters. In view of this too general state of journalism, it is not surprising that the influence of the press has declined, and newspapers will have little effect in molding public opinion, unless the people understand that their writers are untrammelled, and are permitted to write and publish what they think; to speak the truth.

A newspaper, like a man, should have pronounced opinions. This matter of "independent journalism," as it is prated about in the papers, is one of the farces of this age. With many journals the idea seems to be that if they have no settled views; if they are so conducted that readers cannot judge by one day's issue what the expression will be the next, they are independent. So we have papers declaring that they are democratic or republican, that rarely support the ticket of the party they profess to be adhered to; they make an exhibition of themselves in each campaign, and are ridiculed by all the political elements. It is difficult to understand how the conductors of these journals expect to exert influence with intelligent readers. A free press is a power; one whose writers are fettered, and who are employed simply to express the opinions of their owners, soon loses its standing.

THEMIS is an example of a journal whose editors are permitted to write their individual views. Its reception by the people of this community has been gratifying; its subscription list has been constantly augmented; its circulation is among the reading and thinking element of our people. We have not solicited the patronage of the depraved; it is of no use to us, for we can better live without it. To the patrons of the paper we return our sincere acknowledgement of appreciation for their support; it will be reciprocated. We will benefit this community; we will speak boldly on all public questions—especially on matters of local concern; our position will not be misunderstood by any reader. No outside power controls us; the hand of no man directs the pen of any editor of this paper, save the one who holds it. We write our own thoughts; the great people will judge if we are correct.

There is an unknown and invisible power which exercises, at times, absolute control over our thoughts and actions. This influence is felt, not only when superinduced by the agency of another mind, but in absolute solitude. Few, indeed, have not experienced the realism of that famous sentiment: "Coming events cast their shadows before." We often have a dread of some impending danger or trouble that materializes into actual results. This has been reduced by science to the later day psychology, mesmerism, and the mysterious power of hypnotism. It seems like inviting a superstitious belief to say that one alone, without the contact of another power, could be influenced or affected by these strange and mysterious powers, but it is the experience of every human being, that such is true. There are no people, no matter how unversed in the science of cause and effect or how untutored, who have not traditions of this invisible power. The North American Indians held in veneration some great spirit influence which guided their actions.

This psychical influence over the mind, and by which the functions of the mind are suspended, has been made the study of the learned medical fraternity, with a view of utilizing it for scientific purposes. It has been ascertained by actual experiments that persons under this influence can be and have been made to commit crimes. At Buda-Pesth, the astonishing discovery was made that some unprincipled scoundrel had employed this power in forcing a large number of school boys to commit thefts, and the proceeds of which were delivered to the manipulator while his subjects were in a hypnotized condition. The boys declared they knew what they were doing, but were unable to resist. Prof. Charcot gives many instances where his subjects were induced to commit burglary to illustrate this great power. He also contends that this power can be used to detect crime, by making the suspected criminal a subject of the psychical influence.

The medical minds are opposed to allowing the indiscriminate exercise of this wonderful power, because it has a tendency to injure the subjects and produce insanity. Prof. Charcot says: "Medicine has taken possession of hypnotism, and it is only through her that such an agent can be made of use to mankind, and prevented from working injury to the human race." In medicine it was thought that hypnotism might be of use as an anesthetic in surgery, but there seems to be some doubt of any practical good results therefrom. The damage in the use of this power is in the fact that only weak people, those of sensitive, nervous temperaments, are subject to the hypnotic infatuation. A strong man or woman will not yield to its powers.

The Sunday Union, the first issue of which was on the 19th inst., is a creditable production. We must, however, criticize our contemporary. In the article entitled "Thirty Years Ago," several errors appeared. We call attention to them only that we believe history should be correctly written. Our friends refer to the great excitement in San Francisco over an approaching primary of the Lecompton wing of the Democratic party, in which William M. Gwin figured prominently, and the statement is made that that gentleman was then a Senator from El Dorado. Gwin never sat in the Legislature of California; he had held prominent political positions in the east, came here in early days, and on December 20, 1849, with Colonel John C. Fremont, was chosen one of the first United States Senators from this State. He became a prominent member of the upper house of the national legislature, but when his term expired the complications in the Democratic party in this State resulted in no choice for his succession, and for two years the position was vacant. David C. Broderick was the leader of the northern wing of the Democracy; Gwin of the southern—each aspired to the Senatorship. In 1857 a truce was brought about; Broderick was elected on January 10th of that year for a full term to succeed Weller, and on the 13th Gwin was elected for a short term to succeed himself. Gwin's second term expired March 4, 1861. Our contemporary is in error in the statement: "The friends of John Nugent were hopeful of his nomination for Governor, while William M. Gwin was working for John B. Weller, with the understanding that the latter would assist him to reach the United States Senate." Gwin was already in the Senate. The campaign of 1859, in which Milton S. Latham was elected Governor, was the most exciting that has ever occurred in California. Broderick and Gwin, the United States Senators, stumped the State, each representing a faction in the Democratic party. Political feeling ran high; bitter personalities were indulged in; and the very month of the election Broderick received his death wound in the historic duel.

In speaking of the organization of the Independent City Guard, our contemporary states that its second lieutenant, Isaac Lohman, "is a leading wholesale grocer in San Francisco." Mr. Lohman has been dead several years. He was a prominent merchant and pioneer of this city. In the same article we learn that "Paschal Coggins—afterward city editor of the Union—was Police Judge at that time, and daily sentenced offenders to the prison brig at the foot of I street." This is an error. The Paschal Coggins referred to never occupied a judicial position here. James Coggins was, about that time, a Justice of the Peace, and we presume that the reference was to him, as he may have presided temporarily in the police court. Paschal Coggins was for many years local editor of the Union, and twice represented this county in the assembly—the 17th and 20th sessions. He ran for Congress against H. F. Page in 1872, on the Liberal Republican ticket, but was defeated. We speak of these matters to generously correct our neighbor, for an article on history appearing in a journal so carefully edited as the Sunday Union may in after years be accepted as authority, especially when they are gathered from the files of one of the most prominent newspapers in the State.

If we were living under a code of laws as strict and unbending as those of Connecticut in olden times, and which have gained the title of "Blue Laws," there would be weeping and wailing in all quarters. How would this suit our young people? Unmarried people could board only in licensed boarding houses, and the keepers of the boarding houses were held responsible for the conduct of their boarders. We apprehend that there would be lively times in enforcing such regulations now. Death was the penalty for witchcraft, worship of false gods, blasphemy, bestiality, adultery, treason and Sabbath breaking, when done in a willful spirit. The parent had a right to put to death a stubborn or rebellious son over 16 years of age if he could not reform him. What a lot of death penalties could be inflicted now, if such was the law.

An extra session of Congress commencing in October would greatly facilitate needed legislation for the nation. The regular session is too short to prevent obstructionists from defeating important measures which the commercial and business world demands. A session which begins a month or two in advance of the regular session will enable the members of Congress to clear the way and get proper legislation in a shape that it will be beyond the power of the obstructionists. Several months ago Senator Allison, in an able article in the North American Review, showed the policy and wisdom of holding an extra session of Congress. From indications the President seems impressed with the idea of an extra session, and which he may call early in the fall.

Germany seems disposed to exact by diplomacy what she failed to secure at arms. The demand for indemnity for vessels lost during the late hurricane at Samoa, if allowed, will place that country in the absolute power of Germany. With the same process of reasoning that Germany employs, the United States might ask indemnity for her lost ships. If granted, then the same element of discord between the two countries would exist, as Samoa would never be able to pay either. The crafty diplomat of Germany will never lose anything by not asking for it.

SOME UNWRITTEN HISTORY.

Sacramento in Embryo—How Government was Established from Chaos.

PART II.

Sacramento in embryo is inseparably connected with the biography of General John A. Sutter. But the scope of this article does not include a full account of the life of the founder of the city. Born of Swiss parents in the Grand Duchy of Baden, February 28, 1803, educated in its schools, a captain in the army of France under Charles X, he was yet essentially republican in all his sympathies, and he had much to do in rendering the conquest of California by the Americans easy and inexpensive. Yielding to pioneer impulses he immigrated to the United States, arriving at New York in July, 1834. He went at once to Missouri, intending to found there a colony of his countrymen. But the vessel containing his effects, on which he relied, was sunk in the Mississippi just below St. Louis, and that scheme was abandoned.

After sojourning a time at St. Louis, he went to New Mexico on an exploring excursion, and while there he met hunters and trappers who had been in Upper California, and heard from them something of its climate unsurpassed; its magnificent mountains covered with timber; its fertile valleys, fit for cultivation; its hills, covered with grasses; its winters so mild that vegetation was not checked by cold, and where herds of cattle might be kept without shelter or stored food, and he determined to make California the field of his future operations.

He returned to St. Louis in 1836, and on the 1st of April of that year he joined a party under Captain Tripp, of the American Fur Company, and traveled with him to their camping grounds in the Rocky Mountains.

Thence with six horsemen he made his way through the great American desert and across an unexplored country to Fort Vancouver. From that fort Captain Sutter took passage on a vessel of the Hudson Bay Company for the Sandwich Islands.

In 1837, 1838, and until the middle of 1839, he traded between Sitka and the Sandwich Islands, and on the 2d day of July, 1839, passing down the coast from Sitka, his vessel was driven into the bay of San Francisco in a distressed condition. Here his vessel was boarded by an officer with an armed force, who ordered Sutter to leave, telling him that Monterey, ninety miles southward, was the only port of entry for the country. He, however, obtained permission to remain forty-eight hours for supplies, and at the end of that time he left for Monterey.

Juan B. Alvarado was then Governor of California. At that time the Mexican settlements had not extended north beyond Sonoma. The country lying on and near the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers was inhabited by bands of Indians, some of them warlike, all wild; and other tribes located farther north and east made annual incursions into the Mexican settlements and drove off herds of cattle and horses. These Indians were too warlike and strong for the Mexican population to encounter, and Governor Alvarado was desirous of establishing a barrier composed of hardier people than the native Mexicans against their depredations.

Sutter still had in view his colony of Germans, and he proposed to the government that he would, if permitted, become a naturalized citizen of Mexico, and apply for a grant of land for himself and others, and establish a colony to the north which would protect the native Mexicans from further menace from Indian tribes located to the north. Governor Alvarado, seeing the advantages of such a settlement, gave Sutter a passport, with power to explore and occupy any territory which he should think suitable for his colony, requesting him to return in one year, when he should have his citizenship acknowledged and receive a grant of such lands as he might solicit.

Captain Sutter then returned to San Francisco (then Yerba Buena), and chartered a schooner and several small boats of Leese, Spear and Hinckly, three American traders who had made that port their headquarters for several years. Without a guide or pilot who knew anything of the Sacramento river, Captain Sutter started on his exploring expedition with his company, consisting of ten white frontiersmen of American, Irish and German birth, with eight Kanakas given him by the King of the Sandwich Islands. After eight days' search he found the mouth of the river. This they ascended without molestation or difficulty to a point near the present site of Freeport. There they encountered a party of about 200 Indian warriors who exhibited every mark of hostility. Some of these Indians understood Spanish, and Captain Sutter invited a conference. The Indians were specially hostile to and bitter in their animosities against the native Mexicans. He explained to them that he was not a Mexican; that he came to settle in their country, and to open trade with them. He exhibited his agricultural implements and articles for traffic, and set forth the benefits his coming would work to them. The Indians became pacified, and the warriors dispersed. They furnished him with a guide of two Indians who spoke Spanish, and the expedition was suffered to continue. They reached Feather river and went some distance up that stream, when several of the whites became alarmed by the dangers surrounding them, and insisted on returning. Captain Sutter consented to return to the mouth of the American river. This river he ascended to a point afterwards known as Rabel's tannery, near the northern terminus of Twenty-ninth street, where, on the 16th of August, 1839, he caused his effects to be landed on the south bank. After landing, Captain Sutter informed the disaffected whites that all who wished could leave him; that the Kanakas were willing to remain, and that he had resolved to do so at all hazards. Three of the whites determined to depart. These he placed in possession of the schooner, to be returned to its owners, and they left the same day for Yerba Buena.

Sutter remained where he landed about three weeks, exploring the country. At the end of that time he selected a site for the center of his future operations, at a point now occupied by a building erected by him for officers' quarters, afterwards called Sutter's Fort. Thus, with seven white men and eight Kanakas, Captain Sutter made his final lodgment in California, after five years wandering, in search of his promised land. He was far from any point occupied by civilized man—not even a Mexican cattle ranch nearer than Martinez. He thus led the van of civilization in this direction. He came here from a love of adventure, and he had in him the firm conviction of his own capabilities. The desire to lead was in him irrepressible, and he armed himself to subdue the savages surrounding him, and the wilderness yet in its virgin state. He set himself down to keep back the savage and welcome the civilized. Soon a few pioneers came quietly over the border, and found their homes at the fort. Presently more came, and these were quietly cared for as the borders of the colony enlarged. Then came the solid tramp of masses in a human deluge, which overwhelmed the pioneer of pioneers in Northern California.

In the fall of 1839 he had an accession of eight men to his colony, mostly stragglers who had been diverted from their emigration to Oregon; and in August, 1840, five of those who had crossed the Rocky Mountains with him, and had been left by him in Oregon, joined him at his headquarters, which he named New Helvetia, in honor of his Swiss extraction; and thus was established a settlement which soon became historic.

The Indians at first viewed this settlement with distrust. Their hunting grounds were invaded, and they saw the fishing grounds held by them from earliest tradition occupied by a race foreign to them in color, habits, language and aspirations; and they became troublesome to the new colony. The Moquelumnes, in particular, became hostile, and in the fall of 1840 open war was declared by Sutter's colony against them. In a short campaign that tribe was subdued. Bows and arrows could not prevail over firearms, handled by experienced frontiersmen, and the courage of the Europeans handling superior weapons was more than sufficient, and Captain Sutter conquered from them an enduring peace. Other bands of wild Indians organized many secret expeditions to destroy the colony, without success, and in the end the Indian tribes of the Sacramento valley were conquered. Submitting to the inevitable, their subjection became willing. They came to his camp in large numbers, and in due time he taught them to till the soil, build themselves houses, and to make themselves useful in the enterprises in which the colony was employed, including military expeditions in which Sutter afterwards took part.

In June, 1841, Sutter went to Monterey, in pursuance with his agreement with Governor Alvarado. He had then succeeded beyond his expectations, and had shown his good will to the Mexican government by a practical test, involving courage and perseverance. He was then naturalized a citizen of Mexico, and took his oath of allegiance to that government, and made application to Alvarado for a grant of eleven leagues of land in his establishment called New Helvetia for his own benefit, and for twelve other families which he proposed to introduce as settlers. He represented in his petition that, besides the advantages to himself by his settlement, he had awakened industry in others; that by the strength of his settlements he had formed a strong barrier against the incursions of savage Indians. Governor Alvarado, in an official paper, recognized the truth of such statements, and declared that he had been sufficiently informed on the subject, and he therefore granted the land on the terms proposed.

In the latter part of November, 1844, in consequence of revolutionary movements on the part of native Californians, Governor Micheltoreno requested the Americans under Captain Sutter to aid him in putting down the revolution. Captain Sutter was then an officer in the Mexican service, and the native Mexicans owed him no good will. The Americans under Captain Sutter joined the Governor at Salinas plains, near Monterey, and there the Governor made and delivered to Captain Sutter a document intended to conciliate the foreigners, whose aid he sought, and to secure to a large number of settlers in the department of the north the land they had petitioned for, in which he said the supreme departmental governor not being able, on account of close occupation to extend one by one the respective titles to all citizens who have solicited lands "with favorable information from Señor Don Augustus Sutter, captain and judge, charged with the jurisdiction of New Helvetia and Sacramento, in the name of the Mexican nation, I grant them by this letter the ownership of them (said lands), and to their heirs; that the respective lands designated in their petitions, and designs to all and each one of those who may have selected and obtained favorable information from said Señor Sutter up to this date, so that no one may dispute their ownership. A copy of this, which the Señor Sutter shall in future give them, serving them for a formal title, with which they shall present themselves to the Governor to have extended to them the said title in due form and on corresponding sealed paper.

"In Monterey, on 22d December, 1844.

(Signed)

MICHELTORENO."

Thus practically giving Sutter in absolute property the site of the present city of Sacramento.

Sutter was also commissioned to represent the government of Mexico in his department of the north, and this political power remained with him till the country became the soil of the United States.

In February, 1845, there was another revolt by the native Californians against Micheltoreno, the Governor under Santa Ana. The Governor applied to Sutter for aid, and summoned Sutter to meet him in the field with his foreign volunteers. Micheltoreno was then on his way from Los Angeles to Monterey. They met near Santa Barbara, and Sutter insisted that his friends were not well treated. That delays had occurred in the issuing of grants to them when petitioned for, and requested that such grants should be then issued. The Governor was in no condition to refuse, and he thereupon issued to Captain Sutter and his son a concession of twenty-two square leagues from the overplus in the description of his eleven league grant.

These two grants were not finally confirmed, but they serve to show the power that the foreigners under Sutter had attained at these dates, and how Captain Sutter availed himself of that power to secure a foothold for himself and his friends in the country.

It doesn't require an expert to tell whether a diamond is genuine or not. The test is very simple, and can be made in any place, and in a moment. All you need is a piece of paper and a lead pencil. With the latter make a small dot on the paper, then look at it through the diamond. If you can see but one dot you can depend upon it that the stone is genuine; but if the mark is scattered, or shows more than one, you will be perfectly safe in refusing to pay ten cents for a stone that may be offered you at $500.

A Musical Rhapsody.

[New York World.]

Tenor eleven men were seated around the stove comparing notes, when a beat, leaning heavily upon a stout staff, entered and ambled up to the bar.

He wore an air of embarrassment, and there was a perceptible quaver in his tone as he in-choired if the bartender would give a glass of rum to a man who had just returned from a voyage on the high C's.

"What's that you say?" inquired Boniface, wink-at the crowd. "Don't speak solo."

"I said drum, and you know it," replied the stranger. "Do you take me for a flat?"

"Who are you, anyway?" inquired the bartender, surveying hymn curiously. "Where did you come from?"

"Hold on!" was the response. "Give me a chants, and I'll tell you. Your question is a natural one. My name is Ben Legato, I am forte years of age, and I hail from Fife. As you may have guessed from the pitch on my close, I am a sailor."

"Give me a rest," said the bartender sarcastically. "You think yourself very sharp, don't you? You needn't stop any longer; just turn around and march out."

"You are not going to shake me so easily," replied the tramp, "and it will be just as swell for you to understand it in time. I shall try to ignore your slurs, although they do violins to my feelings."

"I'll give you a baton the head fugue go on in that way," was the fierce answer.

"Don't that symphony?" laughed the stranger. "What major think of that?"

"What a base-viol pun?" grasped the bartender.

"That schottische shameful!" said the tramp, attacking the free lunch. "Now counterpoint for me."

"Anthem crackers over," ordered the bartender. "Are they minor yours? Now galop out."

"I won't duet," said the intruder, leisurely arranging his tie, "until you give me the required tonic. I could drink a quartet least."

"Skip," said Boniface, producing a small-sized canon, "or there may be an accidental explosion."

"I'm going tune now," said the visitor, and he made a quickstep for the door and disappeared.

Women are now recognized in every branch of the healing art and the treatment of those ills that flesh is heir to. Daily we read of women graduating as physicians in all parts of the country. Many of our physicians will tell you that a woman's nursing is worth more than their medicines. Now we have the woman nurse and physician combined in one, and certainly the boon to suffering humanity in this case must be great. Women doctors must by their very nature be a success.

Professor Fresenius, of Wiebaden, after a long series of chemical analyses, declares that an egg contains as much nourishment as a pound and an ounce of cherries, a pound and a quarter of grapes, a pound and a half of russet apples, two pounds of gooseberries, and four pounds of pears, and that 114 pounds of grapes, 127 pounds of russet apples, 192 pounds of pears, and 327 pounds of plums are equal in nourishment to 100 pounds of potatoes.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

MODERN DRAMATIC CRITICISM (?)

The first-nighter nowadays won't accept fact;

He will cavil and question and doubt it,

And say of each new play, however compact;

"I'll write to the papers about it."

E'en the walk of a ghost he'll study with care,

And assert that he knows all about it,

And say, while he strokes his last vestige of hair,

"I'll write to the papers about it."

On dancing, deportment, on gesture and grace,

On management or transformation,

He'll discourse all day, without even a trace

Of exhaustion or disinclination.

When the manager asks his opinion to give,

"Wrong in detail," he says; "none can doubt it."

The playgoer feels 'tis a pleasure to live—

"I'll write to the papers about it."

On the newspapers grows in a shower descend—

All objections, of course, bond-fide—

With most trivial details these "pitties" contend,

And refuse to let critics decide.

If this band of growlers, let loose, are allowed

Each fact to assail, when they doubt it,

The rest of the public will soon cry aloud,

And "write to the papers about it."

E. H. Sothorn has given us Lord Chumley. It is not an artistic personation. There is really nothing to commend it, either as a work of art or a dramatic performance. It is unreal, and framed for impossible situations and events. The bare idea of a slight creature like "Lord Chumley," with the mere semblance of a blow, felling a burly ruffian is absurd. The drawing dialogue may be called artistic by some, but to our mind it is absurd in the extreme, and in no sense artistic. Bishop and Miss Archer did some excellent acting, so did Kittie Wilson. "Lord Chomondeley" may be a fine dramatic character, but we fail to appreciate it. The Highest Bidder is infinitely superior to the dude Lord. As "Jack Hammerton," the auctioneer, Mr. Sothorn shows to much better dramatic advantage. C. B. Bishop, "as Bouham Chevoit," was the life and soul of the play. Belle Archer, as "Rose Thornhill," was exceedingly attractive. She is a fine actress and a very pretty woman. Herbert Archer seems to be the general villain of the company, and looks and acts the character to the degree of art.

The Cleveland Minstrels will include in its combination the four greatest minstrels of the age, or of any age—Billy Emerson, Billy Rice, Hughey Dougherty and Willis P. Sweatman. There are so many announcements of Billy Emerson's intentions that it is difficult to form any exact conclusion as to his final determination. Sometimes we hear he is going to have a theater built for him in New York, then again he is to join an opera company, etc., etc. Anyway, Billy is the Prince of Minstrels, take him when you will.

The Howard Athenæum Company have engaged Billy Emerson, at a salary of $1,000 per week. A firm in New York, Rich & Harris, say they intend to erect a fine theater for the Prince of Minstrels. If Billy Emerson would only settle down to business, and not try to break every "faro" bank, or drink all the whisky in the country, he would indeed be a Prince of Minstrels.

The Lion of Peru, a new romantic opera founded on the incident of the south sea bubble, was brought out at Pittsburgh by the Boston Ideals. Dr. E. A. Wood wrote the libretto. Leonard Wales, a Pittsburgh newspaper man, is the composer.

"How is your comic opera getting along?" inquired a friend of the manager. "Splendidly. I have some lithographs that would make a horse wish he'd worn blinders. It is bound to be a success."

Booth and Barrett will not appear in this city during the present season. They have cut their San Francisco engagement short, and will return at once to the East.

Grace Hawthorne proposes to produce an English version of Theodora at the London Princess theater in the autumn.

Billy Birch will be a member of Cal. Wagner's new minstrel company.

Professional Chat.

Billy Hamilton, our County Clerk, is a truthful man—except when he gets talking on the subject of hunting, fishing or adventures in foreign lands. Many have come to believe that when he touches upon these subjects that it is better that he be not under oath. It was not long since that William was relating with apparent sincerity, in the court-room, a remarkable story, in which a South American jackass cut a prominent figure. The story ran as follows, as related by the truthful narrator: "Down in South America they haven't got any railroads or steamboats, and, in fact, the trails over the Andes are so narrow that a mule of ordinary size cannot go over them. The merchandise is carried over in packs on the backs of llamas. These llamas are hardly larger than goats, but they form a great attachment to man, and will pack immense loads. They are awfully sensitive, though, and I knew of an instance where one of the men in the caravan swore in Spanish at one of the llamas that did not keep up with the procession, 'and don't you know that the poor little thing took it so much at heart that she laid down and died!' That's what I call sensitiveness. The great enemies these caravans have to contend against are the immense condors that fly about and swoop down on any llama that happens to lag behind. Of course they carry away not only the llama, but the costly goods with which it is laden. There was one caravan man, however, when I was down there who got the thing down fine. I had noticed on the outskirts of the town a desolate looking donkey; he was about as insignificant as an animal could well be created, and looked as though he ought to apologize for his continued existence. I noticed though that the donkey was treated with the most distinguished consideration, and when I inquired I learned that his business was to accompany the caravans across the Andes. He went loose, and when he would see a flock of condors hovering about the caravan, he would get on the roadside and lay down, with his feet in the air, and pretend to be dead. Pretty soon a condor would see him and sail down to get a meal, but as soon as he lighted that donkey would let go with his hind feet, and he would break a wing every time."

Judge McFarland is one of the most social and genial men in the State. His tastes and manners are simple, and he will stop and chat with the lowliest laboring man as quickly as with the highest magnates. The Judge frequently joins a party of gentlemen in quaffing the appetizing "cocktail," and while in social converse is somewhat absent-minded, and often picks up the change intended for others and puts the same in his pocket, thereby creating at times awkward dilemmas, particularly with strangers. A number of years ago the Judge was pointed in the direction of the place where he took his usual ante-dinner cocktail, and was by some means attracted into the stationery house of H. S. Crocker & Co. He walked up to the counter, and was addressed by one of the salesman with, "Well, Judge, what can we do for you to-day?" "A light cocktail, if you please," answered the Judge. He did not discover the mistake in the premises until the gentlemen present laughed out boisterously, in which he joined, finally inviting the party to go in next door and "take a little something."

Book Chat.

The articles recently published in THEMIS, of Sacramento, written by Hon. B. Collins, of this city, have been attracting a great deal of attention throughout the country. An eastern publishing house has secured the right to publish the article in book form. The article is regarded by the publishers as very valuable. They say: "There has been no abler nor more interesting literary writing done in America for many years. There has been nothing to compare with it yet published in defense of the 'immortal bard.'—Chico Record."

[The above mentioned article has indeed attracted much attention from literary men. Ex-United States Senator Newton Booth said that this was the finest review of the subject that has yet been published. All the back numbers containing the Shakespeare-Bacon article were exhausted long ago. The Courier publishing house, of Greenville, Ohio, will publish the article in book form, and the first edition will be limited to 1,000 copies, for private circulation.—ED.]

"Sunset" Cox was asked last season by a lady who greatly admired the versatile Congressman's writings what he regarded as his very best work. "Madam, I will fetch it," he said, as he went to his desk in the hall, got a pamphlet and brought it out to the lady. It was one of his great speeches in favor of the life-saving service. "Madam," he said, handing the pamphlet to her, "I regard this the best work I have ever done, either in or out of Congress."

Ignatius Donnelly says: "I am busily engaged still in literary work. I am now writing a second volume to my 'great cryptogram.' I expect it will be ready for publication in about a year. It will not be as bulky a volume as the other. I had to have the first one large, so as to get in the fac similes which it contains. This second volume will probably be an octavo. It is designed to still further elaborate and explain the cryptogram."

William E. Gladstone, the great English statesman, was offered $25,000 for a series of twenty-five articles on subjects of current interest. The following reply has been received from Mr. Gladstone: "At my age the stock of brain power does not wax but wanes, and the public calls upon my time leave me but a fluctuating residue to dispose of. All idea of a series of efforts is, therefore, I have finally decided, wholly beyond my power to embrace."

On April 26th, 1711, Hume, the historian, was born. He tells us that the Queen of England, with her son Charles, had "a moderate pension" assigned to her, but it was so ill paid, and her credit ran so low, that one fine morning when Cardinal de Retz waited upon her, she informed him that her daughter, the Princess Henrietta, was "obliged to lie abed for want of a fire to warm her."

The Live Oak Bridge.

On the 10th inst., Supervisor Ross introduced a resolution in the Board, which was adopted, to instruct the committee on roads and bridges to proceed at once to repair or reconstruct the McCabe wire bridge over the Cosumnes river, near Live Oak, to replace the one that fell with the sheep of Mr. Taverner some little time ago. The President of the Board was also instructed to enter into a contract with any company that the committee might recommend to repair or rebuild the bridge at an expense of not more than $15,000, the indebtedness not to accrue until after July 15th, 1889. The committee on roads and bridges consists of Ross, Bates and Greer, but through a misapprehension the members thought that Black, instead of Bates, was a member, and a meeting was held with him. Plans, specifications and cost estimates were invited from several parties in San Francisco. Two o'clock yesterday was set for the consideration of the plans, etc., and all the members of the Board were about. Tebbets, Ross and Black were in the Supervisors' chamber, while Bates and Greer engaged in conversation outside, and near the door of the Sheriff's office. It was not until between 4 and 5 o'clock that the meeting was called to order. Ross presented a petition signed by over 250 interested parties—and many of them men of wealth—requesting the Board to rebuild the bridge as soon as possible, "as we consider it a great public necessity, and a great convenience to the traveling public." When the committee met, Greer stated that he understood that Black was a member. Ross stated that he had made a mistake about that. Greer stated that at the former meeting it had been agreed to advertise for bids for the bridge, and that no action should be taken until the next regular meeting of the Board, when progress would be reported. He could not now conscientiously vote for a proposition that had been made for an immediate special meeting of the Board. He stated that at the first committee meeting it had been agreed to advertise for bids, but after consultation with the District Attorney he had advised them that the committee had no right to advertise. He was perfectly willing to abide by the action taken at the former meeting of the committee. Mr. Ross stated that since that meeting matters of importance had come to his knowledge from the people interested in the construction of the bridge. He referred to the petition he had presented, stating that harvest was approaching, and that he had been urged to have the Board go on and do the work without delay. He expressed himself as sorry, in view of these considerations, that he had not urged conclusive action at the first meeting. He believed that, as the case stood, now was the time to act. This meeting had been called for action on the matter and he was in favor of acting. Bates said there had been a great deal of talk about this matter, and some that he did not particularly like. He moved that the matter be laid over to the first Monday in June—the day on which the Board would meet. The motion was passed, Greer and Bates voting for it and Ross against. Representatives of three bridge companies were present, and they had presented their plans and estimates sealed. Greer proposed that they be opened and examined, with the reservation that no definite action would be taken, but the bridge men were unanimous; they said they supposed the meeting meant business and declined to show their hands to their competitors. After a desultory and at times exciting talk, the committee adjourned pursuant to the terms of Bates' motion.

Benefit for Jeffreys-Lewis.

It is said that to-night Booth and Barrett will appear in a benefit for Jeffreys-Lewis, at the Baldwin Theater. Madam Modjeska will assist. The startling announcement was made that the famous actress, Jeffreys-Lewis was in absolute want, not having the means of securing the common necessities of life. This fact being brought to the attention of Edwin Booth and Lawrence Barrett, they at once proposed a benefit for the destitute actress. It should be a round benefit, and the citizens of San Francisco will do honor to themselves by responding handsomely.

Another dangerous place appears at the corner of Eighth and H streets, on the crossing. A lady was seriously injured by falling over the broken places in the walk.

A Dangerous Crank.

Yesterday a man came into the Sheriff's office and inquired for the head of the office. Sheriff McMullen was in the vault and the visitor was told by a trusty in the outside office to wait a few moments. He left several copies of a circular and said that he would return. When the Sheriff re-entered the office he read the paper and concluding that the man was a lunatic, started out to find him. Later on, Officer Carroll arrested him at the Western Hotel and lodged him in the county jail on charge of lunacy. The man has been here since August. He has acted strangely, and has within the last few days been distributing about the city printed circulars, reading as follows:

Notice!—To Whom It May Concern!—I will not be reduced to poverty again in Republican presence. I shall so employ myself that this outlaw increase shall be cut off. I equip myself for war with what means I have. The dastards that dare not call you to order are not the Great I am. Your peace is unlawful; you never can settle the questions by any such administration. I won't receive your justice. I defy this upstart nation in my native land to do their worst in war against me. I will do alone. This is not to intimidate any one to give me employment, or to swindle anyone out of his belongings in any way, but that I am the head, not the foot of the law. I will be the head in this continent. It is my duty to print and circulate this notice.

If at the close of thirty (30) days you have not made the proper approach towards settlement, I shall declare war, survive or perish. Call this what you may, of your cowardice I have been a witness.

ARTHUR HAZLETON,
Sacramento, Cal. Western Hotel.

When arrested, he had on his person a revolver and a large knife. At the jail, he declared that he had been wronged, and that there were people in the city whom he intended to kill.

Memorial Day.

The committee having in charge the arrangements for the observance of Memorial Day have almost concluded their work, and they promise the generous citizens of Sacramento, who have always so nobly assisted them financially, that the parade on that day will excel anything that Sacramento has heretofore seen on any previous Decoration Day. The committee request all loyal citizens to display the national colors at half-mast. The evening exercises, to be held at the Clunie Opera House on the evening of the 30th, bid fair to be a notable event, judging from the talent that has volunteered, as seen by the following programme:

1. National airs, Orchestra.
2. Invocation, Rev. A. C. Herrick.
3. Address of welcome, Comrade A. T. Needham.
4. Chorus, "Evening," Fair Oaks Glee Club.
5. Recitation, "Memorial Day," Miss May Powers.

Thieves About.

Thursday night Mrs. Loring, who lives on Seventh street, between H and I, observed a man pass by her window, on the roof of the back addition to the building. She arose from her bed and shut her window. The fellow coolly walked back and climbed down the gutter pipe to the ground. Officers Snooks and Lowell saw a man come out of the alley on Seventh, J and K streets, yesterday morning about 1 o'clock. Lowell overhauled the fellow and found that he had four boxes of playing cards and a pair of fine boots, which he had evidently stolen. Shortly afterward Lowell was passing through the alley, Fifth and Sixth, J and K, and saw a Chinaman. He ordered him to halt, but he started to run. Lowell caught him after a chase of a block, and found on his person a quantity of bread and a pot of coffee, which he said that he had got at a down-town hotel. A few days ago the proprietor of a variety store on Sixth street, between J and K, reported that his store had been entered by sneak-thieves in the day time, and a considerable quantity of goods stolen.

The Billings Case.

The trial of Louis N. Billings, on an indictment charging him with the murder of Francis D. Lighthall, has occupied the attention of Judge Armstrong's court all the week. The general facts of the case are familiar to our readers; the whole affair is unfortunate. A jury was secured on Tuesday, and the taking of the evidence commenced the next day. The prosecution is being conducted by District Attorney Bruner and Major W. A. Anderson, and the defense by Hon. Grove L. Johnson. In murder cases generally much bitterness is engendered among counsel, but in this instance the trial was conducted with commendable ability and dignity, and with more expedition than cases of such seriousness are usually tried. The jury is composed of leading men of the county, and notwithstanding they have been kept in the charge of the Sheriff at the recesses of the court, and during the sessions sweltered in a crowded and suffocating room, listened to the evidence with patient attention. The evidence closed yesterday afternoon, and the arguments of counsel will be commenced to-morrow at 10 A. M. Major Anderson will open for the prosecution, Mr. Johnson will follow for the defense, and the District Attorney will close. The determination of the jury will probably be arrived at on Tuesday. Throughout the week the court-room has been packed with spectators, and the case has attracted more attention than any other for several years here.

Examining River Engineers.

A disagreement has developed between two of the members of the Board of Examining River Engineers, appointed under an act of the last legislature—Humbert and Hall. If these gentlemen would realize that they were appointed to perform a service for the State, and that the people care nothing for their private differences, one or the other would resign, and the Executive would supply his place with some one who will go practically at work. It possibly would be a wise idea for Governor Waterman not to appoint to fill vacancies on the Board—and to induce resignations—for the Federal Government will doubtless do all the work without cost to the State, through engineers of acknowledged competency, who will work together for the accomplishment of the objects for which they are appointed, and who will not parade their private differences before the people. In this matter Humbert may be right. If the statement made in the Bee of last evening, that Hall did not transfer his office to his successor, the State Mineralogist, under the recently passed law, is correct; and if, as the Bee intimates, he does not account for the public property in his hands, an investigation, rather than an appointment, should be given him.

Early Fruits and Vegetables.

Peaches were picked at Penryn and Vacaville yesterday—rather earlier than usual. Up to date this season 400 boxes have been shipped out of the State. The same thing is true of apricots. Quite a quantity of thistle seedlings and Pringles have been exported. Large quantities of vegetables are being shipped from Sacramento in all directions in carload lots. The bulk is made up of cabbages, new potatoes and onions. The first green corn made its appearance Thursday. An average of a carload of cherries a day is shipped from the State from Sacramento and other cherry producing districts. The first California cherries were sold in Boston and New York yesterday. Large quantities of oranges are still going forward, although the bulk of the crop is moved. A special orange train passed through Sacramento early yesterday morning. About one hundred carloads are still in the country, but at present rate of shipment will be exhausted by June 15th.

The Sunday-School Picnic.

The Union Sunday-school picnic at East Park Friday was attended by 1,800 children. The Band of Hope cadets gave a drill. The May-pole dance was executed by the Misses Mamie Clark, Laura Welker, Gussie Stevenson, Georgie Zimmerman, Etta Waterman, Frankie Nourse, Hattie Hembree, Kitty Wittenbrock, Frieda Kuelme, Lizzie Hoffelt, Lulu Stickney, Myrtle Hodson, Edna Dremman, Laura Cooper, Mabel Lyon, Lizzie Burns, Abbie Miller and Maud Miller. Miss Mamie Clark was crowned Queen of the May. The Sons of Veterans' Drum Corps helped to add largely to the pleasure of the day. The Telegraphs beat the Hobos, 11 to 10, with an inning to spare.

Fourth of July.

In the coming celebration of the Fourth of July in this city it is generally understood that Hon. R. D. Stephens will be the Grand Marshal, and Hon. Frank D. Ryan the Reader. From indications so far the demonstration here will be the grandest witnessed for years.

BASE BALL.

The Tail Enders of the League Surprise the Senators.

The usual Saturday crowd attended the game at Snowflake Park yesterday afternoon, to witness the Slough City team defeat the Sacramento club in a very interesting contest. The Stocktons played with a determination to win back some of their lost laurels. Their infield work was the feature of the game, and excited warm applause from the spectators. Harper's brilliant box-work materially assisted his club in winning the game. The change which has been made in the positions of the Stockton team greatly strengthens their playing. The Sacramentos played a good game, but were unable to "get on to" Harper's delivery. Burke pitched an excellent game, although the support given him was at times very weak.

The game was called at three o'clock, with the home club to the bat. They were retired in short order, as were the Stocktons in like manner. In the fourth inning, a very pretty double play was made by Whitehead and Selma. McSorley reached first on a safe hit to center, Krehmeyer hit to Whitehead, who ran to second, putting out McSorley, and then threw Krehmeyer out at first.

In the fifth inning, with three men on bases and one hand out, the Sacramentos failed to score. The Stocktons scored their first run in this, on Sweeney's hit for three cushions, and Whitehead's single to right field.

The Stocktons scored two runs in the sixth. Fairhurst hit for a single, reached second on Newbert's error—on which a double play should have been made—went to third on Howard's out at first, and scored on Sweeney's double to right field. Behan reached first on Newbert's error, stole second and also scored on Sweeney's double.

Stockton scored again in the eighth, Howard reached first on a base on balls, stole second, went to third on Adams' sacrifice along third-base line and scored on Sweeney's single over second.

These were all the runs made by Stockton during the game; while the Sacramentos were continually stringing out a line of goose eggs. In the ninth they saved themselves from a whitewash. O'Day hit for a single, Newbert followed in like manner advancing O'Day to second, Burke continued the good work and drove the ball along the first-base line for a hit, sending O'Day and Newbert to third and second respectively, and both scored on a passed ball. Burke was put out trying to steal third, Roxburg fanned, and Goodenough did likewise.

This ended the game, and the Stocktons sailed home a happy and contented crew. Roxburg caught a brilliant game, one passed ball being scored against him which looked more like a wild pitch. For the visitors, Sweeney's batting and second-base playing were the strongest points in the game; his three-bagger sailing far into the driveway. O'Day played an errorless game at second, as also did McSorley on third.

Following is the score:

NOTES.

The Mystics, of Stockton, and the Lavensons, of this city, play at Snowflake Park this afternoon. These teams are very evenly matched, and an interesting contest is expected. The last game between these clubs was played in Stockton, and the Daily Independent spoke very highly of their work. Baltz and McHale will be the battery for the Lavensons, and Chase and Hines for the Mystics.

To-day the Sacramentos meet the San Franciscos, who have secured the services of Romeo Barry, the whilom pitcher of the Altas, to do the twirling for them. Most likely Hapeman will pitch for the Sacramentos.

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The summer open-air concerts are assured. The finance committee are meeting with gratifying success.

H. Satto, a representative of His Excellency, the Mikado, is in Sacramento. His mission is to make a tour of the civilized world, with the view of studying the various Governments.

Chas. H. Watt, an old-time Sacramentan, who became wealthy in his mining enterprises, has purchased the Nathan Building, now called the Lull House, on Seventh and I streets, for $25,000.

The State Capitol is no longer a store house for the school text-books. State Printer Young yesterday transferred all of the books to the new fire-proof storehouse near the public printing office.

J. B. Harris, of Folsom, went out with his three-year-old son last Sunday for a shoot in the woods. A pistol in the hands of the senior Harris discharged prematurely, taking off one of the boy's toes.

The Folsom Telegraph says: Large fish continue to be caught in the neighborhood of the Natoma dam. Last Tuesday a fine salmon-trout that weighed 7 pounds was hauled out of the water.

B. U. Steiuman and Jim C. Piersou, who have made an extended tour in the East, inspecting systems of electric lighting, with a view of introducing the incandescent system here, returned yesterday.

William J. Hoehn, the oldest son of Jacob Hoehn, and a native of California, died last Sunday, at the early age of 24. The young man was well known, and enjoyed the esteem of a wide circle of acquaintances.

The Southern Pacific Company are laying a 4-inch pipe from near Gold Run to Colfax, to supply water for their engines and trains. The fall between the points is heavy, and the pipe line will be 11 miles in length.

Manager C. P. Hall is making an effort to secure two performances and two matinees by Booth and Barrett, notwithstanding their purpose to shorten the San Francisco engagement. We trust the energetic manager will succeed.

The case of the People vs. Thomas Manning—who is charged with unlawfully restraining the liberty of his divorced wife—has been continued in Justice Devine's Court, defendant's attorney, Grove L. Johnson, being engaged in the Billings case.

The Caledonian picnic will be held at East Park on Saturday, June 1st. Heretofore the picnics of this club have been among the most enjoyable, and their attendance has been large. From the perfect preparations that have been made for this picnic it will undoubtedly be a success.

Two Chinamen had a fight in a cellar just above Third street, on I, and one of them had his throat cut almost from ear to ear. Information was conveyed to the police station and officers went to the scene, but the would-be murderer had escaped. It is said that the Mongolian who did the cutting has been engaged in a Davisville orchard. The wound appeared to have been inflicted by a razor or knife, but friends of the wounded man declare that a hatchet was used.

The Woodland Herald says: Last Sunday night several hoodlums from Sacramento, accompanied by a few specimens of feminine immaturity, took the shady side of the Court-house shabby for a covering and spent the entire night, and until 6 o'clock Monday morning, in one grand carousal. Our officials say the next lot of girls who come over and act as these girls did, will be put in straight jackets and sent home to their mothers, and the worthless young bloods will be sent to the chain-gang.

The Circus.

On Friday, May 31, the great combination of Sells Bros. & Barrett will entertain the citizens of Sacramento with one of their grand performances, consisting of two shows, each complete in itself. There will be two museums, two menageries, two parades—in fact all will be doubled. But one price of admission will be charged. A performance will be given afternoon and evening—afternoon at 1 o'clock, evening at 7 o'clock.

Al Farrow.

The case of M. T. Walters vs. C. Mulkey for the possession of the horse Al Farrow, has occupied the attention of Judge Miner, sitting for Judge Van Fleet, since Wednesday. General A. L. Hart represented the plaintiff, and Hon. Jud. C. Brusie the defendant. Yesterday the court gave judgment for the plaintiff for the possession of the horse, for $99.99 damages, and for costs. It is stated that another suit will be brought to replevin the animal.

That Earthquake.

THEMIS feels like congratulating itself on being the first paper in the State to publish an account of the general earthquake that occurred last Sunday morning. It demonstrates to our readers that our forms are held open for the very latest news.

Miss Mamie Trumpler, accompanied by her sister Kittie and Master Walter Trumpler, left on the overland train Thursday evening for an extended trip to the East. A large number of their friends were at the depot to wish them a pleasant journey.

Confidence Lodge, No. 78, K. of P., gave a social and literary entertainment Tuesday evening. The programme was: Address, by George Boyne; song, Mrs. S. Katzenstein; recitation, Miss Hirsh; duet, Mrs. Starchman and Mr. Reeves; remarks by the Chairman, I. Christie. After the literary and musical exercises, the party adjourned to banquet hall, where a fine lunch was served and appropriate toasts responded to.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature during the past week was 92 on Saturday, and 50 on Tuesday; while the highest and lowest for the same week last year, was 71 and 46.

The earthquake on Sunday morning, the 19th, was quite a severe one, stopping a number of clocks whose pendulums vibrated in opposite directions. The oscillation of the earthquake on Sunday last was from the N.N.E. to S.S.W.

The following are the dates of earthquakes for the past twelve years:

July 12, 1877, 11 P. M.—Oscillation, east to west.

May 8, 1878, 8:25 P. M.—Oscillation, north to south.

None in 1879 or 1880.

April 10, 1881, 2 A. M.—Oscillation, west to east.

None in 1882, 1883, or 1884.

January 30, 1885, 9:38 P. M.—Oscillation, east to west.

April 3, 1885, 7:15 P. M.—Oscillation, east to west.

April 11, 1885, 8:05 P. M.—Oscillation, west to east.

June 3, 1887, 2:50 A. M.—Oscillation, west to east. This one rang the hotel bells.

April 28, 1888, 8:45 P. M.—Oscillation, west to east.

May 19, 1889, 3:10 A. M.—Oscillation, north and south; clocks stopped.

The above record shows that often years intervene between shocks in this city, and but upon one occasion in the twelve years past have there been two within a few days of each other; these were April 3 and 11, 1885. April appears to be the month of greatest shocks, and generally after a seasonal rainfall of over thirteen inches.

Another Unfortunate.

Geo. E. Stanley, whose mother lives in this city, committed suicide at Stockton by shooting himself in the head. He had been sick and unable to work, and became despondent. His body was found in a freight car at the depot Friday; he had been seen the day before. He was a quiet and well behaved young man. Had he waited but a day and received the letter from his mother, written on Friday—a letter of encouragement which can only be penned by a mother when her boy is despondent, weary—he would have lived.

The Rise of the Typewriter.

The rise of the typewriter is one of the most noticeable features of the age. Ten years ago it bore much the same relation to the pen which a ready-made suit bore to one made to order. Its reputation was that of business rather than that of art, and it fought its way into fastidious use with great and protracted difficulty, on the strength of its actual merits as opposed to traditional prejudice. It has a long road to go still before its click will finally be heard in every household, but it has undoubtedly received a great impulse forward through the assistance of President Harrison. After conquering the world of society the typewriter will have the world of romance, the world of the heart, left to conquer. When at last it gets itself used for love letters its career will be complete. We hail its prospects with interest and admiration.—N. Y. Sun.

A Scrap of History.

No tragedy of the middle ages is so sad as that of Abelard and Heloise. Abelard was the greatest orator, scholar, philosopher and writer of his age. Born in the year 1079, he established a school at Melun, in 1101, which was resorted to by a large number of students. He afterward established himself in Paris with brilliant success, and in 1113 began the study of theology under Auselin. Heloise was an orphan 18 years old, residing with her uncle and guardian, who was a canon of Notre Dame. Heloise pursued her studies with such success that her learning became the wonder of the age. To complete her education she was placed under the instructions of Abelard. The meeting was fatal to both, as it led to a mutual passion, which the circumstances rendered vain. The attachment of the lovers was made famous by the songs which Abelard himself penned to the utter neglect of his lectures and his pupils. At length Abelard contrived to convey Heloise to the nunnery of Argenteuil. To the uncle's demand that a marriage should at once take place Abelard consented, though he well knew his prospects would be ruined should the fact become public. For this reason Heloise opposed the marriage, and refused to confess the truth after it had been consummated. But the secret was revealed, and Abelard was forced to become a monk in the abbey of St. Denis. Out of jealousy and disgust he urged Heloise to take the veil; which she did, in spite of the opposition of her friends. Though prioress of the Paraclete, Heloise remained faithful to her attachment for her husband; but Abelard, in his replies to her letters, sought to restrain this affection, judging it better to discourage than foster it. Heloise died at the Paraclete on May 17, 1163, having survived Abelard twenty-one years.

A Gypsy Rival of Sam Jones.

A gypsy evangelist has appeared in the west. Says the Cincinnati Enquirer: "Gypsy Smith broke down all prejudice on Sunday at Trinity Church. He speaks as if composing cable dispatches at a cost of a dollar a word. He has little use for adjectives. No one can fail to understand him. He has far superior tact to Sam Jones in manipulating a congregation. He uses no slang and is never vulgar. Sometimes like an auroral light he shoots up a scintillating flame of eloquence, and is often luminous." And the question is, can he turn the enthusiasm of his hearers into cold cash by those flames of eloquence?

It is reported from Laurens county, Ga., that a well has been found there from which pure spirits of turpentine are drawn. The well is sixty feet deep and it is claimed that fifteen barrels of turpentine were drawn from it at one time. The question is whether there is a natural reservoir, or whether the well has been salted with a manufactured product.

Somebody's Darling.

Somebody crawls into mamma's bed,
Just at the break of day,
Snuggles up and whispers loud,
"Somebody's come to stay."

Somebody rushes through the house,
Never once shuts a door,
Scatters her playthings all around,
Over the nursery floor.

Climbs on the fence and tears her clothes—
Never a bit cares she—Swings on the gate and makes mud pies—
Who can somebody be?

Somebody looks with roguish eyes
Up through her tangled hair—
"Somebody's me," she says "but then Somebody doesn't care."

—York (Pa.) Daily.

The Kiss of History.

That a kiss has been of importance in history we all know, and that women's kisses have made and unmade kingdoms, says a writer in the Philadelphia Times. The most famous of kisses always seems to me that one, or that many, given by the Duchess of Gordon when she recruited an entire regiment, the Gordon Highlanders, better known as the Ninety-second, by having each man take the "Queen's shilling" from between her teeth, so that he had, if he wanted, a good opportunity to kiss her. It is almost unnecessary to say that the gallant laddies who fought so well at Waterloo did not resist the charm of a lovely woman's mouth. However, remember the kiss in vogue and just remember this, too:

You will find, my dear boy, that the dearly-prized
kiss,
Which with rapture you snatched from the half-willing miss,
Is sweeter by far than the legalized kisses
You give the same girl when you've made her a Mrs.

This is slangy, but it is the sad, sad truth. Do you know how to kiss? If you are a man you give a semi-scornful and semi-condescending smile at the question and make no answer. If you are a woman you laugh a merry laugh, and wonder what kind of kiss you are expected to be acquainted with. Why, the latest, of course. And it is? For your sweetheart to stoop over you and kiss you just back of your shell-like ear. If you are wise that is where you put a little perfume, and the chances are that he will kiss you not once but twice there, and tell you that kissing you is like putting one's lips to the heart of a great red rose. This is very natural in him, but it shows that he does not realize the difference between a kiss made perfect by art and that which is flower-like by nature. What do I mean? That the next thing to kissing a flower is kissing a baby. You take that in your arms, you look in its clear eyes, eyes that have never been saddened by looking on anything but the pleasure of life, you put your lips to its rosebud of a mouth and then you kiss it, and then you know that you have inhaled the perfume of a flower—the flower of the flock.

Advices from St. Petersburg say it has been discovered that the conspiracy among the military officers against the Czar, recently unearthed, has many widespread ramifications. Officers of regiments stationed in Moscow and Warsaw are implicated in the plot. Three of them committed suicide. A bomb was found in the quarters of one of the officers in Warsaw. One hundred of the conspirators were arrested.

One of the most embracing things that we know of is when a nice, good girl goes for a day's fishing with her nice, good young man, and then that nice, good young girl goes and sits down on a nice, new fish-hook, and there isn't a surgeon within a radius of ten miles.

A knowing young lady is sweet little Kate,
So prompt with a jest and a laugh;
Her heartbroken lovers regretfully state
That she is too no-ing by half.

The Oroville Register of May 23d says: Since hydraulic mining has ceased the salmon are coming up the stream again. Years ago Feather river contained immense numbers of salmon. Robert Moore says the last he remembers were after the big flood of 1861. Parke says that during the time when the river first began to be mined salmon were plentiful, and that numbers of them would go up into the flumes where the water had a fall of ten feet. Wm. Greenleaf says from 1852 till the river was greatly discolored by mining the Feather was alive with salmon.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, JUNE 2, 1889.

No. 15.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

It is a sad commentary upon our local government when the authorities announce that there are no funds to meet the ordinary expenses of local self-government. We understand that, notwithstanding the increased water rates, there is still a deficiency of nearly $10,000 in that department. The general and police funds are depleted to such an extent that the obligations against them are far in excess of the estimates for the current fiscal year. It has never been the policy of the municipality to incur obligations beyond the estimates, nor to pay preceding demands from the revenues of succeeding years. There has been some gross mismanagement or lack of knowledge of municipal affairs and science of government by those in authority. Long before the convening of the legislature, we remember the Bee—THEMIS was not then in existence—advocated the revision of our form of local self-government, and pointed out the necessities for changes; and at the same time prophesied the results which have overtaken the city. Then was the time to prepare for warding off the dilemma which has now occurred. The waterworks affairs, police matters, bonded and floating debt troubles, should have been adjusted in such a manner as to have placed the city in a healthy and independent condition. Bad advisers had the ears of those in authority, and no heed was taken of the warnings given. All the departments of our local government need revising and a system framed in accordance with the demands of the present growth and increase of our population. As matters now stand, about the only ones dealing with the municipality who are happy are the bond creditors, by reason of the mighty grip they have acquired upon the city treasury, through the past mismanagement of the constituted authorities. The matter of a new organic law should not be neglected for any considerable time, and though the next session of the legislature is far off, still it is best to begin the reform at once, in order that the people may have time to discuss any formulated charter for their government. Why not the Board of Trustees call for an election of fifteen freeholders at the next charter election, or earlier? It is now apparent that either the present system of municipal government is too weak for a proper administration of the affairs, or else the governing power is not equal to the emergencies. Perhaps it is both.

A novel organization exists in some of the Eastern cities, having a membership of young girls only. The name given is the Yellow Garter Society, being secret unions, sometimes bearing different names, but having for their purpose the strange obligation that each member must get married within one year from the date of becoming such member. Absolute secrecy is enjoined upon the members not to divulge any of the workings of the order. Where these orders exist there are many surprises and sudden and unaccountable marriages. Often ridiculous matches, which are evidently the result of haste to keep the vows at the approach of the last days of the allotted year, when almost any available masculine is taken without question. The yellow garter has some imaginary charm, and when one girl gets married she bestows the talisman on some other girl. We have not heard of any such order as the Yellow Garter here, but it may break out among us some day with surprising suddenness.

Is Sacramento county lawless? Is crime to be unpunished? The result of the case of Billings, charged with the murder of young Lighthall, which was tried before Judge Armstrong last week, is a subject which has attracted much public attention. The unanimous opinion of the people is that the verdict of the jury is wrong. The jury, however, was composed of the best citizens of this community; it was carefully selected; among its members were men of acknowledged integrity, some of whom had occupied positions of distinction in the State. A verdict of not guilty was rendered—a surprise to the community who were familiar with the facts of the tragedy. The jury may have been correct; universal public opinion is, however, otherwise.

That the slaying of young Lighthall was unnecessary will be acknowledged by any reasoning man; he should be living to-day, and should have been permitted to have pursued his life course—provide for his aged father. The fidelity of this boy is to be admired. The fact that the law, as administered in Sacramento county by our juries, is not that justice is done, is to be regretted. In this case the plea of self-defense was made, and we presume that the jury rendered its verdict of acquittal on that ground. Self-defense, under the evidence in this case, could hardly, it would seem, appeal to a reasoning mind; Billings was not in danger, nor was his son, when the fatal shot was fired; when the heart wound was inflicted Lighthall could not have received it in the left side had he been in the position that Billings illustrated.

We write from the standpoint of an officer of the courts of this county; from the standpoint of one who has had an opportunity of observing the internal history of important trials; who has had perhaps the best opportunity to be familiar with the miscarriages of justice in our local courts. When we state that of the acquittals in murder cases here since 1874 there should have been convictions in the majority of the cases, we but speak the truth. It would seem from the records which Sacramento juries have made that human life is a very cheap commodity. Our jurors do not enforce the laws.

It is but merited that commendation should be accorded—and justly—to Hon. Grove L. Johnson, who defended Billings. He could have done no more; he was successful in a case where public opinion was strong against his client. The verdict has been rendered; Billings should be well satisfied with his defense.

It is an interesting study to view the proceedings of our courts from behind the scenes, as it were; to see things not as a juror sees them, but as one does who mingles with the attorneys of both sides of the case, and who knows of matters which are not presented to the jury. Frequently it has happened that men pronounced not guilty by the solemn judgment of an intelligent jury have openly confessed their crimes. An instance of that kind occurred in the case of Williams, tried some years ago for cattle stealing. The first jury disagreed; he was afterward convicted and made a full confession. Casey, who robbed the rooms in the Golden Eagle Hotel, after his acquittal by a jury in Sacramento county, made no secret of his guilt, and willingly gave up the spoils to the writer, an officer of the courts, for distribution among those who had been robbed. When speaking with Casey as to the amount of money he had taken from each room in the Golden Eagle Hotel—that we could determine the pro rata of division to those who had been robbed—we thought what dupes our jurors are. There was a man who acknowledged his guilt; who had in his room a complete kit of burglars' tools; he was acquitted by a Sacramento jury. He afterward surrendered the money which he had stolen and left this county with the tools of his nefarious trade, after having receipted for them to an officer of our judicial department.

We have no hesitation in saying that the verdict in the Billings case is but another of the many judicial farces in this county. The jury in the case, as we have said, was composed of the best men of this community; their determination meets with general dissent by the people. The voice of Francis Lighthall could not be heard at the trial; he could not explain how he received the impossible bullet in the left side, which struck his heart, if he were in the position Billings described he was in. A stranger among us; a boy honestly discharging a life obligation—supporting his aged father—stricken down as he was, unnecessarily, we revere his memory. He was a brave, good boy.

It may, perhaps, be thought that we speak of the matter of the administration of justice by such juries as have been selected in Sacramento county with severity. This article, however, is written by a man who has enjoyed a position of official confidence with the judges of this county since 1874. The position which he holds is subject to their appointment; his removal is at their pleasure; he is in a position to speak of matters that occur in our courts as they actually are. This county has been fortunate, in that its judges have been men of integrity; it has been unfortunate that in very many instances those who have been selected as jurors have dropped the scales of justice and they have fallen shattered at their feet.

Why, within a month past a man charged with an important crime, said, in our county jail, that had he money he could kill as many men in this county as he wished, and escape punishment—rather a reflection, not upon our Judges, but upon the chicken-hearted men who unfortunately have sat upon our juries. It will not be understood that what we now write has reference alone to the case of Billings, bad as that verdict was. It will not be seriously contended that had Billings left his little pistol at home when he departed at 8 o'clock in the morning, neither himself nor his son would have been slain, and the life of Francis Lighthall would not have been destroyed in young manhood.

California has a large number of medicinal springs of as good natural mineral waters as are known to the world, and yet our markets and saloons are stocked with alleged imported natural mineral waters which are at best but poor imitations of the genuine article. There are some of the great European mineral waters that are possessed of wonderful medicinal qualities, but the spurious compounds sold here are in no sense the same. Our mineral waters are far superior to anything that is imported, and it should not require any demonstration to establish this fact.

The Sultan of Turkey would display more common sense and business tact if he used his money in paying his debts instead of buying $156,000 necklaces. Our Board of Trustees believe in paying our debts before making donations for public celebrations. They differ with the Sultan of Turkey, in this.

The Attorney-General has instituted quo warranto proceedings to revoke the charter of an association in Sonoma county, on the ground that it is a lottery scheme. It is right to suppress such affairs, but does it not seem passing strange that we invoke the strong arm of the law against all local lottery schemes and permit the ruinous effects of foreign lotteries, both as to morals and the drain upon our financial condition? We have heretofore called attention to the terrible consequences which are likely to follow the immense drain upon our resources, and can only result in great financial impoverishment. If these gambling institutions are to be tolerated, certainly it would be greatly to the interest of the commercial world, and to the people, to keep this vast amount of money at home and circulating among our own people. One often hears the remark that money is scarce, that there is no money in circulation. How will it be in a few years if this constant drain of hundreds of thousands of dollars annually is kept up? If the constituted authorities would take this matter in hand in real earnest, there would be no trouble in suppressing this demoralizing evil. To show to what extent the gambling craze goes, a syndicate in New Orleans has offered to pay the $12,000,000 debt of Louisiana if a gambling license is granted for the period of fifty years. Let the officers of the law do their duty, and the evils accompanying lottery schemes will soon vanish.

MISTAKEN NOTIONS.

[In a thriving little city not a hundred miles from the THEMIS office, they have a club, composed of a few congenial fellows who have hebdomadal conventions for the purpose of dissecting and discussing an essay which one of their number has previously read. The essayist, as may be seen farther on, is not subject to any one's dictation in the choice of a subject; but, as a rule, they object to making religion or politics the object of their lucubrations. It may have happened, in this instance, that the MS. fell out of the essayist's hat as he returned home from the parson's house—too full of coffee, perhaps, or crushed by the criticisms of his peers. Be that as it may, we found it on our desk and print it. The breezy manner in which the "congenial fellow" discusses marriage and subjectivity, and mixes up metaphysics and mathematics, fingers and flowers, bones and botany, may possibly prove a pleasant relief to those who have followed the interesting, but more solid arguments of the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy.]

Mistaken notions are prevalent everywhere, and, perhaps, always will be, as they ever have been; they ramify into and are concerned with every subject of human knowledge, human hopes, human speculation and human activity. It follows, therefore, that the mere mention of these notions, or their characterization by classes, would be a task of some length. Some mistaken notions are astronomical, others geographical, or geological, or zoölogical (as when a whale is thought to be a fish), or entomological, or paleontological, or theological, or teleological, or anthropological, or histological; all are more or less illogical. Some are unimportant and easily disproved; others affect the whole range of human thought and interfere with human happiness to an almost incredible extent, and are difficult to dispose of, for they are pleasant delusions.

The notion that the moon is made of green cheese, for example, can be disposed of in short order, as thus: Astronomers tell us there is no water in the moon. Now cheese, as we all know, is made of milk—and milk without water—well, the experience of the citizens of Criticville is opposed to such a colligation of facts; ergo, the moon is not, etc.

But the notion which most people entertain, namely, that a man marries the woman he thinks he is marrying; or that the young man (or old one, for that matter,) courts the girl he thinks he is courting, is much more difficult to demonstrate as a mistake. Nevertheless it can be done. The fact is, that men—all, at least, who have passed beyond the savage state—and the more cultivated they become the more strongly may the assertion be made of them—when courting especially, have in mind an ideal woman, which ideal they fit on to the actual woman of their devoirs or vows; just as a modiste fits her dresses on to a wire dummy; or as the painter arranges his draperies on a lay-figure; and just as children and imaginative people of a timid turn of mind see a burglar in the half-lighted room, when in fact it is only a bundle of clothes on a chair. So the man with love-excited imagination sees his ideal in Clara or Jane, when, in fact, and in the light of further acquaintance, she may be only a bundle of clothes or a lay-figure. Change this for that, and the same may be said of women and the men they marry. Clarinda thinks she is marrying Raphael, with a halo around his shapely head, but she must be prepared to find, when the light of experience is turned on, that the lay-figure on which she arranged her draperies, and around which she piled her virtues and painted a halo, chews tobacco and wears a wig! All this might be well enough if the men or the women were lay-figures or wire dummies; for then, perhaps, the draperies would continue to fit, and the real would not protrude through the ideal. But they are not "lay" and will not be laid, and they weary of posing, and disarrange the draperies and kick off the covers, and then—alas!

Another shining example of a mistaken notion is perpetual motion. How many scores of ingenious mechanics and inventors have in the past, spent life, and means, and energy in the pursuit of this phantom? How many to-day are following the same delusive notion—the notion that by means of special devices and combinations of mechanical "powers" (if they could only succeed in discovering such) a machine could be constructed which would run forever; or the correlated notion that by means of mechanical devices and combinations power or energy may be increased. The knowledge of a simple principle, a fundamental fact of nature, would save them from their fruitless labors and disappointment. This fact is, that available energy comes from matter in motion only, and that mechanical devices can only utilize in special ways the available force, power, energy, or, more precisely, only a portion thereof. Falling bodies, as water or solid weights, moving air—wind—rising water (falling toward the moon, or sun, or both), as in the tides; expanding gases—as steam, heated air, nitrogen in explosives; these are the immediate sources of energy or power in the organic world. Muscular contraction, the result, let it be understood, of changes in the chemical relations of matter (matter in motion) in the animal economy, is the immediate source of energy derived from the animal kingdom. If we drive our "dynamot" for lighting the streets by electricity by steam, what do we do? Bring the oxygen of the air into contact and chemical union with the carbon, etc., of the coal (matter in motion) by which the expanding gas—steam—is produced, and their motion of masses—the machine—is by especial mechanical or electrical devices converted into the molecular motion we know as light. But we do the same thing precisely when we drive our "dynamot" by horse power. The carbon and hydrogen of the food is oxidized in the animal's system and muscular contraction results, which applied to the machine is converted, etc. Now, the inventor who seeks in mechanical contrivances for perpetual motion, or for increase of power, is ignorant of this fundamental principle, and mistakes the essential and sole function of machinery, viz: to turn into this or that channel available power; or to store it up, or transmit it, for use on special occasion or place.

The older wise heads, those who look to the ancients for their opinions and wisdom; and discourse learnedly of the significance of the triangle as an emblem of the Deity or of the circle as portraying the mysteries of eternity, have a notion—mistaken, certainly, as we shall see—that certain numbers, as three, or ten, or four, or seven are fundamental in nature; that is to say: this or that number more frequently governs in natural combinations than other numbers. This, for example, is the golden number; that, a perfect one; there are four elements, say they (?)—earth, air, fire and water; three states of matter—solid, liquid and gaseous; seven planets; there used to be seven metals, and therefore in the scheme of nature seven days in a week, and so on. There is no need certainly for extended citations of facts; or for elaborate argument to dissipate the delusions involved in some of these examples, and the subject might be dismissed in few words but for the fact that we find evidence of the lurking faith in such doctrines, even among people of modern ideas and culture, teachers, engineers, statesmen. Many of these believe, for instance, that there is some natural or intrinsic superiority in, say the decimal system of numeration or metrics, over a system having twelve, or four, or x as its root. Such people contend too that the metre of the French system, viz: the ten-millionth part of a quadrant of a terrestrial meridian is a "natural unit," and as such is intrinsically superior to, say the English yard, or the old French foot; and, reasoning from these assumptions, they insist that above all other units, this metre as a standard, and above all other schemes, this decimal radix as a system is worthy of, and destined to universal adoption. It does not follow; as will be shown further on.

It is not proposed here to pass on the question of the desirability, or the contrary, of the adoption by this nation, or by the other nations of the civilized world, of the French system of metrics. As a matter of international convenience in commerce; or of simplicity and uniformity of language concerning magnitudes, it may be highly desirable that it should be adopted; or, there may be considerations touching its consistency or completeness as a whole, which render it desirable to demur; only this is intended here, namely, to protest against and demonstrate the fallacy of the fetishistic assumption that intrinsically a portion of the length of a meridian is superior as a unit or standard to, for instance, the average length of a man's arm, or the mean length of a grain of barley.

If we examine the facts in nature bearing on the assumption that there are some numbers more fundamental than others, and in consequence entitled to greater prominence, what do we find?

Sex, perhaps the most universal fact among organized beings, presents us with the number two; and the backbone family among animals, being two-sided, exhibits two eyes, two ears, two nostrils; and here the charm is broken, for in the same family there are mainly four limbs (extremities) or none, and only one tail. When we examine the distal extremities of these four limbs we find (in man most completely, though not exclusively) five to be the governing number: five fingers, five toes; and again the series breaks off and four is seen to govern these same fingers and toes in their longitudinal "joints." Each finger is made up of three phalanges and a hand-bone; so of the toes, three joints and a foot-bone. The wrist in man contains eight bones and the ankle seven, and when we examine the limbs themselves, arms and legs appear to be constructed in utter disregard of any numerical system; one bone for the arm, one for the thigh, two each to the fore-arm and fore-leg. Descending to the body or trunk, we find in serpents and fishes an indefinite and varying number of ribs; in man usually twenty-four; in the horse thirty-four; in the cat twenty-six. In the back-bone we perceive the same impartial disregard of golden or "perfect" numbers, or their multiples, twenty four in the main column of man, with from six to ten additional in the sacred-bone or rudimentary tail; for, however humiliating it may be to our pride, and however indicative of a plebeian genealogy, and therefore to be deprecated; and hide the fact as we may, under the cacophonous designation, 'coccygeal appendix,' man, in common with his cousins, the lamb and the lion, has a tail. In cats the back-bone is made up of about twenty-seven vertebrae, with twenty-two or more in sacrum and tail; thirty-one in horses, and seventeen or eighteen in sacrum and tail. In lizards and serpents there are in many species more than the numbers hitherto recounted.

Thus far we have met with no predominant number, and if we extend our researches to insects and crustaceans, we shall find the same incidental relation only, of numbers to obtain in their structure; insects proper have six legs, and a longitudinal division of the body into head, thorax and abdomen; spiders and mites, however, have eight legs. The number of joints in the legs of insects varies from three to five, or more, and the articulations of their antennae vary in number from two or three to eleven.

The same absence of any dominating number is to be inferred from an examination of the vegetable kingdom; in the so-called compound leaves—that is, leaves made up of smaller leaves, or leaflets—the numbers range all the way from two, as in some of the peas, through threes in clovers; five to nine and eleven in the palmate leaves of ampelopsis quinquefolia, passion flower and lupines; thirty-one or more in the ailanthus, and a large and indefinite number in some of the doubly and trebly pinnate leaves of the acacias. Petals (and sepals), in the well-known flowers, range in number from one in many kinds; two in begonias; three in tradescantias, and six in lilies; fours and fives in a host of genera; while in some of the mesem bryanthemums there will be forty or more. So of the stamens or pollen-bearing organs; these range from one, in Hippuris, through two in the mints; three in some liliaceous plants; four and five in scrofularias and others; six in lillies; eight in the evening primroses; ten in geraniums; twelve in sempervivums, to an indefinite and large number in roses, portulaccas, cactuses, poppies, and mesem bryanthemums. In like manner the pistils or seed-bearing organs, from an indefinite and large number in the buttercup family—anemones and clematis, etc.—down to a solitary pistil in peas and wallflowers.

But this is not all; in the inorganic world, where geometry would appear to rule supreme, the number of sides and facets in the various crystalline minerals is so various that it is impossible to say this or that number, or this or that figure is the most common. Cubes (of six sides) are seen in salt and iron pyrites, but twelve and twenty-four sided crystals are quite as common in garnets; then we have eight sided crystals in gold, in the diamond, and occasionally in iron pyrites; six sided prisms and plates in quartz and mica, and three sided prisms of tourmaline.

If we leave our own planet, and consider the magnitudes and other relations of the various planets to the sun and to ourselves, we come no nearer to the discovery of a ruling number. One hundred to one expresses nearly the ratio of the sun's diameter to that of our earth; but the ratio of four to one obtains between the diameters of the earth and moon. How many satellites in the shape of revolving planets and asteroids attend the sun it may not be easy to say; but at least twelve or fifteen may be assumed: now Saturn has eight, and Jupiter and Uranus have each four; the earth and Neptune have only one each, and Mars has two. The periods of revolution of the various planets around their common center, when studied in this connection, are equally negative in results.

Musical ratios, that is to say the ratios which the varying frequency of the vibrations of consonant or harmonious sounds bear to each other, it might be expected, would come nearer, perhaps, than anything in nature to realizing the dream of a reign of numbers; but while it is true that numbers express very clearly the ratios of consonant intervals; even here we are doomed to disappointment if we look for any special number as dominating, unless indeed it be one. A fundamental musical sound, and its major-third vibrate in the ratio of four to five; that is to say, while the sonorous body producing the fundamental sound executes four vibrations, the body producing a major-third (above) executes five vibrations. The same fundamental sound and its perfect fifth, vibrate in the ratio of two to three; the fundamental and its major sixth vibrate in the ratio of three to five; while a fundamental sound and its octave (above) vibrate in the ratio of one to two. Here we see no golden number, no perfect one; and in fact a study of these ratios leads us to the conclusion that the lowest number, one, governs in the main; for the simpler the ratio, as one to two in the octave, the more perfect is the concordance of sounds; and next is the ratio of two to three in the fifth.

What shall we say, then? This, namely, that number is purely incidental to our cognitions and conceptions of nature, and totally relative; a device of the human mind to arrange external things into groups; an apparatus of recognition; subjective, not objective. Natural existences arrange themselves in relation to each other, and in their various parts, not with reference to numbers or angular magnitudes as we know them, but in accordance with their individual motions and the exigencies of their environments, just as migratory birds in flying arrange themselves, and march, so to speak, in lines oblique to the direction of their onward flight; not for the purpose of presenting to our vision, or to their own, the well-known V-shaped figure, but in order severally to avoid a certain point (or position) in the air-wave made by their predecessors, which would detract from the efficiency of their own wing-stroke; just as bees and wasps construct hexagonal cells (rather than octagonal or cylindrical), not because of the beauty of the figure, but because this figure naturally comes to pass in building parallel tubes, with the least expenditure of material (wax) in proportion to the storage capacity secured. As a corollary of these facts, it may safely be assumed that the fundamental reason why silica (quartz) in crystallizing—and mica—take on the hexagonal form, and iron pyrites or sodium chloride the cubical form, is this, namely: The individual vibratory movements of the molecules of silica and mica, by their range and figures, necessitate a certain obliquity of angular position; while those of the molecules of iron sulphide and sodium chloride, necessitate the rectangular position; and so throughout.

This brings us by a natural transition to the consideration of another mistaken notion, namely, that things—natural existences—are created for a purpose beyond themselves; that is to say: have a "reason-of-being" behind them; they are made for the use (or perchance the abuse) of some other thing or existence; man, of course, being that other thing—to all below him, at least.

In childhood, by the very nature of the human mind in a certain stage of development, we consider everything external to ourselves solely in a personal relation, and therefore good or evil according to the manner in which it affects our consciousness: food was made for us; our parents are for us; the sun, and moon, and stars, shine for us; the tree is to furnish us with shade, and the flower blooms to delight our eyes and nostrils with its color and fragrance; the waters dancing and sparkling in the sunlight are there to sail our tiny ships upon; and the wind blows to waft them on their mimic voyages. So man, also in a certain stage of development, has necessarily looked upon himself as the center of the universe, and upon external things as existing or as having been made for him. This we see by the statements made and the expressions used in ancient writings: "Let there be light (says the Creator) in the vault of the heavens, for the purpose of dividing between the day and the night, etc. And God created two great lights; a greater light to rule the day, and a lesser light, as also the stars, to rule the night." In fact, the geocentric theory of the celestial mechanism was the only conception possible in the early stages of human intelligence; but as the knowledge of external, and especially of celestial phenomena, became greater and more precise, conceptions of the space-relations and movements of the heavenly bodies were formed totally inconsistent with the accepted notions, and the heliocentric theory of the planetary system spontaneously and inevitably became the doctrine of the intellectual class.

The revision of opinion or hypothesis could not, however, be expected to cease with the mere acceptance of the sun as the center of revolution of a group of planets of which our earth forms part; for the dethronement of the earth as sovereign and center of the universe, and its relegation to the position of one of a group of satellites, carries with it logical consequences which, even now, are but faintly comprehended by any but the most advanced minds. Manifestly the universe does not exist for man; it may be, therefore, that other things—the earth, for instance, or sheep, or cattle and horses—do not exist for his especial and exclusive benefit. And if, continuing the inquiry, we seek to know why or for whose benefit they exist, or are created, it gradually dawns upon the mind that, perhaps in itself the purpose and object of every diverse thing is to be found; and that uses are the outcome of relation and adaptation and domination only. And the more thoroughly we examine this question of purposive existence or creation, the more thoroughly shall we become convinced that this or that, which formerly we supposed existed for us, or for our punishment, exists for itself; and that any inter-relations of use, or pleasure, or pain, which arise between things and ourselves, instead of being causative, are those of incident, adaptation or incongruity only.

With this understanding of nature we cease to be puzzled with the general question of the existence of evil, or with the special question, why was this or that noxious thing made? We not only cease to wonder why the mosquito, for instance, which inflicts such intense discomfort on humanity, should ever have been created, but we cease also to wonder why the tiny tormentor should be arrayed in such gorgeous and delicate embroidery of wing and limb as our microscopes reveal; we cease to ask of what use are so many noxious plants and animals, microbes and moulds, and why they should increase so rapidly in numbers; we cease to wonder why, in the solitudes of the mountains and on the steep walls of inaccessible ravines, thousands of beautiful and fragrant flowers spring up and bloom year after year, and—where there is no human eye to enjoy their beauties, and no human nostril to inhale their perfume; we cease to wonder why in the slime of the wayside pool, as in the ooze of the ocean floor, in the shadow of rocks on the strand, as in the depths of sea and earth, in cavern, vein and geode, nature has wrought such marvels of skill and beauty, in polype and coral, in rotifer and diatom, in lichen and algae, or in crystal stalactite and gem—for the answer is at hand: the ever-living material of nature unceasingly strives to arrange itself in orderly and ever-varying but reciprocal combination of atom, and molecule, and cell; in which activity, and in which results, the life of the universe consists.

"Waste their sweetness on the desert air,"

Open a book at random and select a word within the first ten lines, and within ten words from the end of the line. Mark the word. Now double the number of the page and multiply the sum by five. Then add twenty. Then add the number of the line you have selected. Then add five. Multiply the sum by ten. Add the number of the word in the line. From this sum subtract 250, and the remainder will indicate in the unit column the number of the word; in the ten column the number of the line, and the remaining figures the number of the page.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Sara Bernhardt says she has paid the last of her $240,000 debts.

Windfall is the title of a comedy which Blanche Marsden has just completed.

Rhea will open with her new play, The Empress of France, in September, at the Globe Theater, Boston.

Louis James has decided to add Richard III to his repertory for next season, and will carry special scenery on the road for its production. It will be his first appearance in the play.

William J. Florence has written a farce comedy, to which he has given the title of Working the Growler. If ever presented in this city there can be many realistic illustrations.

The Man in Black, a historical melodrama by Horace Townsend, has been purchased by Alexander Salvini, who talks of producing it next season. The scenes are laid in Venice.

Poker is the name of a new drama. When it is presented in California, or on the Pacific Coast, there will be no difficulty in filling the caste. Nearly every prominent citizen can play poker.

Arthur W. Pinero, who is the author of the three most successful plays in London at present—Sweet Lavender, The Weaker Sex and The Profligate—has completed a new piece, in which Mrs. John Wood will reappear next season at her own theater.

The "red" Stradivarius violin given to Joachim, as a jubilee gift, belonged to the large (1715) period of the famous Cremonese maker. It was purchased from M. Labitte for 1,200 guineas, and was accompanied by a Tourte bow, which had once belonged to the famous Moravian musician, Kieselwetter. This bow Mr. Arthur Chappell obtained as a special favor for fifty guineas.

According to the New York Sun, Herr von Bulow has won one triumph in America that has as yet been unchronicled. One afternoon while the crowded audience was listening silently to his wonderful shadings, all over the house, up in the galleries, down in the orchestra, on either side of the balcony, mice came running out to hear him play, as their ancestors came out to hear the great master, Mozart, long ago.

The following is a description of Greek actors, how they dressed and how they were paid in old Athens: It was customary to increase the stature of the actors by the use of cothurnus or buskin—a kind of high boot, ornamented in front, and having a layer of soles some three inches thick. The cothurnus was painted the same color as the robe worn. In addition to this, says Chambers' Journal, masks covering the whole head and face were used. On the top, over the forehead was a lofty frontlet of conical form, which must have added considerably to the stature and dignity of the actor; inside the mask there seems to have been some contrivance for strengthening the power of the voice to enable it to fill the immense space of the auditorium. Bell-shaped vessels of bronze are said to have been placed in various parts of the theatre to reflect the sound, and the actors were subjected to a severe course of training both as to power and modulation of voice. Many of the actors were men of position and influence in Attic society, and more than one had been intrusted with diplomatic and other missions. Sometimes the poet himself played in his own compositions, as Æschylus is said to have done. It may interest some of the craft of the present day to learn that as much as a talent (nearly £250) has been paid to an actor of note for two performances. There were only three performers in speaking parts, the others were silent; indeed they could not have spoken had they tried, for their masks had the orifice of the mouth closed, while those worn by the principal actor and his two subordinates were constructed with the mouth open in the shape of an O. No women were allowed to act, the female parts being taken, as in Shakspearian times with us, by boys or young men, not only on the stage itself but in the chorus. Sophocles, when a youth, was selected for his grace and beauty to lead the choral dance at the festival given in honor of the victors at Salamis. The dresses worn on the stage bore no resemblance to the ordinary Athenian costume, but were probably a modification of the festal robes worn in the old Dionysiac procession, and consisted of flowing robes of purple and yellow and other brilliant hues, crowns or chaplets, and broad embroidered girdles. These robes were so lengthy as to cover the feet, and were common to all characters, male as well as female.

Book Chat.

Samuel Huebsch, a learned and industrious American Hebrew, has translated the "Proverbs of Solomon" into Volapuk.

A. C. Gunther, the author of "Mr. Barnes, of New York," is at work on a new novel to be entitled "The Frenchman," which is to portray the Frenchman and his characteristics on both sides of the Atlantic.

New York Ledger: An editor, in reply to a young writer who wished to know which magazine would give him the highest position quickest, advised "a powder magazine, especially if you contribute a fiery article."

It is announced by cablegram that Vizetley, the well-known book seller of London, has been sentenced to three months imprisonment for publishing Zola's novels. It is not stated whether or not this conviction was for the violation of some copyright law, or because of the character of the novels. The presumption is that it was the former.

Dr. Leopold von Ranke was one of the greatest historical writers in the present century. He was born in Thuringa in 1795. His productions include a "History of the German People from 1494 to 1595," and the "History of the Popes During the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries." The latter work has been made familiar to English and American readers by Macauley's celebrated essay, "Von Ranke's History of the Popes."

In Temple Bar, an anonymous writer has taken Hood's "Bridge of Sighs" as a text, and produced the following as illustrative of woman's love and man's perfidy:

A TRAGEDY IN THREE ACTS.

Whispering to her lover,
Oh, but the world is heaven!
Poppies beneath, and above her
The bright blue skies of Devon.
Backwards and forwards faring,
Oh, but the world is chilly!
Flaunting beneath the glaring
Gaslight of Piccadilly
Standing beside the river,
Oh, but the world is hell!
Madly, with heart a-quiver,
Bidding it all farewell.

Says a writer in To-Day: Stephen Massett sends me the following charming impromptu, written in Zion Church last Saturday on the back of an invitation to the ceremony that united those two able young artists, Miss Alexandrine F. Duprez and Mr. Sydney Mortimer Lawrence:

Strange things have happened in this sacred place,
Of joy and pain, endured in life's short race;
The happy bride, also the widow, here
Have sweetly smiled—or shed the bitter tear!
I sit and wonder if the groom and bride—
The first his mother's idol, and her pride—
Will in the coming years be lithe and gay
As they are now, on this, their wedding day!
Who knows? But let us hope that joy and peace
Will be the lot of both, till life shall cease;
All blessings on their journeyings attend,
And God's good angels guard them to the end!

Professional Chat.

After the great battle of Leuctra, where the Spartans were defeated by the Thebans, under Epaminondas, a curious difficulty arose. So large a part of the Spartan force had participated in a disgraceful flight, that the Ephori—those noble, upright magistrates, who held with an equal hand the balance between kingly power and popular liberty—were at a loss how to deal with so vast a body of offenders. In their perplexity they referred the matter to Agesilas, who decreed for the integrity of the law, but added that he should be regarded as having "slept" on the day of Leuctra, to awake with renewed vigor and vigilance on the morrow. By this clever dodge the law was vindicated, and the self-respect of 20,000 runaways preserved.

The complaint is very lengthy, sets forth the Acts under the provisions of which bonds aggregating $1,514,600 were issued, the moneys received by the city and the amount paid into the Sinking and Interest Fund, etc. Plaintiff claims that there is sufficient money in the fund to pay the coupons and interest thereon, but that he refuses to do so.

James C. Pennie, administrator, vs. Sebastian Vishe et al.—Motion to dissolve injunction argued and taken under advisement; demurrer to complaint overruled.

A New Mutual Insurance Plan.

A large number of citizens and property owners of Sacramento county have entered into a project of mutual insurance that will undoubtedly reduce the rates exacted by regular insurance combinations, and will, in place of sending large sums of money out of the State for the benefit of foreign capitalists, keep all the money formerly expended in that direction at home. The plan of this new enterprise is for all who wish to become members to sign a contract agreeing to comply with the rules and regulations of the association. The membership fee is but the nominal sum of one dollar, and each member thereafter shall have the right to secure a mutual policy of insurance upon such property and in such amount as may be approved by the Board of Trustees of the association. Only small rates are charged or collected, and in case of loss by fire, the other members, upon proper proof of loss, must make the amount so lost good, by mutual assessment. In plain words, all the parties to the contract agree to insure each other, and if any one sustains a loss the others pay him from their own pockets the amount he has lost. There are many restrictions, and all insurance is limited to Sacramento county, unless by general consent an outsider is taken in the combine. No hop houses or other extra hazardous property can be insured in the company. The name of the new project is The Patron Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Sacramento County, California. The directors at present are: Thos. McConnell, Geo. W. Hack, J. H. McKinn, A. A. Knill and David Reese.

County Board of Education.

The Board of Supervisors, at their session to-morrow, will elect two members of the County Board of Education, to fill the vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of Mr. Johnson and Miss Josie Regan. There are four candidates, the present incumbents and Miss Jennie Govan and Prof. Willis. It is expected that the meeting of the Board of Supervisors will be lively. Resolutions have been passed by them ordering Professor Blanchard, lately of Folsom, to appear and show cause why his position on the County Board should not be declared vacant, on account of his nonresidence in the county. Prof. Blanchard is in the city, and we have no doubt that he will be able to make a very satisfactory showing.

Terrible Floods in the East.

The floods at Johnstown resulted in an awful catastrophe. It is said that the reservoir above the town broke at 5 o'clock last evening and an immense volume of water rushed down to the city, carrying with it death and destruction. Houses with their occupants were swept away and many people drowned.

The course of the torrent from the broken dam at the foot of the lake to Johnstown is almost eighteen miles, and with the exception of one point the water passed through a narrow shaped valley.

Four miles below the dam lay the town of South Fork, where South Fork itself empties into the Conemaugh river. The town contains about two thousand inhabitants. It has not been heard from, but is said four-fifths of it has been swept away.

Four miles further down on the Conemaugh river, which runs parallel with the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was the town of Mineral Point. It has 800 inhabitants, 90 per cent. of the houses being on a flat and close to the river. It seems impossible at this time to hope that any of them have escaped.

Six miles further down was the town of Conemaugh, and here alone there was a topographical possibility of the spreading of the flood and the breaking of its force. It contained 2,500 inhabitants, and must be almost devastated.

Woodvale, with 200 people, lay a mile below Conemaugh, in the flat, and one mile further down was Johnstown and its cluster of sister towns, Cambria City and Conemaughborough, with a total population of 30,000. On made ground, and stretched along right at the river's verge were the immense iron works of the Cambria Iron and Steel Company, who have $5,000,000 invested in their plant. Besides these there are many other large industrial establishments on the bank of the river, and how badly they were damaged cannot be estimated. At 11 P. M., a railroad man says the loss of life will reach hundreds, and possibly over a thousand. The report of the loss of the towns above named cannot yet be confirmed.

One hundred bodies have been recovered at Nineveh. Seventy persons reported burned to death in a fire at Johnstown Bridge.

W. M. Hays has just returned from Johnstown and says the place is annihilated. Conemaugh was wrecked, and Cambria City swept away. Fully twelve hundred lives were lost.

Local Improvement Association.

The annual meeting of the Sacramento Improvement Association will be held on Monday evening, at Justice Baker's office, I street, between Sixth and Seventh. An executive committee will be elected for the ensuing year. A full attendance is desired. This association has been the means of securing many needed and valuable improvements in this city, but the association is capable of much greater local advancement if its members will only discard the apparent lethargy that has seized upon them of late, and attack the slummers with renewed vigor—in fact, invoke the same degree of energy they started the crusade with. If they do this there will be cause for rejoicing. It is the purpose of THEMIS to stir the members up with a sharp spur, when they sit idly by and see the car of progress dismantled, and all improvement laws and ordinances ignored. It is the duty of this body of representative citizens to not only see to it that all necessary steps for the advancement of the city's interests are taken, but to set the seal of condemnation on all violations of the laws and ordinances. We direct the attention of these gentlemen to the deliberate and wholesale violation of the penal laws in matters of lottery schemes, and the fact that this is a financial injury to the community and the State.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest temperature during the past week was: Highest, 94°, on Tuesday and Wednesday; lowest, 53°, on Monday and Wednesday. The highest and lowest one year ago for the same time was 83° and 49°. The highest and lowest temperature yesterday was 82° and 56°, while for the same time last year it was 71° and 60°.

Off for Monte Vista.

The excursion to Monte Vista leaves the Sacramento and Placerville railroad depot this morning at 10:30 sharp, returning at 12, leaving an hour for the inspection of the improvements at our new suburb. To-morrow evening all of the unsold lots will be offered at auction by Killip & Co., at 415 J street. *

It is now certain that Mrs. Cecil Colnfield, who mysteriously disappeared from the Snowball place at Knight's Landing, did not commit suicide, as supposed. It is learned definitely that she was seen to enter a carriage with an unknown man on the morning of her disappearance.

The Supreme Court has granted a new trial to Dr. Bowers, who was convicted of the murder of his wife by giving her phosporus. The Court says that there was no evidence showing that the accused had phosporus in his possession. Moreover, there is evidence that the fatal illness of Mrs. Bowers was a result of a miscarriage by her own act. To the opinion of the Court, Justice McFarland dissented.

The Hobson quartz mine, near Brimstone, has shown some fine rock lately, and there is talk of putting up a mill.

SACRAMENTO'S DOWNFALL.

The Victorious Career of the Senators Cut Short by Oakland's Noisy Crew.

About three thousand people witnessed the game at Haight-street Park, San Francisco, yesterday afternoon, between the Oakland and Sacramentos. The game was a very interesting one up to the eighth inning, when the Oakland increased their score by 5 runs, due to some timely hitting and costly errors of the Sacramentos.

Although battling against all the contending elements in the game, the Sacramentos made it very interesting for their league brethren, who now take their former position in the championship race.

Oakland presented in the box their new acquisition to the California ball tossers, and barring the second inning, he pitched a masterly game of ball. He is a left-handed twirler, with considerable speed, but his great point in pitching is the command of the ball and his curves, which he uses with excellent judgment. The Sacramentos found him for but six safe hits, which is a creditable showing for his first appearance on a California diamond.

Game was called at 3 o'clock. The Oakland having the choice of innings, sent the Sacramentos to bat, and retired them in regular order. Oakland was treated likewise in their half of the first. Sacramento began the run-getting in the second; Veach was safe on O'Neill's error of his hot grounder, going to third on Sylvester's hit to left-center, and scored on Burke's single to center. Sylvester reached first on his single to left, stole second, reached third on Burke's drive to center, and scored on Newbert's single over second. Newbert's single gave him first; went to second on a passed ball, and scored on Goodenough's sacrifice to second. O'Day was hit by pitcher, reached third on Newbert's hit, and scored on missed third strike. Burke put out trying to steal home; Goodenough retired on his hit to Dooley, and Krehmeyer struck out, ending the inning for the Sacramentos. These were all the runs scored by the Sacramentos throughout the game, and though the scorer failed to give them credit for an earned run, they made the only earned run of the game.

Oakland made two runs in the fourth. O'Neill reached first on his single, went to second on Goodenough's error; a passed ball gave him third, and scored on Smalley's hit for two cushions; Smalley went to third on Dooley's sacrifice, and scored on a passed ball. Again in the fifth, McDonald hit for a double; Aldrich's sacrifice gave him third, and he scored on a passed ball. O'Neill got his base on balls, stole second, and scored on a passed ball. These runs tied the score, and until the eighth inning, when five runs were scored by the Oakland, it was anybody's game.

McDonald and O'Day still keep up their excellent fielding record.

Veach was at his best in left field. He made a neat catch of a difficult fly that looked like a home run.

Roxburg caught a fine game. He has a very sore finger, which will incapacitate him for a few days.

The Sacramentos meet the Oakland again to-day. Baltz, who showed up so finely against the Stocktons, will do the pitching, and we hope that Sacramento will recover the lost laurels of yesterday.

Following is the score:

LOCAL BREVITIES.

The close season for doves ended yesterday. Dove shooting will now be in order for local sportsmen.

The closing exercises of the Christian Brothers' College will be held at the Metropolitan Theater, to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Officer Coffey yesterday arrested two men who gave the names of Sullivan and O'Brien who are wanted at Davisville for "standing up" a citizen of that village.

At about half past 12 o'clock last night a lamp exploded in the room of Mr. Warrick, on J street, between Sixth and Seventh. He threw it out of the window. No damage was done.

The funeral of Mrs. Elezene Brand, mother of G. E. Brand, occurred on Friday. Mrs. Dunn, Mrs. Byrne, E. S. Campbell and R. T. Cohn sang a requiem. The floral offerings were beautiful.

Policeman Wm. Scanlan is in difficulty. Annie Dick claims him as her lawful spouse. The gallant officer denies the soft impeachment. The court will be appealed to to settle the vexed matrimonial question.

The Folsom Telegraph, in its last issue, discloses the fact that a new and vigorous man is at the editorial helm. It is a fine paper and filled with local news. Bro. Thad., you are the right man in the right place.

The Colusa Herald has joined THEMIS in the fight against lottery schemes. The editorial of that paper is to the point and should convince the most purblind of the disastrous effects of those foreign lotteries upon our community.

Mrs. E. Keegan, mother of J. J. Keegan, Mrs. E. J. Ketchum, Mrs. H. M. Bernard and Mary A. Keegan, died in this city on Friday morning. Mrs. Keegan had lived more than her allotted three score and ten, being 76 years of age at the time of her death.

The alleged train robber, Jack Gorton, was taken to Auburn on Friday, by Sheriff John Butler, of Placer county. This is the party identified by Robert Johnston, Wells, Fargo's messenger, at the time of this robbery. The incidents of the daring robbery are familiar to the people of this county.

Frank Hatch, who was lately a member of the Grismer-Davies company, is now at his home in Colusa. From the Herald we learn that Mr. Hatch will give an entertainment in that place, in which Sweethearts and The Boston Dip will be rendered. Miss May Wood, of Sacramento, will have a number on the programme.

About 9 o'clock this morning a horse took flight on J street, between Second and Third, ran up the sidewalk, demolishing the real estate sign of L. C. Chandler, and then dashed into a lot of wares on the sidewalk in front of Holbrook, Merrill & Stetson's. The animal kicked to pieces two small heating boilers, and was finally quieted.

Our reference to the condition of certain sidewalks in this city had the effect to cause the prompt repairing of the places named. A general overhauling of the dilapidated sidewalks in this city would not be out of order. We are pleased to notice the fact that some of our property owners are brought to realize the necessity for public improvements, and are acting.

It is suggested by a large number of the patrons of the J street line of street cars, that it would be greatly to the credit of the managers of that line if roller curtains were placed upon the cars, to protect the passengers from the hot rays of the sun. Those gentlemen who have shown a desire to accord with all reasonable public demands will without doubt see to the comfort of their patrons.

Medical science has been brought to the conclusion that the electric light is responsible for a peculiar disease of the eyes. The symptoms are great pains about the orbits, accompanied with profuse lachrymation, and are the cause of frequent awakening in the night. The medicos have given the disease this name: Pholo-electric Ophthalmia. From the number of cases reported, this is likely to become a dangerous ailment.

Capital Lodge of Odd Fellows will celebrate the 30th anniversary of its institution on the 10th inst. An address will be delivered and an interesting literary and musical programme will be presented. The exercises will take place at the State Capitol, in the Senate chamber, the collation in the Assembly chamber. From the standing of this lodge, one of the oldest in the city, we doubt not that this anniversary celebration will be one of the most notable in the history of this city.

A Reading, Pa., dispatch says that pink-eye has attacked the horses of that city. Some fifty animals belonging to the City Passenger Railroad Company are affected. The disease has made its appearance in a great many stables.

J. H. Patterson, of New Hampshire, was yesterday appointed Second Auditor of the Treasury, and George P. Fisher, of Delaware, First Auditor of the Treasury.

Folsom Items.

The Telegraph says: John Faber, of Latrobe, one of the nimrods of that section, killed a wild boar on Thursday, near his ranch, which he brought to Folsom. The hog was one of the largest we ever saw, was covered with a thick growth of red, curly hair, and had tusks at least half a foot long.

We were creditably informed this week that the contract for the construction of the canal from a point at about Robber's Ravine to the Prison will soon be let, and that work thereon will be immediately begun. We most earnestly hope that such is the case, for the causal assures Folsom a bright future.

Indorsement of Merit.

I take pleasure in certifying to the excellence of the Mathushek Piano. I can cheerfully and truthfully recommend it in any of its various styles as a first-class instrument, the equal of any and the superior of most in the qualities necessary to the accompaniment of the voice; and I believe it to be more than any other suited to withstand the effects of our California climate. We use it exclusively at our rehearsals and concerts.

To Francesca.

Sing Waller's lay
"Go, lovely rose," or some old song
That, should I play
Feebly, thy voice may make me strong
With loving memories cherished long.

Sing "Drink to me,"
Or "Take, oh, take those lips away"—
Some strain to be,
When I am gone and thou art gay,
Remembered of a happier day.

A solemn air,
A melody not loud, but low,
Suits whitening hair:
And when the pulse is beating slow
The music's measure should move so.

The song most sweet
Is that which hurls not thrills, the ear:
So, love, repeat,
For one who counteth silence dear,
That which to silence is most near.

Moorish Cruelty.

An Englishman, resident in Tangier, Morocco, seeking one morning to leave the town by one of the gates, found the gate closed and a large crowd assembled before it, says an exchange. He also saw a number of soldiers, and in their midst a couple of prisoners, with their arms tied to their sides. One was a mountaineer from the Rif, the other a tall and handsome young fellow, a native of Tangier. He asked what crime these men had committed.

"The sultan," was the answer—"may God prolong his days—has ordered their heads to be struck off because they have been smuggling on the Rif coast."

"It is a very severe punishment," urged the Englishman.

"Do not argue with me, Nazarene," said the officer. "I have received my orders and must obey."

The execution was to take place in the Jewish slaughter house. A Moor, repulsive in appearance and dressed as a butcher, was there, awaiting the condemned. His weapon was a small knife with a blade six inches long. He was a stranger, and had offered his services because all the Mohammedan butchers in the town had taken refuge in a sanctuary. A heated discussion arose between this wretch and the officer in charge as to the blood money he was to receive for the job. The two victims stood by and listened. The butcher demanded 20 francs a head. The officer finally agreed, though with ill-grace.

Then the butcher seized the Rifian, threw him on the ground and knelt on his chest. The Englishman turned away his head. He heard sounds of a fearful struggle, in the midst of which a hoarse voice cried: "Give me another knife; mine does not cut." Another knife was brought and the head hewn from the body. The soldiers cried faintly: "God prolong the life of our lord and master."

Then came the second victim. He had watched the operation. Again they wrangled over his blood; the officer refused to remember his promise and said he would only give 20 francs for both heads. The butcher accepted. The prisoner begged that his hands might be unbound. He gave his cloak to one soldier, saying: "We shall meet in the next world." He threw his turban to another. He cried in a clear voice: "There is no god but Allah; Mohammed is his prophet."

And, taking off his belt, gave it to the butcher, saying:

"Take it, and for the love of God deal more quickly with with me than with my brother."

"Then he stretched himself on the earth in the blood, and the executioner knelt on him."

"A reprieve—stop!" cried the Englishman. A horseman galloped toward them. The butcher held his knife.

"It is only the governor's son," said a soldier, "come to see the execution. Wait for him."

They waited. This incident occurred some years ago, but since then neither the customs nor the character nor the methods of administering the laws of the Moors have undergone any change.

A Wonderful Tribe.

A remarkable story is told in a recent issue of The Paris Societe de Geographie records. M. Camille Douls recounts the experience he underwent in a journey in northwestern Africa. Disguised as a native, it appears, he landed on the west coast near Cape Garuet, several hundred miles south of Morocco, pretending to the people of that region that he had been shipwrecked. At first he was roughly dealt with; but finally he gained the confidence of his captors, and, after five months' wanderings, by dint of craft he made his way to Morocco. Here his disguise was discovered, and he was thrown into prison—to be released presently at the instigation of the British minister. The adventures recorded are of interest, as they give a new version to the popular story of the great desert. The Oulad Delim, into whose hands M. Douls fell, he says, are unusually intelligent. They speak a pure Arabic, founded upon a constant study of the Koran. They are monogamous, and treat their wives with the greatest affection and respect as equals of the man. The girls share the education of the boys, learning to read and write with them; hence, the women show an intellectual and moral elevation far beyond that of any other Moslem woman.—St. James Gazette.

REFLECTIONS.

Without hearts there is no home.—Byron.
A sense of one's own deficiencies is salutary.

A great career is a dream of youth realized in old age.

A patch on a boy's trousers is something new under the sun.

One knows the value of pleasure only after having suffered pain.

The staid army of America is found chiefly in the street cars.

The carriages in which rich journalists ride should be called newspaper hacks.

A man who cannot mind his own business is not fit to be trusted with another's.

If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work.
—Shakespeare.

The philosophy of every-day life proves that many a tailor-made girl can take the conceit out of a self-made man.

A newspaper is the only instrument which can drop the same thought into ten thousand minds at the same moment.—De Toqueville.

It is a sad mistake when any man becomes imbued with the idea that he can successfully go through this world—or the next—by luck.

In family government let this always be remembered, that no reproof or denunciation is so potent as the silent influence of a good example.

The Mother's Pride.—"I tell you, my dear madame, my Maurice is a wonderful fellow, and so much like Goethe. Last year he took the Italian journey, and now he has only to write a 'Faust.'"

A new law in Madagascar gives a husband the power to chastise his wife with a regulation whip only, and does away with clubs and dray-stakes entirely. The whole world is progressing, even if slowly.

A reporter of the Boston Globe recently called upon ten regular physicians on the same day, and described his symptoms in exactly the same language to each. He received ten prescriptions, of which no two were alike, and a majority were utterly inconsistent each with the others.

Paraguay is the place for the believers in "woman's sphere" and the opponents of her "rights." There the women do all the work, while the men attend to the gambling, smoking and cock-fighting. Only fifteen per cent. of the people can read and write, and most of these are foreigners. The people down there think that "woman's place" is in the corn and tobacco field, and that she will "unsex herself" by getting out of that "sphere."

A German traveler has discovered the very smallest republic in Europe. The honor, which was claimed for Gersau until it was absorbed in the canton, seems to belong uncontestedly to the independent hamlet of Goust. This petty group of huts, situated a few hours' distance from Oleron, in the department of the Lower Pyrenees, belongs neither to France nor Spain. It has somewhat over a hundred citizens, Roman Catholics in religion, who live by silk weaving, and constitute a brave and self-dependent commonwealth. They have no taxes or any other public charges; they have no Mayor or other civil official. They have not even an established church nor priest of their own, but attend at a neighboring village. Their very language, an amalgam of French and Spanish, is spoken only in their little land, and scarcely understood elsewhere.

Self-Communion.

As there are many men who can sit down in silence and enjoy their own society, which for want of a better name we call solitude, so there are many who are greatly refreshed and edified by an occasional soliloquy. Who has not, in a moment of speculation or perplexity, interrogated his own wraith? He who, on some twilight stroll under the genial inspiration of his Havana, has not held a personal interview with himself, is devoid of the imagination which entertains.

In soliloquy there is always a perfect sincerity of expression with no mental reservations, and this is its charm. Our thoughts come trooping forth in their original nakedness—not clothed in the conventional garb for the alien eye. The children of our brain prattle to us with childlike naïveté, and the soul is in dishabille. Perhaps this is why prudish mortals feel sheepish when surprised in the act of talking to themselves. In literature dialogue is the accepted device for delineating character, and yet soliloquy is a vastly superior medium. The most notable thing Hamlet ever said he said to himself, and we suppose the same is true of many characters outside of fiction. At any rate, we know of hundreds of people whose conversational efforts would be more effective if cast in the form of monologue. Possibly the novelist of the day lets his hero figure in dialogue exclusively, because he knows that it would be untrue to nature and even suicidal for a bore to fall into soliloquy. Still a bore boring himself to death after contracting the habit would be a striking dénouement as well as a desirable consummation in real life.

Secrets Read in the Face.

A man's occupation or condition has a good deal to do with making his facial expression. Intellectual pursuits, like the studies of the scholarly professions, when coupled with temperate and moral habits of life, brighten the face and give a person a superior look. Magnanimity of nature, or love of studies and art, will make a bright, glad face; but, contrary to this, a man may have a face that does not please anybody, because of a love of self to the exclusion of all others, notwithstanding his learning and worldly shrewdness. Soldiers get a hard, severe look; overworked laborers constantly look tired; reporters look inquisitive; mathematicians look studious; judges become grave, even when off the bench; the man who has had domestic trouble looks all broken up. An example of the ludicrous side of this subject is to see a third-class lawyer stalking around a police court looking as wise as an owl. The business makes the face, I say. There's the butcher's face, the ministerial face, the lawyer's face, the hoodlum's face, all so distinct each from the other and singly, that I seldom fail to recognize those callings showing through the faces. And what city boy cannot recognize a genuine farmer on the street the moment he sees him?—Herald of Health.

A Judge's Courtship.

New York Press: The shortest courtship I ever heard of was that of an eminent jurist. He was on his way to hold court in a town when he met a young woman returning from market.

"How deep is the creek, and what did you get for you butter?" asked the judge.

"Up to the knee and ninepence," was the answer, as the girl walked on. The judge pondered over the sensible brevity of the reply, turned his horse, rode back and overtook her.

"I liked your answer just now," he said, "and I like you. I think you would make a good wife. Will you marry me?"

She looked over him and said: "Yes."

"Then get up behind me and we will ride to town and be married."

She did get up behind and they rode to the court-house and were made one. It is recorded that the marriage was a preeminently happy one.

CAPITAL IRON WORKS,

904 K Street, Sacramento.

Help Yourself.

Fight your own battles. Hoe your own row. Ask no favors of any one, and you'll succeed a thousand times better than any one who is always beseeching some one's influence and patronage. No one will ever help you as you can help yourself, because no one will be so heartily interested in your affairs. The first step will be such a long one, perhaps; but carving your own way up the mountain you make each one lead to another, and stand firm while you chop still another out. Men who have made fortunes are not those who have had $5,000 given to them to start with, but boys who have started fair with a well-earned dollar or two. Men who acquire fame have never been thrust into popularity by puffs begged, or paid for, or given in friendly spirit. They have outstretched their own hands and touched the public heart. Men who win love do their own wooing, and I never knew a man to fail so signally as one who induced his affectionate grandmother to speak a good word for him. Whether you work for fame, for love, for money, or for anything else, work with your hands and heart and brain. Say "I will," and some day you will conquer. Never let any man have it to say, "I have dragged you up." Too many friends sometimes hurt a man more than none at all.

Scrap of History.

On May 23, 1825, when the Emperor Napoleon I was crowned King of Italy at Milan, he, with his own hands, placed the ancient iron crown of Lombardy on his head, saying: "God has given it to me, let him beware who would touch it." This celebrated crown is composed of a broad circle of gold, set with rubies, emeralds and sapphires, on a ground of blue and gold enamel. But the most important part of the crown, and that from which it derives its name, is a narrow band of iron, about three-eighths of an inch broad, and one-tenth of an inch in thickness, attached to the inner circumference of the circle. This inner band of sacred iron is said to have been made out of the nails used at the crucifixion, given by the Empress Helena, the alleged discoverer of the cross, to her son Constantine, as a miraculous protection from the dangers of the battle field. The ecclesiastics who exhibit the crown point out as a "permanent miracle" that there is not a single speck of rust upon the iron, though it has been exposed more than fifteen hundred years.

Wives of the Orient.

The women of Burmah are the most advanced women of the East. The Japanese wife is addressed as slave by her husband, and she never appears to help him entertain his guests. The Korean madame has no right to go on the street except after dark, and the small-footed Chinese girl is the slave of her mother-in-law. She has no rights that husband is bound to respect, and he can sell her when he is tired of her. The Siamese girl, though a step higher in the order of human rights, has to support the family, and she is, according to the law, the property of the King. The Malay woman is secluded in the harem of her husband, and the millions of women of India and Egypt, are never seen upon the streets.

We have been taught to reverence what is called the perfection of human reason. Any question of the perfection of our jury system, which has been deemed the sacred "Palladium of Liberty," the glory of all free institutions, would subject an ordinary mortal to eternal perdition. All our great law writers hold this system up as second only to Divine law. It is true this system has almost a sacred origin, and goes far back into the dim and murky past. In Athens, the "Dicast" were the triers, and often numbered a thousand persons, and from those a smaller number were selected, with an Archon, to preside. Solon remodeled the system. The Romans copied after the Greeks, with their Judices. The Praetor being the judge, who was assisted by that learned body called juris consulti. The Teutonic races in a measure followed this system.

Odni—or Odin—the deity of the ancient Germans, had twelve judges, who heard and determined all causes of dispute, and were called Nemnda. Tacitus says that the Ingenui had a jury of one hundred. The Normans called twelve jurors or judges to determine all civil or criminal affairs. The compurgators of the Saxons were of the same order. This crude system was finally rendered what law givers call perfect, in our common and civil law of to-day. Under our system, which is claimed to be the perfection of human reason, a juror is sworn to render a true verdict, according to the law and the evidence; his conscience and his reason is to be aided by the law as given him by the Court.

Now, anything that tends to influence or interfere with the free expression of the thought or mind of a juror, must perforce obstruct the true administration of justice. No games of chance or arbitration of any nature are countenanced. A verdict under the influence of ardent spirits will not be tolerated, yet one juror may bring to bear all the magnetic power within him, all the force of a superior mind, to change the weaker members of this august body, even against all the principles of law or equity; and no legal objection can be made to the verdict thus obtained. Hundreds of forced verdicts are obtained without regard to the merits of the action or the rights of parties.

When a juror is sworn to render a true verdict, according to the law and the evidence, to then allow him to be coerced against his honest convictions, is certainly a travesty on justice. Again, to allow a verdict which is the result of a compromise between jurors, disregarding the rights of litigants, is an abomination, and not in accord with our advanced ideas of civilization and progress. The bare idea of placing it in the power of one or two or three jurors to prevent a verdict is the source of the much complained of corruption in this system of the administration of justice. With the same propriety and reason we might require the unanimous opinion of the bench on all matters of litigation, particularly in the penal department.

At the risk of being called sacrilegious we are constrained to interpose a protest against the practical workings and results of our jury system upon the rights of parties in civil actions, and the interests of unfortunates who are under the ban of the law in cases of crime. The great objection to our system of procuring fair-minded and intelligent persons, is the great latitude allowed in the matter of their selection. The very idea of common sense and reason in jurors is inconsistent with their qualifications. If the juror knows anything of the subject matter, and has reasoning power sufficient to form an impression, he is generally excluded from acting upon the jury.

It has become almost a burlesque—a travesty on justice—when jurors are called into the box to determine between litigants important commercial transactions involving intricate mathematical problems and delicate questions of science and art, with which they had no possible means of knowledge. As a matter of fact, in many instances, the selection of a jury becomes a question of tact—of fencing to secure some personal advantage, with a total disregard of the issues involved, and to secure men that can be influenced in some manner by some person connected with the litigation, or through some friend or other power of influence. Money, love, hate, revenge, sympathy, friendship, or whatsoever power might be invoked, cut the prime figure, and poor Justice in her blindness sees it not. There is little justice in our jury system when any of the above potent powers are utilized to the advantage of one side or the other.

If anyone wishes to become convinced that there are all manner of hobbies and peculiarities pervading our citizens, let him go on a collecting tour for any public enterprise or charity. The writer has only recently incurred this unwholesome experience, and if he is spared, will make a solemn or binding promise that he will never undertake such a project again. Why, hobbies! We did not dream that there were such idiosyncrasies existing in our fellow men. One man, when approached for a subscription for the Pennsylvania sufferers, would emphatically decline, but would volunteer a contribution for the open-air concerts, or other matters, giving as a reason that he was once a sufferer and no one aided him! Another would refuse to aid the concert, but was willing to give liberally to the sufferers. Still another would not subscribe to either, but would contribute to fill in China slough. Another would not give a cent for any of these charitable purposes, but would open his sack to establish a good system of horse-races. Another crank wanted to contribute $100 towards raising a fund to ostracize all lawyers and abolish and abrogate the jury system. There was the fellow who thought contributions should all be devoted towards the establishment of public swimming baths, in order that our citizens might be induced to abstain from visiting Santa Cruz. Some were impressed with the great importance of having baseball conducted at the public expense, and would subscribe for that object and no other. Thus, as we proceeded to go the rounds, men were found who had some particular hobby to assist or some imaginary grievance to abate, and which were, to them, paramount to all other considerations.

Our government is necessarily interested in all the Pacific islands. They are important to us in a commercial sense, and in case of any European complications many of them are valuable in a strategic and defensive point of view. It is not the sentiment of our people to secure the control or conquest of such islands as Hayti or Cuba, or even the Sandwich Islands. But it is for our general welfare to see that the intrigues of foreign powers do not supplant our interests and powers in this island kingdom. The close of the chronic revolution in Hayti will result in much good, as it destroys the tempting bait for France and other European powers to get a foothold by intrigue. As a matter of fact, the Hawaiian government is pretty generally Americanized, and we, in the great commercial center, actually have the control of general and fiscal affairs. A number of great American improvements have been introduced and utilized at Hawaii, including the electric system, incandescent lights and telephone service, and which has given to the kingdom the title of the Paradise of the Pacific. Our present administration, within the next four years, can do much toward extending our commercial relations with the islands of the Caribbean Sea, as well as with the Central and South American countries. The national dignity will be manifest and the flag respected in the Pacific isles, as well as upon this hemisphere. Secretary Blaine's well-known adherence to the Monroe doctrine is a full guarantee that the department of state will at all times guard with a jealous and firm hand the rights of Americans in all parts of the world, and protect American interests on this hemisphere and throughout the South Pacific.

We have been amused by a lengthy criticism printed in the last issue of our contemporary, the Sunday Union, of one of the articles we published under the heading of "Unwritten History." The design of that series of papers running in our columns under that title, is to, as nearly as possible, collate in convenient form data relating to the condition of affairs in this country up to the time when the charter of Sacramento city was granted by the first legislature. The initial paper we presented had reference to the Spanish and Mexican rule of the country; to the derivation of the name of California, and to other matters necessary to be referred to to pave the way for what is to follow. Our second paper might have been entitled—and with propriety—"John A. Sutter and His Fort." No man at all familiar with the history of the settlement of the Sacramento valley will deny that Sutter was a prominent figure here, and that the establishment by him of the fort at New Helvetia was an incident that cannot escape notice in any State or local historical article.

As we say, we are amused by the criticisms published by our contemporary, particularly so at the statement that "the Sunday Union has long been aware that there were men still living who believe Sutter to have been more of a greedy adventurer, working in the interest of foreign power, than a patriotic American desirous of extending the glory of his adopted country," etc. Then follows a column and a half interview with J. A. Laufkotter, an old and respected citizen of Sacramento. That the Union has long been in possession of the statements of Mr. Laufkotter we cannot, of course, seriously deny. They were printed in the Bee in a communication by him on October 23, 1884. Afterward an old trapper, Stephen H. Meek, on November 7, 1884, in the same paper, wrote a vindication of Sutter. On the 19th, Laufkotter replied to Meek. On December 3, 1884, Meek published an extensive defense of Sutter, and the matter was kept up until the editor of the Bee announced that his columns were closed to it, in that it was devoid of further interest. Knowing, as we do, that the Bee is published immediately across the street from the Union, and that copies of it are daily laid on its counter, it seems remarkable that the Union should now attempt to surprise us with the statement that it has been long aware of these matters. Therefore, we say that the revamping by the Union of that which was so thoroughly discussed so recently in a journal of wide circulation in this city, is hardly worthy of comment now. We do not know if our contemporary intends to place itself in the position of defending all of the statements of Mr. Laufkotter, and if its publications relative to early history are to be based simply upon the recollection of a single individual.

If our contemporary has any curiosity to know, we will state that the main points of the article relating to Sutter, which we published on May 26th, concerning which the criticism is made, were drawn from a lecture delivered in the city of New York on April 6, 1866, by General Dunbar. The lecture was exhaustive, and was published in the Sacramento Union on May 10, 1866, commencing at the third column of the first page. The Union then said that John A. Sutter was seated on the platform, and the lecturer was introduced to the audience by General John Bidwell. The writer of this is one who will perhaps fall under the adopted criticism of our contemporary, as we assume that when a journal publishes a criticism with the introductory written by its editor it stands responsible for it. Mr. Laufkotter says that "it is a deplorable state of affairs when people are obliged to swallow these doses of falsified history prepared by persons not even born when those scenes were transpiring, but who desire to shine in the estimation of the people as wise in historical lore."

We are not disposed to accept without question the statements of Mr. Laufkotter in the face of what we deem to have been indorsed by a man of the reputation of General Bidwell, a man who was here at a period so early, and whose business relations with Sutter place him in a position to have had an intimate acquaintance with the subject on which General Dunbar lectured. There are points in the article which our contemporary publishes of which we could speak in criticism; that would, however, be unfair, in that we are in possession of data which exists not elsewhere. As we stated in a former number, in correcting the Union on matters of local history, we desire to be generous. We realize that that journal is one of the oldest and most reliable on the coast. In its columns has been printed authentic State history. We are very free to say that we have relied largely on its files for historical data.

The lengthy criticism of our contemporary winds up with a challenge for any person to prove that Marshall was the first and only discoverer of gold in California. No man who has made even a superficial study of the history of this coast will claim that Marshall was the first and only discoverer of gold in this State. If our friends will turn to the second page of the third number of THEMIS, they will find an article in which very many mentions are made of discoveries of gold before 1848. In 1885 the Overland Monthly contained an extended account of a gold discovery in 1842, and in the Bee of October 19, 1885, an editor of this paper explained that there was nothing new about the matter; that it had been spoken of in a letter to the department of state by Thomas O. Larkin, the United States Consul at Monterey, under the date of May 4, 1846. Gold from that mine was sent to the Philadelphia mint, and a historical account of the assay was published in the Union May 20, 1868. In the article in the Bee referred to, we said, after having referred to these previous discoveries: "Notwithstanding all these prior discoveries, they do not detract from the credit due to Marshall. He is in the same situation with Columbus. Beyond a doubt America had been visited by civilized people before 1492. On this coast have been found evidences of visits by Japanese in remote times. But Columbus it was whose discovery led to the civilization of a new world, and to the development of its vast resources. Marshall's discovery was the one which opened the treasures of California to the world; it was a discovery without which California would be to-day a comparatively unknown and undeveloped portion of the American Union. * * * Now that he is dead, the least we can do is to acknowledge his right as the first practical discover of Californian gold." In line with that we say of Sutter, that he is entitled to the credit of having established the first civilization in the valley of the Sacramento. It is too late that it should be asked of those who know him but from history to discard what has been written of him by the early American explorers, and by all historians, presumptively with impartiality. Sutter is dead; he cannot now speak.

The Old-Fashioned Man.

The old-fashioned man is a sensible creature,
Retiring in manner and wholesome of feature;
He never is rude enough, quite, nor inhuman
Enough to forget that his "ma" was a woman;
And, therefore, his courtesy never falls flat—
When he speaks to a woman he takes off his hat.

His garments are quiet, yet not out of date;
He never looks cheerful, nor prates he of "fate."
In his doctrine there's no such a thing, sir, as "chance;"
His mind is a broad one, of friendly expanse.

He seldom goes wooing, and yet when he goes [knows]
The "masher" stands back, and the "dude"—well, he
That his mascot's over—defeated his plan—
They all make broad room for the old-fashioned man.

They see with chagrin how he wins him a wife,
And knows how to keep her respect all his life.
His children adore him, for none better can Inspire true respect than the old-fashioned man.

Long life and good health may he have, and may he
The pride of this vain world for e'er and e'er be,
Till time hath an end—redivivus and plau—
Aye, long may he flourish—the old-fashioned man.

JUGGERNAUT JEWELS.

The Vengeance of the God upon a Man Who Sought to Steal the Idol's Gems.

The true and tragic tale which I am about to relate was told to me many years ago by a distinguished officer of the Madras army, says a letter in the Times of India. The facts have never appeared in any newspaper, nor are they to be found in any of the police records of the presidency. For obvious reasons the names have been altered; but to this day by the camp fires of the great festival held every year is told with bated breath and listened to with rapt attention the terrible tale of the jewels of Juggernaut and the vengeance of the great god.

"Many years ago," said my friend, "I was quartered at Fuzarabad, an important military station about one hundred and fifty miles from the Madras coast. There was a large number of troops there of all descriptions, and certainly for half the year the life we all led was gay and high enough.

"Unfortunately, at the time I was there gambling and betting were much in vogue, and many men plunged and came to grief over their debts of honor. Of all that gay company nobody was more popular and better liked by both men and women than young Fitzroy; but unfortunately he lost money at the races, tried to recover himself at the whist table but failed, got into the hands of the Marwarees, and got deeper and deeper into the mire of debt. You could see by his careworn and troubled expression of face that the young fellow was in a real bad way. I was not surprised, then, when one day he came to me and said: 'Major, I'm done for. I'm utterly broke. I can't get any more money in the bazaar, and they'll run me in unless I can get away for a bit. I must get to England and see if I can raise the wind there, but goodness knows,' said the young fellow bitterly, 'how I can dare ask my poor old governor. 'Major,' said he, 'I must get away; it's simply killing me. You were a great friend of my father, and promised to help me. I wish I had stuck to your advice, but it's too late now. Will you come away with me? Give out that we have taken ten days' leave for some shooting, and see me down to the coast. If I go off alone I shall be stopped by those cursed Marwarees.'

"After some hesitation I agreed. He sent in his application for leave to Europe on private affairs, and I gave out that I was going on a ten days' shooting expedition. A week later, with a pair of tongas, we had started on our long and wearying journey to the coast, where my poor young friend hoped to pick up a steamer to take him to Europe. On the second day out we met crowds of people tramping along—men, women and children—and the next day still greater crowds. In reply to our inquiries we were told that they were returning from the great festival of Juggernaut, held at Puri, now only some three days' journey from where we were. The tongawalla kept us interested with a graphic description of the festival and of the great god, which was especially remarkable for the jewels it possessed—two emerald eyes of inestimable value, its lips formed of the finest rubies in the world, and a necklaces of priceless pearls.

"The sun was sinking as at last we neared the town of Puri, and we could see the pinnacles of the temples rise above the trees which surrounded the place. Half a mile the other side of the place stood the travelers' bungalow, where we intended putting up for the night. During the last twenty-four hours my young companion had kept silence and was moody and almost sullen whenever I tried to arouse him. A more uncomfortable meal I never ate than the dinner that was served up to us that evening, and I was quite thankful when the poor lad said he was dead beat, and would go off to bed. My own room was on the other side of the bungalow, and I took my pipe and sat smoking on the veranda. The moon was just rising, when I thought I saw the figure of a European stealing along the wall of the compound. Strange, I thought, and wondered what other European could be here at the same time. An idea struck me, and I went across to my companion's room. There was nobody in it, the bed was undisturbed. I threw down my pipe and rushed out into the moonlight.

"A few seconds later I was out in the road and turned instinctively in the direction of the town. Running down the road I soon came to a sandy lane which went outside the village walls in the direction of the temples, their pinnacles standing out clear and distinct in the moonlight. In the distance I thought I saw the figure of my poor lad, but soon the turnings and twistings of the lane, with its thick cactus hedges on each side, shut him out from my view. In a few moments I was close by the big temple compound. Running up to the wall I looked over, and this is what I saw: An enormous court-yard of paved stone, on which were lying a number of priests, their white garments wrapped around their heads and bodies. In the back-ground was placed temple after temple, but in the center stood one solitary shrine, raised on three separate flights of steps, and inside I could see the great black god, raised on three smaller flights of colored marble steps. The moonbeams shone directly on the god and lit up the emerald eyes and ruby lips, while the pearl necklace glowed on his huge black bosom. Not a sound was to be heard except some distant tom-tomming on the other end of the town. The festival was over, and Puri had lapsed into solemn silence. To my utterable amazement I saw my companion walking right across the court-yard.

"Not a living creature moved until a pariah dog rose up near the wall, gave one howl, and then slunk away and crouched down again. Still no one stirred. My tongue clove to the roof of my mouth. I dared not shout, even if I could have raised my voice. A ghastly horror took hold of me as the idea struck me that in his madness my poor friend intended to save his honor by the greater dishonor of robbing the idol. Speechless I saw him mount step after step, and the next moment I saw him enter the sacred shrine across the threshold of which no other foot but that of the Brahmin had ever passed. Nine steps led up to the god—one, two, three, four, five, six. He paused. I tried to shout, but no sound would come. He raised his hand as if to tear off the pearl necklace. It was still above his reach. His foot then touched the seventh. Can I ever forget the sight? In the moonlight flashed out two arms covered with a hundred—ay, two hundred—daggers, and clasped the daring youth to the black god's breast. At the same moment the sound of a gong broke the stillness of the night, and in one moment the priests had cast off their coverings and were rushing to the shrine. Two minutes later I saw the amazed and horrified priests carrying out the lifeless body of the dishonored Englishman, and I turned and fled.

Zoological Superstitions which Trouble the Celestial Mind.

A Chinese native paper published recently a collection of some zoological myths of that country, a few of which are worth noting. In Shan-si there is a bird which can divest itself of its feathers and become a woman. At Twan-sin-chow dwells the Wanmu Niao (mother of mosquitoes), a fish-eating bird, from whose mouth issue swarms of mosquitoes when it cries. Yung-chow has its stone-swallow, which flies during wind and rain, and in fine weather turns to stone again. Another bird when killed gives much oil to the hunter, and when the skin is thrown into the water it becomes a living bird again. With regard to animals, few are so useful as the "Jih-kih" ox, found in Kansuh, from which large pieces of flesh are cut for meat and grow again in a single day. The merman of the southern seas can weave a kind of silky fabric which keeps a house cool in summer if hung up in one of the rooms. The tears of this merman are pearls. A large hermit-crab is attended by a little shrimp, which lives in the stomach of its master; if the shrimp is successful in its depredations the crab flourishes, but the latter dies if the shrimp does not return from his daily excursions. The "Ho-lo" is a fish having one head and ten bodies. The myths about snakes are the strangest of all. Thus the square snake of Kwangsi has the power of throwing an inky fluid when attacked, which kills its assailants at once. Another snake can divide itself up into twelve pieces, and each piece, if touched by a man, will instantly generate a head and fangs at each end. The calling snake asks a traveler: "Where are you from, and whither are you bound?" If he answers the snake follows him for miles, and, entering the hotel where he is sleeping raises a fearful stench. The hotel proprietor, however, guards against this by putting a centipede in a box under the pillow, and when the snake gives forth the evil odor, the centipede is let out, and, flying at the snake, instantly kills him with a bite. The fat of this snake, which grows to a great size, makes oil for the lamps, and produces a flame which cannot be blown out. In Burma and Cochin-China is a snake which has in the female sex a face like a pretty girl, with two feet growing under the neck, each with five fingers, exactly like the fingers of a human hand. The male is green in color, and has a long beard; it will kill a tiger, but a fox is more than a match for it.

Pleasure and Pain.

It's pleasant to sit by the side
Of a girl who is pretty and slender,
One feels a legitimate pride,
And wonderfully loving and tender.

It's pleasant to cuddle—but stay!—
To his cost every Romeo knows,
That pleasure to sorrow gives way,
When there's a pin sticking out of her clothes.
—London Tatler.

Story of a Circus Elephant Famous for His Violence.

Many interesting and famous elephants have been favorites of the American circus-going public long before the late Jumbo's successful debut, says a writer in Chambers' Journal. One of these, known as Canada, was a desperate character. When, in one of his tantrums, "he did as much mischief as a tornado," to use an American showman's words—tossing hacks into the air and tearing down signs and lamp-posts. He was sent, with the rest of the menagerie, to a farm, and when there had one of his mad fits. Rushing into the stable yard, in a few minutes he killed two buffaloes, a sacred cow, a couple of elks, several horses and a camel. He would seize an animal, toss it in the air, catch it on his tusks, and then either jam or trample the life out of it. He then sallied out for town, and the popular excitement can be imagined. A trap was set with a long ponderous chain, with an enormous corner-stone at its end, to entangle the animal's legs and hold him. A man then ran out in sight of Canada, and the elephant instantly rushed after him. The trap was successful, so far as making the chain and stone fast to him, but he kept right on, and would have caught the man, who was a fast runner, had not the latter jumped down into an unfinished cellar of a new house and ran up a narrow flight of steps on the opposite side. The elephant jumped down after him as easily as a dog would, with the big stone clattering after him. Fortunately, the stone was large enough to stick, wedged against the walls on each side of the stairway, and Canada was fast; but it was a close shave for the man. They managed to secure the savage animal with more chains, and then went to work to conquer him. As the account graphically describes it, "they wore out big clubs on him, fired loads of buckshot into his trunk and ears, and beat and tortured him for hours, until he howled in token of surrender." The moment he was loose, however, he gave a yell of rage, dashed out of the cellar and started to kill. Every one flew for his life; but he was tired, and took up his position under cover of three haystacks, hunting all who ventured near him. Buckshot fired into his head only checked his wild rushes, and whenever he thought people were on the other side of the stack from him he tried his best to topple the hay over on them. The fight went on for three days and nights, during which time he had not a bite to eat—for he was too angry even to take any of the hay around him—and not a drop of water. At length, despairing of saving him, the shotguns were exchanged for heavy rifles, and several big bullets at close range finally put an end to him.

Venus.

Venus is a world like our own earth, traveling in a smaller but otherwise almost similar orbit around the sun. On more minute inquiry we find that the likeness between it and our earth is in some points very great—greater in fact than in the case of any other planet. In the fundamental element of size they are almost alike, our earth being 7,900 miles in diameter and Venus 7,500. The force of gravity on the surface of the latter is very nearly nine-tenths of what it is with us. Its density is almost the same fraction as that of the earth.

These facts show that if transported to the surface of Venus we should feel more at home, so far as some essential features of experience are concerned, than any other planet known to us. We should weigh just about nine-tenths of our present weight, and should find distances bearing much the same ratio to our muscular power of walking that they do in this world; while in all probability the surface rocks and earth, if such be formed there, would be compacted and constructed like those we daily see around us. This would not be the case on planets so much smaller than the earth, as Mercury or Mars, or so much larger, as Jupiter, Saturn or Neptune. Again, the year on Venus would be about 225 days in length, a good deal more like what we have on the earth than is the case on any other planet.

In the length of the day we should find a still more homelike experience, as the difference would be imperceptible except to careful observation. Venus rotates in twenty-three hours, twenty-one minutes and twenty-three seconds, and the earth in twenty-three hours, fifty-six minutes and four seconds. The day, of course, depends a little on the motion of the sun in the sky, but the difference between this as seen on our earth and from Venus would not appreciably affect the similarity of the days in each. These likenesses to the length of our day and year, and to our world's density would cause a similarity, in all probability, in the important matters of mountain form and of vegetation. In fact, so far Venus is nearly the twin sister of the world.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

The decadence of genuine negro minstrelsy can be attributed to the abrogation of slavery, and the disappearance of those old southern plantation scenes that formed the genesis of negro minstrelsy. Harper's Magazine for June contains a review of "The Negro on the Stage," which calls to memory many of the early sensations and successes of the imitator of the negro on the boards, and our mind reverts to those famous songs which it would do the heart good to hear again, just as they were originally rendered. Barney Williams in "Dandy Jim from Caroline;" "Jack" Diamond, in his "Ethiopian breakdowns;" Thos. D. Rice, the accredited founder of Ethiopian minstrelsy, who made the "Jim Crow" song famous—

"Wheel about, turn about,
Do jis so;
An' ebery time I wheel about
I jump Jim Crow."—

"A Long Time Ago," and "Such a Getting Up Stairs;" John Smith as "Jim Along Josey." George Dixon made the houses ring with "Coal Black Rose," "Long-tailed Blue" and "Old Zip Coon." "Dan" Emmet used to do "The Essence of Old Virginia," "Lucy Walk Around," "Old Dan Tucker," "Boatman's Dauce," "Walk Along John," "Early in the Mornin'" and "Dixie." Dan Bryant, E. P. Christy, George Christy, "Eph" Horn, "Nelse" Seymour, Jerry Bryant, Billy Birch, Charley Backus, Ben Cotton, George Coes, our own Charley Rhoades, and a host of other burnt-cork artists made the welkin ring with "Nelly Bly," "Nelly was a Lady," "Oh Susanna," "Nancy Till," "Way Down on the Swanee River," "Old Folks at Home," "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground," "Old Dog Tray," "Old Uncle Ned," "Old Kentucky Home," "Abraham's Daughter," "Union Right or Wrong," etc. It is only occasionally nowadays that we catch a slight idea of what old-time minstrelsy was, from such artists as Billy Emerson or Carrol Johnson.

The Bostonians are said to be the most complete operatic organization in America. The former name of this combination was Boston Ideals. The company consists of Marie Storie, Jessie Bartlett Davis, Juliette Corden, Carlotta Maconda, Louise Bianchi, Josephine Bartlett, Tom Karl, W. H. McDonald, H. C. Barnabee, Edw. Hoff, Eugene Cowles, Geo. Frotheringham and Fred. Dixon; Oscar Weil, stage director. On Friday evening, June 14th, Mignon; Saturday June 15th, matinee, Dorothy; evening, Pygmalion and Galatea. The company had an excellent run at San Francisco. We can anticipate an operatic treat.

The Nat. C. Goodwin company is fairly balanced, but nothing above mediocrity. Nat. C. Goodwin is one of the great comedians of the age. It would seem that he could secure a wider and better field than is disclosed in the two silly farces that now form his repertoire. His inimitable art makes these exceedingly funny, but not the higher order of fun or wit or art. We expect greater things from Nat. Goodwin. Lend Me Five Shillings or Turned Up with any other than Nat. Goodwin, how long would such farces be tolerated by the public or the press.

It is authoritatively stated that a large number of ladies and gentlemen, who are literarily inclined, will, at a very early day, organize into a dramatic and literary society. This is one of the favorite objects of THEMIS, in fact was the watch-word of the first numbers, and was, indeed, the incentive of the project of launching forth into the literary world. We trust this worthy project may meet with deserved success, and we assure all the ladies and gentlemen who embark upon this grand undertaking that they will find a stalwart friend in THEMIS.

The Goodyear, Cook & Dillon Minstrels played a one night engagement on Thursday. This announcement was greatly against the company, as all such notices are looked upon with distrust. This combination is an exceedingly good one, and embraces some excellent talent. It is certain the gentlemen comprising this aggregation would soon gain public favor. Many entirely new features were introduced, artistic and pleasing.

"The Father of the Australian Drama" is George Coppin, who has been an actor and manager in Melbourne for forty-five years. During that time he has built six theaters. One of his experiments was the construction of an iron theater in Manchester, England, which was shipped in pieces to Melbourne, where it was put together and was known for years as "The Iron Pot."

There is a good story going round of a Rio de Janeiro manager who engaged no less than three artists in that city for the important post of first tenor. The three met on board ship and insisted on an explanation from their chief. They had it: "Gentlemen, in a week after landing, two of you will be dead of yellow fever. The survivor gets the work and the salary. You understand?" Tableau!

The Ivy Leaf, an Irish drama written by Con. Murphy, will be enacted at the Clunie Opera House on Monday and Tuesday evenings, by W. H. Power and his company. The play abounds in neat Irish melodies and genuine reels. The company is said to be an improvement upon the old one.

Mme. Sarah Bernhardt hopes to meet Mrs. Rives-Chanler. What if they get to rehearsing their lines at each other, or while Sarah goes into spasmodic tragic practice, the other one is struck with an inspiration and dashes off some poetry? But, then, it's no use to borrow trouble.

Binghamton Republican: It doesn't amount to anything, of course, but it's rather singular that a keen retort is usually made of blunt words.

Book Chat.

No one will pretend that there is not vicious love beneath the surface of our society; if he did, the fetid explosions of the divorce trial would refute him; but if he pretended that it was in any just sense characteristic of our society, he could be still more easily refuted. Yet it exists, and it is unquestionably the material of tragedy, the stuff from which intense effects are wrought. The question, after owning this fact, is, whether these intense effects are not rather cheap effects. We incline to think they are, and we will try to say why we think so, if we may do so without offense. The material itself, the mere mention of it, has an instant fascination; it arrests, it detains till the last word is said, and while there is anything to be hinted. This is what makes a love intrigue of some sort all but essential to the popularity of any fiction. Without such an intrigue the intellectual equipment of the author must be of the highest, and then he will succeed only with the highest class of readers. But any author who will deal with a guilty love intrigue holds all readers in his hand, the highest with the lowest, as long as he hints the hope of the smallest potential naughtiness. He need not at all be a great author; he may be a very shabby wretch, if he has but the courage or the trick of that sort of thing. The critics will call him "verile" and "passionate," decent people will be ashamed to have been lined by him; but the low average will only ask another chance of flocking into his net. If he happens to be an able writer, his really fine and costly work will be unheeded, and the lure to the appetite will be chiefly remembered. There may be other qualities which make reputations for other men, but in his case they will count for nothing. He pays this penalty for his success in that kind; and every one pays some such penalty who deals with some such material. It attaches in like manner to the triumphs of the writers who now almost form a school among us, and who may be said to have established themselves in an easy popularity simply by the study of exotic shivers and fervors. They may find their account in the popularity, or they may not; there is no question of the popularity.—Harper's Monthly.

Paul du Chaillu says that he went among the Moors a great deal and learned as much about them and their manners of life as the suspicious and unsocial character of the people would permit. But he is not going to write a book about them. "I was not there long enough," he said. "I cannot learn enough about a country and its people in a few weeks to write about them as I want to write. I must do as I did in Norway—live there. I expect to have my new book ready by October."

Amélie Rives-Chanler had a strange caller in Paris a few days ago—no less a personage than Louise Michel. The Nihilistic Parisienne has literary tastes and aspirations, and she was anxious to have the author of "The Quick or the Dead" read certain manuscript poems and pass judgment upon them. Just what Amélie said to Louise is not known, but the former confessed to a friend that she was afraid of the little Anarchiste and did not dare to refuse her request.

It is possible that Stanley, the explorer, will now confirm one of the visions of Swedenborg, who declared that in the heart of Africa dwelt the remnant of the lost tribes of Israel. Stanley holds to the opinion that somewhere in the unexplored regions of Africa there will be found white or light-colored people. This belief, it seems, was also indulged in by Livingstone. But the people must be found before we begin to speculate on their origin.

Queen Margharita, of Italy, is a most charming and accomplished woman. She writes splendid poetry, is an amateur painter of skill, and plays lawn tennis equally as well as a native of England. Besides knowing nearly all the European languages, she is deeply versed in Hebrew. Her studies in this language have brought her to take the kindest interest in the Jews.

Professional Chat.

One of the early incidents of lawlessness occurred to Hon. John H. McKune. He was one of those indomitable spirits that came to the land of gold in the days of "49," and has seen the elephant, from the end of his trunk to the tip of his tail. The incident of his career that we set out to recall will be remembered by the argonauts. During the famous squatter troubles, McKune was counsel for some of the parties who were denominated "squatters," and, as a matter of course, engendered some bitter and vengeful animosities among those whom he opposed. Among others, a man by the name of Wilson became so hostile that, while Judge McKune was in the midst of an argument in open court, the cowardly would-be assassin assailed him with a long bladed sword cane, and literally "ran him through" the chest and lungs. All supposed that such a vengeful wound would necessarily result in death, and, while McKune had ample opportunity, as well as the means at hand, to kill his supposed murderer, he generously spared him for the sake of his family. In this almost tragic event there were nearly the same features that were experienced by Chas. S. Fairfax, when he was stabbed in this city by Harvey Lee. The fates had decreed that John H. McKune should not die, and he lived to devote a life of usefulness and honor to this State. He was twice elected District Judge, once by the unanimous vote of the people of all parties. He is yet with us, enjoying a well-earned competency, the result of an honorable practice at the bar.

Arab Trephining.

Dr. A. P. Whittel, formerly of this city, where he gained some note as a specialist, writing to the Occidental Medical Times, mentions a peculiar system of trephining the skull practiced by a tribe of Arabs. We clip the following:

In Algeria, I accidentally came upon an interesting fact in connection with the practice of trephining the skull. This discovery, if it may be so called, adds but one more to the surgical procedures practised by barbarous or semi-barbarous people which we have been wont to believe are the outgrowth of the experiences and teachings of the most enlightened nations. There is, however, this difference: that the poor savage accomplishes, with the simplest and crudest of tools, that for which we require elaborate and expensive instruments. The operation in question is practised by a tribe of Arabs called the Amouchas, who inhabit a valley about eighty kilometres to the south of Bougie, in the province of Constantine. They are quarrelsome in the extreme. Their meetings and discussions invariably end in a fight. The weapon they all carry is a short, stout stick, of hard wood, with a knotty end. From words they soon come to blows and in a short time one or more skulls are fractured. The services of the trephiner are then brought into requisition, who quickly removes the depressed portion of the skull, after which the belligerents repair to the Cadi, or native judge, before whom each accuses the other of a breach of the peace. The Cadi asks for the wounded, whose heads he carefully inspects, after which he passes judgment invariably in favor of the friends of the patient who has had the largest piece of skull removed. We were unable to form any estimate, among the living, of the number operated upon, but a visit to their cemetery, where the dead are buried, as all good Musselmans are, with their heads toward the holy city of Mecca, and over which is placed a large stone which defined the position of each body, greatly facilitated our researches. Of thirteen skulls unearthed sic had been trephined. The piece of bone removed was square, varying in size from three-quarters of an inch to an inch and a quarter in diameter. The square aperture shows plainly that the operation is performed with a small flat saw, the shape of a segment of a circle. Their antipathy to strangers, especially unbelievers like ourselves, prevented me from procuring, or even seeing, one of the saws, or of witnessing the operation.

An Important Street Case.

The case of P. A. Miller vs. Eli Mayo, which involves the collection of street assessments, was on hearing before Judge Armstrong yesterday morning.

Mayo is the owner of a lot on Twelfth street, between J and K, which street was improved about two years ago by grading and graveling. He has never paid his assessment, and this suit is brought to foreclose the lien which the law gives the contractor against the property of delinquents. The work was done under the Vrooman Act of 1885, and plaintiff's action is based upon the provisions of this act. Frank D. Ryan, attorney for plaintiff, argued that under Section 12 of the Act, plaintiff, to enforce his action, was only required to set forth in his complaint the resolutions of intention, the letting of the contract, the performance of the work, the issuance of the assessment, warrant and diagram by the Street Commissioner, and the return of the contractor showing non-payment by the property holder, and no further proof was required of him than the production in evidence of the assessment, warrant, diagram and return.

Clinton L. White, attorney for Mayo, contended that it was necessary to allege and prove in detail all the preliminary steps specified in the Act which are required of the Board of Trustees and Street Commissioner up to the time of the issuance of the assessment. He raised the further objection that a contract could not be let for more than a block at a time, and that a separate contract is required for the work done on each block and street intersection. The Court took the case under advisement, with leave to each party to file points and authorities, and promised to render an opinion at an early date.

The Stevens Case.

Judge Van Fleet on Friday rendered an elaborate opinion on the matter of distribution of the estate of the late A. J. Stevens. The new and startling doctrine is announced that our laws providing for the adoption of children are unconstitutional and void. If this construction is sustained by the appellate court, the effect may have disastrous results upon the rights of children heretofore adopted and made heirs of wealthy parsons. The Judge also decrees that the failure to mention one of the children in the will does not preclude her from receiving her share of the estate. This is, of course, elementary law, but it was claimed that the mention of a child of the particular heir was such a recognition as to take the case from the rule. The Court holds otherwise, and gives May Hubbard, the heir in question, one-fourth of the estate of her father. The case is interesting, as well as important, and the whole subject matter will ultimately receive a judicial determination by the Supreme Court.

River Commission.

Hon. Chas. F. Reed was in the city yesterday, as it was understood to attend a called meeting of the River Commission. We have been unable to learn any of the particulars of the said meeting, if held. Mr. Reed went to San Francisco yesterday afternoon, before we had an opportunity to interview him. Some lively developments were anticipated at the proposed meeting, and judging from the rumors somebody would take a very hard fall when the full investigation occurred.

Our Fire Alarm.

A special meeting of the Board of Fire Commissioners was held last night for the purpose of considering the cost of the substitution of the close circuit system for the system now in use in the fire alarm. A representative of the close circuit system appeared before the Board, and explained the workings and cost of the proposed substitution. No action was taken by the Board and it will be considered at a future meeting.

Incendiarism.

Friday evening in the basement beneath the market on the K street side of the Clunie block, an ignited box of combustible material was found, and had it not been discovered in time a costly fire would have taken place. It is the opinion of those in the vicinity that this is a case of attempted incendiarism. It is understood that an official investigation will be had in the matter.

STILL CLIMBING.

San Francisco Strengthening Her Chances for the Pennant.

About fifteen hundred people attended the game between the San Franciscos and Sacramentos at Snowflake Park yesterday afternoon, and witnessed a contest replete with heavy hitting and excellent fielding. The game was nip and tuck up to the eighth inning, when the San Franciscos increased their lead by four runs, which gave them the victory. The audience at times gave vent to their feelings against the decision of umpire Van Court, and we but voice their sentiments in saying that he was decidedly off. Game was called at 3 o'clock, and no runs were scored until the opening of the second inning. Sacramento then scored on Sylvester's double, a passed ball and Hanley's wide throw to first. In the third inning, after two runners had been retired, the San Franciscos scored four runs, all owing to an inexcusable error of Newbert. Shea hit safely over short, advanced to second on Donohue's base on balls, Newbert's palpable error giving him third, and on Levy's safe hit over second he scored. Donahue received his base on balls, advanced to second on Newbert's error, and scored on Levy's safe hit. Hanley was safe on Newbert's error and reached third on Levy's hit. Levy safe on his single, stole second, and both base runners scored on Stockwell's two-bagger to left field. The inning was ended by Perrier striking out.

Sacramento increased her score in the fourth inning by five runs. Krehmeyer and Burke were each given a base on balls, and both scored on Sylvester's double to center field. Sylvester advanced to third on a passed ball and scored on Roxburg's single over second. Goodenough reached first on balls, a passed ball sent him to second, and he scored on Roxburg's hit to center. Roxburg stole second, advanced to third on Veach's force hit, and scored on Swett's throw to second to shut off a base runner. Krehmeyer ended the run-getting by flying out to Donahue. The San Franciscos also increased their score in the last half of this inning, Powers hit for a single. Swett was hit by a pitched ball, advancing Powers to second, and a passed ball advanced them both. Barry reached his first on balls, and with three men on bases Shea hit for two bags, on which they all scored. Donahue and Hanley retired the side by flying out.

In the fifth, Newbert's single, a stolen base, Sylvester's sacrifice and Hanley's error gave the Sacramento's another run. San Francisco evened up matters by a safe hit; Roxburg's high throw to second, and Perrier's scorching hit to right field giving them another run.

Roberts scored for Sacramento in the sixth; taking a base on balls, stealing a base, and scoring on Krehmeyer's hard hit to center. Donahue scored in the last of the sixth, on his single and Roxburg's wide throw over second.

Sylvester's long drive to the carriages, in the seventh, gave Sacramento another run—the last they made.

In the eighth inning San Francisco made the four runs that gave them the game. Barry's base on balls, a wide pitch, Shea's safe hit and Goodenough's fumble scored him. Shea stole second; Donohue reached first on balls, and both scored on Hanley's three-bagger to left field; Hanley scored on Roxburg's passed ball. No runs were made by either side in the ninth inning, and the game closed with San Francisco one rung higher on the championship ladder.

Following is the score:

While a car on the Central Street Railway Company was returning from the baseball grounds yesterday afternoon, at Eighteenth and M streets an express wagon was near the track. The driver supposed that the wagon was out of the way, but the horse attached to it became unmanageable and backed in front of the car. Most of the passengers jumped off; a collision occurred and two gentlemen were hurt, one quite badly.

Yesterday a Chinaman by the name of Ah Lney was before Justice Baker, accused of stealing Cooley and Stewart's chickens at Florin. It seems there was only a suspicion, based on the fact that the defendant formerly worked for them, and the tracks made were similar to those made by defendant. The evidence was not sufficient to warrant a conviction, whereupon Deputy District Attorney Brown moved a dismissal. W. A. Anderson appeared for defendant.

Style, finish and material are all of the best. A few of the lines are a gents' hand-sewed, California toe and tip; you have always paid $6.00 for this shoe; $4.50 is our price. Our new railroad shoe is a prize; it is made to wear; comes in lace, and with heavy broad extension sole; tipped toe; price, $3.00. Our new police shoe is a grand thing for the feet; laced, with broad double soles, with slip sole of rubber between the two outer soles. A Query.

EDITORS THEMIS:—Will you please insert the following in your "puzzle" department: Why is it that prominent and well-known citizens, identified with the best interests of the State, are prohibited from working their hydraulic mining claims, while, as a matter of fact, individuals of less prominence and Chinese companies are working their claims quietly but energetically and dumping their debris directly into the American river? MAN UP A TREE.

The Death of Antony.

Can it be? Are you living, my queen?
I thought I had lost you forever;
I was hurrying on to seek you
O'er Achreon's dark river.
I was rushing down death's dark way,
For this world is nothing without you;
But you live, you live, and for one last time
I can throw my arms about you.

Mine again—for a moment—no more,
For swiftly my life is flying;
All your love cannot hold me here,
I am dying, Egypt, dying.
Ah! death would be only a triumph
If we together were going;
But alone, alone, and so alone,
Is beyond all telling, all knowing.

Never—ah, never, never,
Even in Elysian meadows,
Can bliss be mine, if you are not there,
Mid that throng of thin, cold shadows.
Ah! let me not go alone!
'Tis so easy life's knot to sever;
One pang and it all is over. Come,
Let us fling off the whole world forever!

We have had our golden days,
Our triumph, our power, and our glory;
And our life, and our love, and our death
Shall be long remembered in story.
We have not hid from men's gaze,
Nor rotted in life's dull corner,
But the world has wondered and stared at us,
And the world will be our mourner.

There is nothing in life to regret,
We have plucked all its myrtles and roses;
We have seen, we have done what no others have done,
And if death now the triumph closes,
Let it come! let us welcome its coming,
Since it loosens life's tedious tether.
Fate frowns on us both; let us go, dear love,
Let us die as we lived—together.

Is it Caesar's triumph to swell
That you hesitate now and linger?
His kisses to take, his gifts to accept,
To be pointed out by Scorn's finger?
To be jeered at by Rome's foul rabble?
You, to cringe and to shrink to a master;
You, to eat the dust of his chariot wheels;
And is death, then, a worse disaster?

Ah! you shudder! Your cheeks grow pale!
I can say no more; I am dying.
This world's growing dim. Lift my head!—
one more kiss!
Oh! at least on your bosom lying,
My spirit takes flight—all is over
This life had to give, and it gave us
Its best and its sweetest; but now death is best,
Death, that comes from life's horrors to save us.

Farewell! We shall meet again soon,
I feel it, beyond the dark river.
If you stay it will be but a moment,
For life cannot last forever.
On that farther shore I shall wait,
With a love that knows no abating,
Till you come—and come soon—and reu-
ber,
I am waiting there, Egypt, waiting.
—W. W. Story.

Perfumes from Fresh Flowers.

The making of perfumes from fresh flowers seems to be attracting much attention in the south of late, and it is claimed that the production of attar of roses bids fair to become permanently established. Among processes in perfume making are those of distillation and absorption. The former is used in case of such powerful odors as will stand the necessary heat; the latter for the more delicate flowers of which heat impairs the perfume. The latter process has been described as follows: Wooden frames with rims a few inches wide are used. In these are set sheets of glass, each of which is spread with a layer of pure fat. Over this fat are spread the petals from which perfume is to be extracted. The sheets of glass are piled one upon another in the frame; the frame is slid into a tight box, where it remains until the odor of the petals is all absorbed by the fat. The fat is then cut up and put into alcohol, which in turn absorbs the perfume. Purified lard or tallow is said to be the fat used. Another method reported is that of saturating cloths with olive oil and spreading the petals upon them. After the perfume is absorbed the cloths are put into a press and the perfumed oil pressed out.

A Russian navy officer has invented a method of searching the sea or coast by night, which does not reveal the position of the ship. A mortar fires a buoyant shell containing a compound, which ignites on reaching the water and lights up the surrounding area. This gives promise of being more useful in cases of wreck than in warfare.

Two young Africans were one day fishing from a wharf, when one of them fell into the water and was drowned. The survivor's grief was so uproarious that a sympathetic bystander inquired if the drowned boy was a relation. "No," said he, through his tears, "he wasn't no relation, but he mout's well been—he had all de bait."—Harper's Monthly.

Familiar Quotations.

Dean Swift is credited with "Bread is the staff of life."
It was Keats said: "A thing of beauty is a joy forever."

Franklin is authority for "God helps those who help themselves."
"Man proposes but God disposes," remarked Thomas A. Kempis.

It was an observation of Thomas Sothorn that "Boys akin to love."
"All cry and no wool!" is an expression found in Butler's "Hudibras."

Edward Coke, the English jurist, was of the opinion that "A man's house is his castle."

We are indebted to Colley Cibber, not to Shakespeare, for "Richard is himself again."

"Variety's the spice of life" and "Not the much the worse for wear" were coined by Cowper.

"When Greek joins Greek then was the tug of war" was written by Nathaniel Lee in 1602.

Edward Young tells us "Death loves a shining mark," and "A fool at 40 is a fool indeed."

Charles Pinckney gave the patriotic sentiment, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute."

"Of two evils I have chosen the least," and "The end must justify the means," are from Matthew Prior.

To Milton we owe "The paradise of fools," "A wilderness of sweets," and "Moping melancholy and moonstruck madness."

The poet Campbell found that "Coming events cast their shadows before," and "Tis distance lends enchantment to the view."

Christopher Marlowe gave fourth the invitation so often repeated by his brothers in a less public way, "Love me little, love me long."

To Dr. Johnson belongs "A good hater," and to MacIntosh, in 1701 the phrase, often attributed to John Randolph, "Wise and masterly inactivity."

Thomas Tasser, a writer of the sixteenth century, said: "It's an ill wind turns no good," "Better late than never," "Look ere thou leap" and "The stone that is rolling gathers no moss."

"First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his fellow-citizens" (not his countrymen) appeared in the resolutions presented to the House of Representatives in December, 1799, by General Henry Lee.—New York Telegram.

Oil on Troubled Waters.

The value of oil to mariners is again proven by the experience of the United States steamer "Yantic," which came within an ace of going to the bottom with all on board. Had the vessel gone down there would have been only two boats to hold 140 men, the rest of the boats having been swept away; and the use of oil to subdue the angry waves therefore averted a terrible disaster. As soon as the oil was poured on the water the sea surrounding the vessel appears to have subsided, and it is probable that if the oil had been used sooner there would have been much less damage done. Some few obstinate sea captains still sneer at the use of oil in a rough sea, and claim that it is of little aid to a vessel; but this class is fortunately thinning out. Oil is so cheap that the experiment costs practically nothing, and with the repeated proofs of its usefulness no ocean vessel should leave port without a liberal supply for an emergency.

An Alabama man charged with stealing a calf made the following statement: "I was always taught to be honest, an' most always have been, but when I seed the calf I caved. I never wanted a calf so bad in all my life, an' you all know that when a man wants a calf he wants him." The jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, are satisfied that Steve stole the calf, but, as the feller that owned the animal is considerable of a slouch, we agree to clear Steve and make the slouch pay the costs."

The white Episcopalians of Virginia, by a vote of nearly two to one, have decided to exclude colored delegates from the diocesan convention. It is well for the colored brethren that the white Episcopalians will not have the controlling vote in the New Jerusalem.

Our later singers vaunt their new-tuned lays, Doubling, they say, the world's poetic store. We turn to pages writ in Shakespeare's days, And lo! the songs have all been sung before.

—M. A. De Wolfe Howe, Jr.

The labor troubles in Europe appear to have spread from Germany to Austria. Ten thousand miners at Saar, in Austria, are on a strike, and all the tramway roads in the city of Prague are suffering from a strike of their employes.

Miss Carrie Golden, recently graduated from a Chicago medical school, is a colored woman. Southern democrats who deplore the enfranchisement of the negroes would do well to paste the above in their hats.

Winning a Widow.

He gazed around the cheerful and comfortable looking apartment, then addressing the widow, he said:

"Your husband's been dead over a year now?"

"Yes," she answered with a gentle sigh, "over a year."

"I remember reading his obituary," he said, "and I thought that it contained a misstatement of facts."

"A misstatement of facts?"

"Yes; it is said that he has gone to a better home. In my opinion it would be impossible for him to find a more cheerful, a more comfortable, and, with you in it, a more charming and desirable home than this."

The widow smiled sweetly, then he popped and was accepted.

A story comes from South Carolina that the more ignorant of the colored people down there believe that the white men make castor oil from the blood of negroes whom a strange doctor, who can at will make himself invisible, captures and bleeds. It is said that for this reason these people would rather die than take a dose of castor oil. We do not see why the colored people should be permitted to monopolize all the comforting beliefs of the world. There are intelligent white men all over this country who, when a dose of castor oil is put under their noses, would give half they are worth for a good, reasonable belief of this sort.

On Tuesday morning James H. Burnham and C. L. Ecklon left for a visit to the head waters of the Cosumnes river. They intended to put in their time fishing on Park creek, and no doubt have been enjoying themselves immensely.

During the past few days large numbers of salmon have gone up the river to spawn. Great numbers of them have attempted to go over the dam near the prison, and several have succeeded. They are continually jumping out of the water, and some of them have been caught in going over. As they will not bite well when on the run, it is pretty hard to hook them.

Custom is a violent and treacherous school mistress. She, by little and little, slyly and unperceived, slips in the foot of her authority, but having by this gentle and humble beginning, with the benefit of time, fixed and established it, she then unmasks a furious and tyrannic countenance, against which we have no more the courage or the power so much as to lift our eyes.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, JUNE 16, 1889.

No. 17.

THEMIS: published weekly, by A. J. Johnston & Co. Publication Office, 410 J Street. Subscription—One year, by mail, $3 00; six months, by mail, $1 50, in advance; per month, by carrier, 25 cents. (Entered at the Post Office at Sacramento as second-class matter.)

The murder of Cronin in Chicago is one of the most sensational that has happened for years. It is sensational not from the fact that a man was slain, but because of the motive which led to his destruction. In the lengthy verdict of the coroner's jury occur the following findings, which carry with them deep significance:

That the evidence shows conclusively to all our minds that the plot or conspiracy was formed by a number of persons for the purpose of murdering Cronin and concealing his body. Said plot or conspiracy was deliberately contrived and cruelly executed.

It is our judgment that no other person or persons, except some of those who are or who had been members of a certain secret society, known as the "United Brotherhood," or "Cian-na-Gael," had cause to be the instigators or executors of such a plot or conspiracy to murder Cronin.

Many of the witnesses testifying in the case have done so with evident unwillingness, and, we believe, with much mental reservation.

We further state that this plot or conspiracy, in its conception and execution, is one of the most foul and brutal that has ever come to our knowledge, and we recommend that the proper authorities offer a large reward for the discovery and apprehension of all those engaged in it in any way.

We further state that, in our judgment, all secret societies, whose objects are such as the evidence shows that of the Clan-na-Gael or the United Brotherhood to be, are not in harmony with, and are injurious to American institutions.

We have no doubt that the findings of the jury were made only after the most searching investigation, and that the killing of Cronin was but another instance of political murder.

We deprecate the organization and maintenance here of any secret society, the object of which is to bear upon politics in the United States; we condemn any such organization which has reference to the political affairs of any foreign country. In the expression of this sentiment we but voice the opinion of almost every man born on American soil, and that of every man of foreign birth who, in good faith, took the oath of allegiance to our government.

We believe that when a man holds up his right hand in an American court and solemnly swears that he will renounce and abjure forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign power, and particularly to the ruling power of the country from whence he came, that he should do so without any reservation. Under the liberal laws of this country he is placed on the same footing with one born among us.

We are not to be understood as intimating that as a rule naturalized citizens do not thoroughly renounce their allegiance to foreign powers, and that they do not appreciate the advantages they receive from American naturalization. It has, however, been unfortunate that some of the adopted foreigners have proved a disturbing element in the country. The unanimous verdict of all good citizens is that we should speedily rid ourselves of them, and we do not imagine that a resort to extreme measures by the people in their primary capacity in such aggravating instances as the Haymarket murders in Chicago and the present case would meet with particular condemnation. We are not yet disposed to forgive the governor of Illinois for his reprieve of any of the persons who had been convicted for participation in the anarchist assassinations; we believe they all should have been hanged.

The society, whose members it seems participated in the killing of Cronin, is one whose object is to in some manner help out the "cause of Ireland." It is much to be regretted, for the sake of the better element of the Irish people both here and in the old country, that so many of these disgraceful exhibitions have happened here, in which persons of that nationality were the leaders. We had an instance in San Francisco a few years ago, when Kearney secured a mob following, and for a time the people of that great metropolis were apparently awed. This fellow in his public harangues threatened that with his followers he would blow up the docks of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; that he would apply the torch to the residences of the owners of the overland railroad; he suggested that unless they made certain conciliations to his mob, he would visit death upon them. The result was a paralysis of the business of the coast, and all improvements involving the investment of any considerable amount of capital were checked. Advantage was taken of the situation by a horde of political demagogues, and in many instances they succeeded on this despicable capital to ride into office. Until 1885, the business interests were in so great a state of uncertainty that no progress was made. The working classes suffered more than any other; the result has always been that labor is the more injured when a blow is struck at employing capital.

Let any intelligent man contrast the progress this State has made since 1885 with the era of depression that was brought about by the Kearney agitation. When the cloud was removed our own capital became confident and eastern capital poured in; millions have been added to our taxable wealth, and our population has been largely increased by the immigration of a desirable element from the other States. Cities have been built, railroad lines constructed, and the hum of the wheels of industry is heard throughout the land. Prosperity reigns; all classes are being enriched.

Looking at the matter generally as we do, as a citizen of the United States, with no relatives in any foreign land that we care to pension on this country, it seems strange that any element of the Irish here does not feel humiliated that the country from whence they came has been for the past fifty years and more inflicting itself upon the world in the light of a "poor relation," and that the wail of wrong and poverty has been sounding in the ears of the people in this country for so long a time that it has become unpleasantly familiar. The people of the United States, it should be recollected, have taken excellent care of the Irish who have come here and affiliated with us.

A writer in Century directs attention to the danger of the absolute destruction of the American forests. All the great forests of this continent have been nearly denuded except those of the Pacific coast, which, while they "stand guard around the sources of the rivers, their flow is as everlasting as the hills themselves." Let these guardians be removed, and it not only destroys a great commercial commodity, but withdraws the elements of our valley culture. The mountain forests cover the hills with rooted fibres which hold in place the ever-accumulating mass of decomposing vegetation, which absorbs the rainfall and melting snows. These forests are a natural sponge which receives all the water of the mountains and allows it to escape gradually into the streams and outlets. Now, when these forests are removed this great sponge is destroyed and there is nothing to hold back the water, whereupon this mold or mass must, perforce, be washed into the streams, denuding the mountain of all fertilizing power, and filling up the streams with debris. The American forests should be protected also from the waste and vandalizing work of a few rapacious men who only look to the present accumulation of a few dollars by this wanton destruction. A visit now to any of our great forests in the Sierras or Coast Range, will convince the most skeptical that there has been a wanton disregard for the protection of our forests. Some of those magnificent trees have been felled just to secure a few choice cuts for some temporary purpose, and the great body allowed to decay unused. Splendid young trees are ruthlessly sacrificed to make flag-staffs, or fence posts. The legislature has attempted to remedy this evil by appointing commissions, but it seems that no good results from these, and the wanton destruction of our forests still keeps its pace. The Century writer suggests a national commission, with full powers to adopt measures for protection. The scheme is deserving of favorable consideration. Something must be done, else the American forest will be a thing of the past.

Because a circle of would-be moulders of fashion in Paris have assumed the responsibility of ostracizing the handsome dress coat so peculiar to Americans, and with a vein of satire call it "spike tail," "claw hammer," etc., is no reason why the press of this country should accept this decree. While all fashions may have their origin in the gay French capitol, yet this time-honored American article of dress is above and beyond any decree emanating from that or any other quarter of the globe. It was urged as one of the reasons for relegating the dress coat, that waiters at receptions wore them, and it was sometimes difficult to distinguish the waiter from the guest or gentleman. This was only a feeble arraignment of the dress coat to make room for the many colored garments intended to replace the dress coat. At no time has there ever been any difficulty in ascertaining the true standing of the wearer of the dress coat. It is true many wear them on state occasions and in society who have very little claim to the title of gentleman, but that is no reason why they should be abandoned. The same could and would be said of the wearer of the substitute.

"The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
And man's the gold for a' that."

Let Uncle Sam stick to his dress coat, and let the gay Frenchman have his many-colored coat to himself.

Through some inadvertence, we omitted to mention (at the time) the advent of THEMIS into the California world of news and literature. Themis of old was the goddess of law, but this particular THEMIS is that bright, sparkling and thoroughly well edited Sunday morning paper which hails from the State capital. And we are glad, for once, to be able to depart from the usual stock of phrases and perfunctory adjectives in use for new enterprises of this kind by saying that, editorially it shows brains in conception, scholarship in expression, and clear grit in declaration. It has opinions, and utters them in chaste and elegant language, but rides no hobbies. It is eminently clean—free from that immoral, pestilential effluvia which rises steaming hot from the pages of the metropolitan Sunday paper. It justly deserves a strong support.—Colusa Herald.

This has been a year of disasters. Scarcely had the news of the Samoan catastrophe become recorded than the fearful destruction of Johnstown occurred. The loss of life and property by the latter calamity is not paralleled in the chronicles of history. Herculaneum and Pompeii were buried by an eruption of Vesuvius, and thousands lost. The terrible convulsions of nature which overtook Lisbon killed 40,000 people. An earthquake at Yun Nan, China, about two years ago, destroyed about 15,000 persons. In the same year the Yellow river, in China, flooded the valley, and something like 100,000 persons lost their lives, and hundreds of thousands were rendered homeless. In 1883, Java was visited by an earthquake which destroyed untold numbers of lives and vast amounts of property. One town was totally swallowed up; the estimated loss of life was 80,000 souls. The Island of Ischia; it only was shaken by an earthquake and 4,000 lives lost. Chio, Greece, had the same experience with loss of 5,000 souls. A convulsion in Turkey, in 1883, caused the loss of 1,000 lives. Fearful cyclones visited France in 1884, as well as parts of England, destroying much property and a number of lives. In 1883, there were great floods in Germany and Hungary, sweeping away millions of property and hundreds of lives. In 1885, Spain had a fearful experience of an earthquake, in which fifteen towns were destroyed with a loss of $100,000,000 of property and about 3,000 lives. Greece and some of the islands have been recently visited by earthquakes, and many lives lost and much property destroyed. The South Carolina visitation startled the people of this country, although the loss of life was small. The Mill-river flood, about fifteen years ago, was a trifle in comparison with the terrible floods of Johnstown. When all is over, and there is no good reason for the occurrence of this fearful catastrophe, we naturally ask why are people so careless of their own lives and property? The fearful cyclones that visit portions of this country cannot be foreseen or averted, but such a disaster as befel Johnstown might have been foreseen and averted.

That was hide bound Christianity at Pittsburg which prevented the presentation of a volunteer drama on Sunday for the benefit of the starving victims of the late disaster in their own State. We have no patience with such bigotry and intolerance. These alleged Christians might learn something by following the Savior's saying, when he spoke of helping the ox out of the pit on the Sabbath. We have some of this class of alleged Christians in this city. Such narrow and unnatural ideas are not in accord with any divine law or Christian principle. What is natural, reasonable, just, humane, are the precepts of true religion?

THE PRISON BRIGS.

"Themis" Straightens Out Their History—Interesting Historical Data.

In our last issue we stated that we were amused at the blunders of the Sunday Union when it dealt with the early history of this locality, and intimated that we were perhaps more familiar with the files of their paper than its editors were themselves. In its last number our contemporary prints a two column history of what it terms "The Old Prison Brig." The matter is introduced as follows:

There are few persons in or about Sacramento who have not heard of "the old prison brig," a craft that lay moored at the river bank in front of this city for many years following 1849, and not a few now living here remember well the old hulk that in early days was used as the city jail. The "Roger Williams" (for that was her name when she was an ocean rover) cut a very important figure during the squatter riots, when many men, who were then and have since been prominent in social and public affairs, were imprisoned therefor for the parts they took in that memorable local civil war. Many years ago the craft succumbed to the ravages of time and the corroding influences of the elements, and went to her grave at her moorings. Down deep in the sands and debris washed from the far Sierras, she lies buried out of sight, and the waters of the Sacramento roll over her on their way to the sea, murmuring their never-ceasing funeral dirge.

Our contemporary is again grievously in error. What follows it abstracted bodily from an article published in the Union on May 31, 1859, which had reference to a ship which was used as a prison ship at Monterey in 1840, long before there was any Sacramento city. If the editors of the Sunday Union had read the introductory to the article they pilfered they would have found that what the writer of thirty years ago had reference to was not the prison brig used here. The introductory note to the article printed in the Union in 1859 is as follows:

The designation of this time-worn and weather-beaten hulk as the old prison ship, will place before him (the reader), no doubt, an object quite venerable, and, from an outside view, interesting—one with which he has been familiar, if a citizen of Sacramento, for many years. The prison brig, at her rusty moorings, whose sides have been washed by the winter rains and blistered by the summer suns—rising and falling in our spring freshets and autumn low water—through nearly ten years of eventful city life, has of itself a history as the convict's floating home, which it would be interesting to hear. Once, within her rocking walls, we remember the man who was afterwards renowned as the first "Free State Governor of Kansas," was immured. But the prison ship of our present story, was the miserable cell of forty-seven Americans and Englishmen, citizens of California, before nineteen-twentieths of our population had ever given a detached thought to the existence of such a region as that which they now inhabit; before the builders and former owners of the vessel, whose hulk is now used as our city prison, were aware, perchance, that California was an inhabitable country for white men.

If our contemporary has any doubt that we cannot maintain our statement that it has made an unpardonable blunder, we invite attention to the issue of the Sacramento Union of November 18, 1859, which contains an account of the formation of bars in the river and the consequent settling of the "prison brig" on the subsidence of the water. The next day the same paper reported, as a matter of news, that at about 6 o'clock in the morning of the preceding day the officers were aroused by the cry of the prisoners that the vessel was sinking. The paper stated that the water flowed in freely and partially flooded the cells beneath the deck; that the prisoners were removed to the deck and closely watched until about 4 P. M., when they were transferred to the station-house. In that item the name of the "prison brig" is given as "La Grange." We have in our possession an authority, which we believe to be entirely trustworthy, from which the following is taken:

The first ship ever used in Sacramento as a "prison brig" was the bark "Strafford," which was moored in the Sacramento river, opposite the foot of I street. She arrived here from New York in 1849. While lying at the foot of O street she was sold at auction by J. B. Starr, and, though the bark had cost $50,000, she was knocked down to C. C. Hayden for $3,750. Immediately after the purchase, Hayden sold three-quarters interest to Charles Morrill, Captain Isaac Derby and — Whiting. In March, 1850, they rented the vessel to the county for a "prison brig." On the 25th of May, 1850, the others sold out their interest to Charles Morrill, who intended the bark for a trader between San Francisco and Panama. The craft was loaded at the levee, but so badly was the cargo stowed she nearly capsized on reaching the bay of San Francisco. She finally got to sea under the command of Lieutenant Wade, U. S. N., who took charge at the rate of $300 per month, when other parties were demanding $500. The "Strafford" never returned to San Francisco. Captain Wade proved incompetent, for he entirely lost his reckoning and knew not where his vessel was till she was dashed to pieces on the rocks at the entrance to Realejo. The "Strafford" having departed, the county soon after purchased the bark "La Grange," which had arrived in California from Salem, Mass. She was moored about opposite the foot of H street. When the first freshet of the high water of 1861-62 came on the "prison brig," pulled heavily at her moorings, and the water came in so rapidly through the open seams that it was only by great exertions and rapid action the prisoners were removed from the hold to a place of safety in the city jail. The "La Grange" filled and sank right there at her anchors. Sand and sediment filled her hold and cabin and collected in great quantities about her. Being sold at auction, she was purchased by T. A. Talbert, who, at quite a profit, disposed of her to a company of Chinese. These Celestials went actively to work pegging away at the carcass of the old bark, which had braved the tempest and the storm so often, and, if any of her remains were not carried off by them they are in the deep bosom of the sand-bank buried. Since the foundering of the "La Grange" the Sacramento jail has never been afloat.

The "Roger Williams," for many years lay near the foot of J street, and she was one of the many old hulks that were dismantled and used for purposes of storage, etc. In this connection we might state that one of these hulks sank about two hundred yards above the mouth of the old American river, on the south bank, and there is perhaps twenty feet of soil now over her. Another is imbedded in made land on the Yolo side, about opposite the residence of C. W. Reed. Perhaps in years to come, in the course of some excavations, they may be discovered. If the discovery should be made during the existence of our contemporary, it will not be surprising if its conclusion will be that they had been constructed by the Aztecs in pre-historic days, and that they might furnish some clue as to what became of that remarkable people. We have to repeat that when our contemporary deals with early history, with the wealth of information that it has in its files, it should be correct, particularly when the article they republish thirty years afterward distinctly states that it has no reference to the "prison brig" of Sacramento.

The Penal Aspects of Suicide.

Suicide is defined by the New York Penal Code as "the intentional taking of one's own life."

Many of the ancient writers claim that, from a moral and religious point of view, suicide need not always be considered as an act of turpitude or as a crime.

Seneca is often called the ablest champion of suicide among the ancients. He says in one of his epistles: "Does life give you pleasure? Live. Does it not? Go whence you came. No large wound is needed; a little prick will free you."

Buckle wrote that "Suicide is merely a product of the general condition of society; in a given state of society a certain number of persons must put an end to their own life."

Rousseau, in his "Nouvelle Heloise," says: "The more I reflect upon suicide the more I find that the question reduces itself to this fundamental proposition: To see one's own good and avoid one's own harm is, in that which hurts not another, the law of nature."

These writers introduce into their arguments the false premise that suicide is not an injury to others.

ANCIENT LAWS ABOUT SUICIDE.

The Grecian Areopagus and the magistrates of the island of Ceos had discretionary power to permit suicide.

Justinian said it was lawful to commit suicide, provided the State or public treasury was not affected thereby.

In Thebes no funeral rights were granted the felo de se, and his memory was branded with infamy.

In Athens the hand of the self-murderer was cut off and buried apart from his body, which was also immediately buried without being burned.

During the reign of Tarquin, the Roman authorities exposed the bodies of suicides upon crosses for birds of prey to feast on.

A standard authority on ancient Jewish laws says: "If any one shall commit suicide, there shall be no mourning, nor keriah (rending of garments), nor any office performed in honor of the dead."

ENGLISH LAWS ON SUICIDE.

Suicide was first pronounced a mortal sin at the Council of Arles in the year 452.

In 967, under King Edward, a law was promulgated classifying suicides with robbers and traitors, and visiting the same punishment upon each. This law was reaffirmed at the Council of Nimes in 1184.

In the last century it became a common practice in England to inter a suicide at a cross road, and drive a stake through his body. The last case of cross-road burial is stated to have taken place in the year 1823, at the intersection of Grosvenor place and King's road in the city of London.

By chapter 52 of the 4th volume of Statutes of George IV, this law was altered so that suicides were permitted burial, if done without religious rites and between 9 and 12 P. M.

In England an attempt to commit suicide is a misdemeanor. (6 Cox C. C., 463.)

If a woman takes poison to produce a miscarriage, and death ensues, she is guilty of self-murder, and the one who furnished her with the poison is accessory before the fact. (Rose, Cr. Ev., 777.)

In 1879 a statute was adopted that for an attempt to commit this crime a British officer was cashiered, a private soldier imprisoned.

AMERICAN SUICIDE LAWS.

In 1660 the Colonial Legislature of Massachusetts enacted that some suicide should be interred in some common highway and a cartload of stones laid upon the grave as a brand of infamy (Mass. Col. Law, 1672, 137).

In Massachusetts an attempt to commit suicide is not indictable (105, Mass., 162).

In New York and a number of the other States forfeiture of goods in the case of suicides is by statute expressly abolished.

An attempt to commit suicide is in New York punished by imprisonment not exceeding two years, or by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both.

The general term of the Supreme Court has curiously decided that while the attempt to commit suicide is a crime, still, if the attempt is successful, it is not a crime, but only a grave public wrong (3 N. Y. State Reports, 745).

ASSISTING A SUICIDE.

It has been held in England that if two persons agree to kill themselves, and one survives, the survivor is guilty of murder (Russ. and Ry., 523).

In Arkansas assisting another to commit suicide is murder (Code, 1523). In California aiding, advising or encouraging one to do so is a felony. In Kansas it is manslaughter in the first degree. In Massachusetts it is murder. New York has no statute on the subject.

The coward sneaks to death, the brave live on.

Georgia Justice.

In Georgia a justice of the peace receives no salary, but is dependent solely upon "costs" for the emoluments of office. Consequently it is a position not sought by the highest order of talent, and instances of "justices' justice" are not of such rare occurrence as might be desired. The following is vouched for as a true story:

Mr. M——, a farmer living near a middle Georgia town, one day found an estray cow in his pasture. Shortly afterward a negro called, and, claiming the cow, was told that if he would produce satisfactory proof of ownership he might take her. Next to water-melons and 'possums, the Georgia negro is fondest of a lawsuit; to sue and be sued gives him a realizing sense of the dignity of citizenship. Here was an opportunity not to be lost; and so, instead of satisfying M—— that the cow really belonged to him, which he easily could have done, the negro consulted a young attorney in town, and was advised to take out a possessory warrant for the animal. This was accordingly done, and in due time the case came on for trial before the local magistrate. M—— came into court, disclaimed ownership or right of possession and turned the cow over to the bailiff to be disposed of as the court should direct.

After a lengthy argument by the "counsel for the plaintiff" (the negro requires that his physician shall administer allopathic doses), the court announced that as the case was one deserving of careful consideration, he would reserve his decision until 10 o'clock the following morning.

Promptly at the appointed hour the negro, accompanied by his counsel and a number of interested spectators, entered the court-room. The magistrate ascended the split bottomed seat of justice, adjusted his spectacles, arranged the code and form book in order on his table, and delivered ex cathedra the following opinion:

"This case involves a point of considerable importance, about which the court don't find nothing laid down in the code. There ain't no doubt 'bout the cow belongin' to the nigger, and the court decides that point in his favor. But who's liable for the costs? According to law the party losin' the case must pay the costs. Who air the parties to this suit? In every case there must be two parties—a plaintiff and a defendant. Now it's clear the nigger's the plaintiff, but who the defendant? Mr. M—— can't be the defendant because he didn't claim the cow, and didn't make a defense to this suit. This leaves the nigger and the cow as the only real parties before the court, and the nigger bein' the plaintiff the cow must be the defendant. The plaintiff havin' won the case, the defendant is liable for the costs. Mr. Bailiff, I direct you to hold the cow until the costs air paid."—Harper's Monthly.

David Dudley Field says we have too many lawyers. There are 70,000 of them in the United States, 11,000 in the State of New York alone. France has 6,000 and Germany 7,000. Compare populations and see the immense percentage America has over any other country on the globe.

The United States has no reason to be ashamed of her exhibit of general machinery at the big French exposition; and she has great reason to be proud of her complete and valuable exhibit of curious and interesting electrical machines of all sorts. In matters electric, as well as in several other things, the Yankees lead the world.

Celery acts upon the nervous system, and is a cure for rheumatism and neuralgia. Tomatoes stimulate the liver, and spinach and the common dandelion (prepared in the same way) have a direct effect on diseases of the kidney. Onions, garlic and olives promote digestion by stimulating the circulatory system, with the consequent increase of the saliva and gastric juice. Raw onions are also regarded as a remedy for sleeplessness, and the French believe that onion soup is an excellent tonic in cases of debility of the digestive organs.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Miss Maye Kewen, with her company of drilled young ladies and other attractions, will give an entertainment at the Clunie Opera House to-morrow evening for the benefit of the Johnstown sufferers.

Some envious creatures, who desire to pull down Sybil Sanderson from her well-earned position on the operatic stage, are circulating scandals concerning herself and the author of the opera in which she scored such a success. All such calumnies will fall harmless.

Lost in Africa, a spectacular melodrama adapted from the French, by Howard P. Taylor, is one of the novelties promised for next season. The new play will be given with elaborate scenic and mechanical effects, including a realistic and sensational shipwreck in mid-ocean.

The Bostonians have given us Mignon, Dorothy and Pygmalion and Galatea to excellent houses, and in a most artistic manner. The orchestra was fine and rendered full support to the artists on the stage. Miss Juliette Corden has a clear, sweet, flexible voice that at once won her favor. Miss Marie Stone and Miss Bartlett Davis are both artists of the first order. Karl, Cowles, Hoff and McDonald have rich and melodious voices of fine register. While this combination is not great, it has great merit, and every member of the company seems impressed with the desire to please the public. It is refreshing to have such clean and palatable music and dramatic work.

A number of ladies and gentlemen met at the Court-room of Department Two on Tuesday evening for the purpose of organizing a dramatic and literary association. A temporary organization was effected by selecting W. A. Anderson, President; Horace Crocker, Secretary; and E. B. Carroll, Treasurer. After some general discussion of the objects of the association, an adjournment was taken until Tuesday, June 18th, at Court-room of Department Two, at which time a permanent organization will be made, permanent officers elected and by-laws adopted. The great object of life is to be amused, and such an association not only serves to amuse the public, but at the same time instructs and amuses its own membership. We wish the enterprise success.

Mrs. D. P. Bowers, the great tragic actress, was asked the following, and gave answer thus: "What stands in the way of the best acting?" "The degeneration of the stock company into road combinations. In the former the company remains in one place. Plays revolve, change every night, sometimes two a night. Several stars take part on the same stage, and the company has the advantage of observing and studying the best models and exercising their talents in a variety of styles. The 'combination' runs one play for an entire season. The heavy villain, the good father, the bad mother, the ingenue daughter remain cast in their several molds through a year, then scatter, never to see each other again. This makes an actor a copyist, not an artist; an expresser of one single individuality, not a master of the art of expression. You can perceive the dignity of one over the other. It has, however, for the audience the advantage of easting parts with a greater consistency. In a stock company a tragedy queen may be called on to play barmaid or a soubrette to act 'Lady Macbeth.' The other way makes better plays, but poorer actors, you see."—New York Sun.

Book Chat.

Ignatius Donnelly has been appointed an insurance agent at Minneapolis. This is in accord with his cheek.

The gossips have it that Mr. Howell's next novel will tell of a romantic courtship on one of the ocean steamships, and what makes the preliminary gossip more interesting is the insinuation that much of the story is or will be founded on fact.

The Baroness Gripenburg has started a woman's rights paper in Finnish, called Home and Society. Besides the woman question it treats of temperance and the higher education. The men are aghast, but the baroness says it is American and progressive for women to edit newspapers, and having the means to publish it she sees no reason why she should not make the women of her country acquainted with her twentieth century ideas.

A physician named James Coates, Ph. F. A. S., has published a manual of instructions in the mode of procedure and arts of mesmerism, and how to give entertainments. The difference between hypnotism and animal magnetism is shown. From a medical standpoint as well as the interests of the public this wonderful power should be circumscribed rather than enlarged, and ignorant people should not be taught to exercise this power, as the subjects are weakened and in many instances the experiments produce insanity. It would be better if no such books were published.

"Memorial Edition" of Dr. A. W. Chase's last complete Household Physician and Recipe Book has been laid on our table by the general agent of the work, A. W. Bleil. For a great many years Dr. Chase was engaged in gathering valuable information and knowledge, much of which has been heretofore published in various forms. Several years before his death he conceived the idea of presenting the result of his life labor in an elaborate book form, and this Memorial Edition is the result of that labor. The book contains valuable and new recipes in every department of medicine, mechanics, household economy, and particularly diseases of women and children, and can be called a book for the millions. Neatly bound in cloth, and published by B. B. Dickerson & Co., Detroit, Mich. Price $3.

Dante, the illustrious Italian poet, was born May 27, 1265, at Florence. He studied at Rome, Padua, Bologna and Paris. He was skilled in music, philosophy, painting and other arts. His first wife inspired him with poetic fervor. Upon her death he was persuaded to marry again. This was a fatal error, as he married a shrew; and the result, a separation. There were struggles between the Guelphs and Ghiblins, and he sided with the former and was sentenced perpetual banishment for his partisanship. He wandered through Italy suffering from poverty and affliction—not unlike his great predecessor, Homer—occasionally securing the aid of princes to relieve his wants. He died at Ravenna September 14, 1321. It was not until after his death that his great and sublime poem "The Divine Comedy" appeared. As, like many other great men, his virtues were only discovered after death. Honor only comes after we are dead.

Quida says that no man or woman is capable of writing more than four or five really able works of fiction. If she could be permitted to see the lamenting, lonely letters which some married men send daily to their wives out of town, bewailing their lonely lot, she might change her mind.

Fanny Kemble is announced as having written a novel in her old age. More than fifty years ago Fanny Kemble was the boast of all England for her beauty and fascination upon the stage, and in this country she moved the youthful Charles Sumner to an enthusiastic admiration which he never expressed for any other woman. Fanny disliked the stage always, and she left it early. She married a Philadelphia man, moved with him to Georgia to be mistress of a plantation of negroes, quarreled with her husband, and came to live at Lenox, where she used to course through the country on horseback in masculine costume. Mrs. Kemble is a woman of marked literary talent, and she should find the material for an effective novel in her own experience.

The Devil and I, a story which recalls the good old tales of the Bastille and its horrors. The devil in this book is a man, though the author says that "He is not a man, he is a devil; a devil who 'stole the livery' of man, in which to play the villain." His implacable hatred of the heroine who becomes his powerless victim through his hypnotic influence over her, and who, at his bidding, ruins the happiness of those who love her and her own, forms the plot of the story which is supposed to have been written in the dark cell of a private asylum "for the insane" in New York, whose director, with accommodating hyper-scientific diagnosis, manages to discover madness in whosoever is brought to him. A devil, indeed, is the villain of this story whose unrelenting cruelty prolongs the sufferings of the object of his hatred infinitely, and who constantly strikes her through those most dear, while forcing her to play an active part in bringing their misery about.

Some of our more finished and classic writers are trying to discourage the quaint and dialect style as not literary and not in accord with the idea of good, pure writing. It would be a novel arrangement of the various characteristics of human nature, as well as classes, nationalities and the peculiar notions and expressions of the different people of our own country, if we should put the same form of language and expression in the mouths of such when speaking of them or describing their modes of speech or customs. All romance would be robbed of its charm if every character spoke in the same measured tone and style. The Irishman, German, Frenchman, Negro, Yankee, all having a marked dialect and idiom natural to each, would in a description of some scene where each formed a part of the story, be very flat and unnatural if their speeches were reported by the writer in accord with staid rules of grammar and orthography, entirely disregarding their dialect and actual mode of expression. What idea could we get of the old backwoodsman, the old-time miner, the man about town, the down-east Yankee, the old darkey, or in fact any peculiarity of class or nationality, if no dialect or idiom was given? Our high-toned and purely classical writers must give way to the realities of life, and true pictures of things and men as they are.

Professional Chat.

Recently the Supreme Court allowed three days for the argument of a somewhat celebrated case—the attorneys on each side to divide their half of the time among themselves as they pleased. It was announced that three lawyers would address the Court on behalf of the appellant. On the third day Judge McKinstry commenced the second argument for appellant; and it was generally understood that he would leave part of the remaining time for G. R. B. Hayes, who would close the argument. But when the Judge had occupied a good deal more than half of the time, and was still in the midst of his address, it began to look as though but little, if any, time would be left for Hayes. Thereupon a gentleman in court wrote and handed to a neighbor these lines:

"If McKinstry consumes the remains of three days, Where in hell will get in our fat friend Mr. Hayes?"

To which the other responded as follows:

"Mac will use all the time left—as every one sees—
But friend Hayes will get in when it comes to the fees."

One of the glories of our country is that men who rise to positions of importance very often spring from comparatively humble surroundings. Some years ago there was a class in the old Franklin Grammar School, in this city, in which were several who have since attained positions of distinction in the professional and business world. Parties of the boys would occasionally on a Saturday, make a foray on some orchard, vineyard or watermelon patch in the vicinity of the city. In the course of one of those expeditions, that we presume all boys engage in, it was that the now President of the California Fruit Union got his start in the fruit business. A party of boys—and we do not recollect who they all were—on a convenient Saturday, ran across a tempting orchard, and one of them, whose ambition it had been to enter the study of the law, and who for a while afterward was a student in the office of Catlin & McFarland, was in the party. He suggested that the better way to get the good fruit was for him to climb a tree, make the selections from the branches, and the balance of the party gather what he threw down. Everything went on swimmingly until the owner of the orchard, accompanied by a very convenient looking dog for farming purposes, suddenly appeared. The boys on the ground hastily retreated to a safe distance, but the to be fruit merchant occupied the position of "a man up a tree." There perhaps never has occurred to him, nor will, a more favorable opportunity to practically investigate the subject of injurious fruit pests than he then had, had it been possible for him to have fastened his mind entirely upon that question. However, as the balance of the boys viewed it, they could well conclude that he made one of the best speeches of his life in an effort to explain his position to the granger at the foot of the tree. As we have said, we believe he then made his start in life in the fruit business. If a judgment can be formed by the expression on the countenance of that dog, it would indicate that the animal was very desirous to assist him in the start the moment he came down from the tree. It was, however, a case where the future fruit shipper seemed not disposed that there should be an unconditional surrender, and he managed to effect some sort of a compromise, for the owner of the orchard held the ambitious dog while he descended from the tree. What the terms of the compromise were have never been known, but it is known that for years past the firm of W. R. Strong & Co., of which Phil. Platt is a member, has purchased and shipped the produce of that very orchard.

Editorial Note.

Our morning and evening contemporaries are just now engaged in discussing a remarkable proposition suggested by a firm of this city, to change the location of the site of the new postoffice. While many would like to have the postoffice at a point nearer the general business center, the proposition indorsed by the Bee and Record-Union has a strong flavor of business advertisement and a palpable metallic ring. It is quite fresh in the minds of our citizens that there was great work necessary in order to secure from Congress any appropriations, and when we obtained the favor of Congress granting the appropriation and accepting the locality, Seventh and K, there was cause for rejoicing and everybody seemed happy at securing even this consideration. As a matter of fact and of law, the United States has, by Act of Congress, selected the site, and the legal title has passed to the general government, even to the extent of State legislative grant to the government. All this talk about exchanging any other locality for the one adopted is sheer nonsense, and every reasoning man knows that it cannot be done without another Act of Congress, which if introduced would reopen the whole subject matter, and might jeopardize our ultimate prospects in securing any appropriation, on the theory that we are a very uneasy and fickle class of people, not satisfied with what we have, but asking something that is unreasonable and childish; and in fact questioning the sound judgment of Congress itself. If such a scheme as that proposed should be considered tenable, then indeed every extensive property owner might suggest an exchange at any time, and thus make the question of the selection of a postoffice site one of exchange solely—and where would the matter rest? We repeat, that all this talk is purile and cannot amount to anything. Any change, even if it could be accomplished, would amount to a repeal of the present appropriations, and a very doubtful re-enactment of any congressional act giving us another appropriation.

See Our Own Wonders First.

Thousands of Americans are booked for a European tour who have never seen a tithe of the wonders of their own country. We often hear of our Californians going on an extended tour of Europe, who have never seen the wonders of Yosemite, of Calaveras, Mariposa, or Mendocino; who have never witnessed the grandeur of the country surrounding Lake Tahoe, Estón Lake, Pyramid Lake, or even the beauties of any of the scenery of the Coast Range, or the Sierras. How flat such an individual must feel in those far off countries when interrogated about the history and scenery of our own country, and is unable to respond in an intelligible manner. This rule applies to nearly every State in the Union. There is no State but possesses some great natural attraction. How many of these European tourists have ever seen the great mammoth cave of Kentucky, the wonders of the Yellowstone, not to mention our glorious California scenery and wonders. Why, the Sandwich Islands present greater wonders than can be found in the major part of Europe. Arizona, New Mexico, and the home of the old Montezumas, present attractions and historical wonders that make those of ancient and modern Europe pale in the light of revelation. Let us learn of our own home before we try to know the older countries.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest temperature during the past week was 90 on Sunday and 55 on Saturday. The weather was cloudless, or nearly so. There was a fine solar halo of 23 degrees radius on Friday, lasting from a little after sunrise to a short time before sunset, when the clouds became too thick, or rather they formed in the lower atmosphere, thereby hiding from view the crystallized prisms of ice floating in the upper region of our atmosphere. These ice prisms are the cause of such phenomena as halos, mock suns, perihelia, etc. Such clear cut halos, giving the colors of the rainbow, are seldom seen in this central portion of the Sacramento valley. The highest and lowest temperature for the corresponding week last year was 85 and 53. The highest and lowest temperature yesterday was 72 and 53, while for the same date last year it was 78 and 58. The highest and lowest one year ago to-day (Sunday) was 77 and 52. There was no precipitation during the past week, while for the same time last year there was .01 of an inch of rainfall.

What are Waters of the State and Fishery Rights?

Patrolman Dalton has arrested two fishermen for having set nets in one of the sloughs which empties into the Sacramento river. The arrest was made under his interpretation of the first subdivision of section 636 of the Penal Code, which provides: "Every person who shall set or use * * * any pound, weir, set net, trap, etc., * * * for catching fish in the waters of this State, is guilty of a misdemeanor." The case will probably come before one of our Superior Judges on habeas corpus, upon an agreed state of facts between District Attorney Bruner and W. A. Anderson, attorney for the defendants. The market firms of W. R. Jones and W. B. Davis are deeply interested in the result of this case, and are virtually the parties contesting the matter. The facts agreed upon are in substance these: The defendants were engaged in fishing with fyke nets, or small set nets, in a slough formed by the overflow of the Sacramento river, and within this county, and which empties into the river as the water in the river recedes, thus forming a running stream, until the water in the slough becomes lower than the bank of the river. This slough is exclusively on the premises of private persons, who have given the defendants the right to fish therein. The stream formed by the slough emptying into the river is not in any sense navigable. There is no disposition to persecute any person, and all the officers acting under the Fish Commissioners' orders desire is a fair understanding of what is meant by the words in the statute: "The waters of this State." It is contended by the counsel for the defense that any person owning the soil upon which these sloughs form, as well as on non-navigable streams, have the exclusive control of the right to fish therein in any manner they may choose, and that such waters are not waters of this State, or subject to control under any penal laws relating to the rights to fish. That the owner of the soil in cases of formation of sloughs has the right to fish therein to the exclusion of the public.

Since the above was written, and after the defendants were released on bonds, pursuant to agreement, Captain Dalton rearrested the defendants and took them to Yuba City for trial. The contest will therefore ultimately come before the Superior Court of Sutter county for final determination on the points raised.

Is this persecution?

A Gratifying Prospect.

John Talbot has received advices from Central America, relative to the Guasucaran and California Mine, owned by the California Milling and Mining Company, to the effect that the developments are extremely promising. The letter is from a party on the ground and is to the effect that a hundred stamp mill could not work out the mine in one hundred years. Rock now on hand is assaying at $2,000 per ton. The government has given to the company nine square miles of territory to forward the development of the mineral resources of Honduras; and all supplies for the company are admitted duty free. There is no stock for sale, all being held by a few gentlemen in San Francisco and this city. Mr. Talbot, Daniel McCarty, A. Menke, and Mr. Myres are the Sacramento stockholders. Mr. Talbot will leave here for Central America in October.

Unreconstructed Yet.

The restive rebel spirit of Jubal Early won't down. When any occasion offers he is prompt to land the ex-rebel chiefs, particularly himself, and seeks to belittle the Union heroes. The latest effort of the late rebel chief was his bitter address at the decoration of the graves of Confederate soldiers in Virginia. He fought over the battles of Cedar Creek and Winchester, and made sneering allusions to Grant and Sheridan, while exalting himself and his command at that time. It is very hard for some of the leading spirits of the south to acknowledge that the war is over and that their rebellious spirits are conquered. What a contrast between the utterances of General Jubal Early and those of Congressman McKinley at New York on May 30th, which breathed the spirit of true patriotism and brotherly affection. There were no sarcastic references to the superiority of the north, as were urged by Early on the part of our southern brethren.

Shipping circles are startled over the news brought by the North German Lloyd steamer "Trave," from Bremen to New York, which arrived at Southampton Friday, that she ran into the Russian schooner "David" at sea Thursday morning, and sunk her. The steamer rescued the officers and crew and brought them to Southampton. The "Trave's" officers state that the schooner was responsible for the collision. No injury was sustained by the steamer.

Judge S. C. Denson will leave for the East during the week. His visit will be one of business, and he will stop at Chicago, St. Paul and other important points.

CAPITOL LODGE OF ODD FELLOWS.

Its Institution and Early History—Names of Some Men of Prominence.

In our last issue we made reference to the thirtieth anniversary of the organization of Capitol Lodge, No. 87, I. O. O. F. The event happened on Monday last, at the State Capitol, and was one of the most interesting anniversary celebrations that has happened in this city. We reproduce the minutes of the meeting held thirty years ago for the purpose of organizing the lodge. The original minutes, from which we copy, are written on a sheet of note paper. The paper reads:

Our Natal Day.

From indications Sacramento will have a grand celebration on the Fourth of July. The programme for the day is well arranged. The parade will undoubtedly be grand success. The literary exercises will be held at the pavilion. The orator of the day will be Hon. A. G. Burnett, of San Rosa; John Vance Cheney will read an original poem, Frank D. Ryan will read the declaration of Independence, and Rev. W. Merrill will be the chaplain. Thousands of school children will render national anthems, and bands will be in attendance. In the evening there will be a display of fireworks at Capitol park. The details of the celebration will be arranged and published hereafter. We suggest that the McNeill club be invited to render a few selections at the pavilion.

McNeill Conrt.

The McNeill Club will give another of its pleasing, as well as artistic concerts on June 20th, at the Metropolitan theater. This is one of our favorite sources of amusement and entertainment. The members of this club spare no means or pence to furnish first-class talent in all thunders, and receive and deserve public recognition. This concert is to be even better than its predecessors.

TARGET BEARERS AGAIN.

Sacramento, Again Defeated, Shoulders the Target.

A large audience witnessed the San Francisco defeat the Sacramentos at Haight-street Park, San Francisco, yesterday afternoon. Both teams played a listless game, and through timely hitting at the proper time the San Franciscos were victorious. Umpire Sheridan called game at three o'clock. San Francisco went to the bat and commenced the run getting immediately. Shea reached first on his safe hit, stole second, reached third on a passed ball, and scored on Levy's fly to the outfield. Donahue, safe on O'Day's error, reached second and third on a passed ball and scored on Stockwell's hit to center. The Sacramentos also scored in their half of the first—Veatch's hit, McSorley's double, and Roxburg's sacrifice giving them a run.

In the second, Barry reached first on balls, second on Newbert's error and scored on a passed ball. Shea, safe on Newbert's error, stole second and scored on Roxburg's passed ball. Donahue was given first on balls, took second on a passed ball and scored on Burke's error. Hanley was safe on his sacrifice hit, reached second on Stockwell's single and scored on a wild pitch. Sacramento also scored in this inning, O'Day was sent to first on balls, reached second and third on a passed ball, and on Powers' error scored. Goodenough reached first on Powers' error, stole second and third on Burke's sacrifice, and on Veatch's over second single scored.

In the fourth, the San Franciscos again increased their score by adding three runs thereto. Stockwell reached first on Newbert's error, was forced to second and scored on Goodenough's miss of a fly ball. Perrier was hit by pitcher and scored on Goodenough's error. Powers was safe on a sacrifice hit, and also scored on Goodenough's error.

In the sixth inning, Sacramento made a put and scored two runs. Sylvester reached the initial on balls, third on a passed ball, and scored on Burke's sacrifice. Goodenough reached first on balls, stole second, and scored on a passed ball.

Again in the eighth the Sacramento boys bunched hits and made three runs. Sylvester hit for two cushions, went to third on Veatch's slow hit along third-base line, and scored on McSorley's single to center. Burke received his base on balls, Veatch's hit gave him second, and on McSorley's hit he scored. Veatch was safe on his single to second and took third on McSorley's hit, scoring on Powers' error.

San Francisco evened up matters by placing two men over the plate in their half of the last inning after two men were out. Powers was safe on a single, to second on a passed ball, and scored on Newbert's wide throw to first. Swett reached second on Newbert's wide throw, and scored on passed ball.

Sacramento again scored in the last half of the ninth. Newbert was hit by a pitched ball, reached second on Goodenough's sacrifice hit and scored on Sylvester's stinging hit to left center.

O'Day and Donahue played excellent ball on second for their respective teams. McSorley held down third in fine style.

City Debt Case.

One of the multitude of suits against the city based on our ancient city debt was before Judge Van Fleet yesterday, the title being Geo. E. Bates v. City Treasurer Gerber. The demurrer raised vital points and was sustained by the Court. Plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment was rendered for the city. The decision was in line with that of Judge Hunt heretofore rendered.

Let Us Not be Alarmed.

We have been amused at the preposterous demand of a firm here that the federal government should turn over the deeds to the postoffice site to them in exchange for some property that they designate. It is a unique proposition, and will probably strike the national authorities in that light. It is, however, absurd. The threat is held over the people of Sacramento that unless the national government or the property owners near the postoffice will make a concession of a site for a particular variety store, its proprietors will abandon the city! Should they wind up their business here, two things will certainly result: Sacramento will live through it; the government at Washington will continue to exist.

Where is the Joker?

There is considerable talk about the dangerous condition of the old city hall. We have been anxiously waiting to see where the "little joker" is concealed. Why, it would take twenty men a month to pull down the old structure. This building is all cemented and cannot fall by any weight placed on it. It took two months to tear down forty feet of the west end of the building a few years ago. All this talk about the building falling is pure nonsense, and, as we said before, we await to see where the "nigger" is secreted. Years ago this building should have been abandoned as unfit for the public use as a city hall; not because it is unsafe, but because the continual noise and confusion, occasioned by the constant use of the railroad tracks for switching and train purposes. At one time the C. P. R. R. Co. offered the city a new court-house suitable for all the municipal offices located near the present site in exchange for this building, but there was such a prejudice against railroads that all questions of policy or interest were lost sight of, and the proposition was declined. The present site is not suitable, but let some other reason than unsafeness be given.

Stevenson's Regiment.

We have received the following note from Francis D. Clark, of New York city:

John W. Wolfe, a member of the famous Stevenson's regiment during the Mexican war of 1847-48, died in New York city on the 7th inst. Mr. Wolfe was a member of Naglee's Company D. He leaves a wife and three married daughters. He was one of the wealthy survivors of that old regiment.

There are now few survivors of this famous regiment, which arrived in 1847, under the command of Col. Jonathan D. Stevenson, who still resides in San Francisco. Mr. Clark is a prominent member of the Pioneers of California who lives in the east, and not long since revisited this coast and was the guest of the Sacramento Pioneers.

The Colusa Sun says: Harvest is now full under way, and so far as we have heard the wheat is turning out very satisfactory. Barley, in some instances, was blown down, and the sickle is not getting all of it. There will be more first-class wheat than we have ever had. The principal part of the work is being done by the combined harvesters, and it is the cheapest and best. There must be at least one hundred of these machines at work in the county, and they are cutting and sacking over 3,000 acres a day. Not less than 5,000 acres of grain are being cut daily in this county; therefore the danger of injury by the north wind is diminishing very rapidly.

A Lover's Complaint.

I think it may be dyspepsia;
I think I may be in love;
Whether it's one or the other
I cannot discover;
But oh! for the wings of a dove.

I know that she has refused me;
But there's the Welsh rabbit I love;
So whether one or the other
I cannot discover;
But oh! for the wings of a dove.

Heartburn, they say, means dyspepsia;
Heartache, young cupid doth rove;
So whether one or the other
I cannot discover;
But oh! for the wings of a dove.

Doctors can cure indigestion;
Maiden hard-hearted may prove;
So, that it's one—not the other—
I hope to discover;
But oh! for the wings of a dove.

Fair maid; infernally dismal
A youth can be when in love;
So—be it one or the other—
Come help me discover,
And be thou my wings of a dove.

An Autocrat Preferred.

Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi, and Mme. De Stael were women of masculine intellect, and they took great interest in politics. But although each of them lived at a time when the question of the franchise was to the fore, I am not aware that either of them ever suggested that she ought to have a vote. As Primrose dames or as home-rule dames, canvassing and urging men to go to the poll, women are useful, for they only carry out foregone programmes; but if they had the franchise they would be swayed one way or the other by their surroundings, and they would be at the mercy of any one who might start some alluring fad at an election. Of women politically clever there are many; of women politically sensible there are few. For my part, when I think of the sort of bait that would be dangled before women, and of the avidity with which they would rise to them, when I think of the sort of men that would obtain their confidence and the gushing trash which these men would substitute for sane politics, I feel that the only thing for Englishmen to do if Englishwomen are given votes will be to take their departure, like their Puritan fathers, to other lands. I love not despots, but I would rather live under the autocracy of the Emperor of Russia than under petticoat government here.—London Truth.

A St. Louis policeman reports watching the maneuvers of a gray old rat in an alley in that city. Emerging from a hole she moved cautiously to a pan of water standing near. Presently five half-grown young ones rushed out and raced to see which would be the first to the water. The old rodent seemed much alarmed, and, with a bound, leaped to the edge of the pan, raised herself on her haunches and bit and scratched at her offspring whenever they attempted to reach the pan. After she had succeeded in chasing the young ones back into their hole, she wet her whiskers in the water, looked rather suspiciously about, and sipped the water very cautiously, as if to learn whether or not it contained poisonous matter. Then, after a satisfied glance all round, she gave a squeak, and the five young rats came running out and all drank their fill.

Staid and conservative as the English are in many respects, the British women are yet far in advance of their American sisters in the interest that they take and the power that they wield in the field of politics. They have also thoroughly learned the lesson that in unity of purpose and compact organization their greatest strength as a political factor lies. The great political organization of conservative women, the famous Primrose League, now has nearly 80,000 active members. Its younger rival, the Women's Liberal Federation, has a membership of more than 30,000. Moreover, both of these feminine political organizations are busily engaged in propagating the principles of their respective parties, and their influence is felt in nearly every parliamentary district in the kingdom.

Some queer answers were elicited during an examination of witnesses in a contested election case in Florida. "Who was the republican candidate for congress in this district?" was asked. Answer: "I don't know." "Would you know the name if mentioned?" "Yes, sir." "Was it Robert Ingersoll?" "Yes, sir; dat's de man." "Well, who was the democratic candidate?" "I don't know, sir." "Was it John Sherman?" "Yes, sir; dat's de very man." "Well, what is congress?" "I don't know, sir." "Is it a man or a woman?" "I think it is a woman." "What kind of a woman?" "A black woman."

A swimming professor says, in regard to sea-bathers caught by the undertow, that the bather should keep cool, lie as flat on his back as possible, and wait for a wave. With the wave he should make a vigorous stroke for the shore, and then lie still and level again until another wave will help him. In this way he can cheat the sea of a victim.

Sleeping by Compass.

The sleep-with-your-head-to-the-north idea had quite a run a few years ago, and there are still a great many people who, perhaps, rather from force of habit than otherwise, range their beds so that they stand in line with the parallels of longitude, and sleep with their "feet to the equator," or as near as they can get to it. Habits are strong in such a matter. But the editor of a Western paper relates that he was greatly troubled with sleeplessness and headache at night. Finally he bethought himself that it always made him ill when he traveled on a railroad if he rode backward, or if he lay in a sleeping car berth with his head to the engine; and that, on the other hand, if he sat facing the engine he slept well. The reflection led him to apply his experiment to the earth itself, which is a sort of great railroad car, whirling along from west to east at the rate of about 1,000 miles an hour.

He proceeded to arrange his bed so that when he lay upon it his head was to the west and his feet to the east, and after that he had no more restlessness or headache, but slept profoundly and sweetly, with his "feet to the engine." He commends his discovery to all sleepless and nervous people, and does not doubt that he has hit upon a bit of knowledge which will prove infinitely valuable to human kind. But what about the people who would just as lief ride backwards on railroad trains, and who sleep better with their heads to the engines of trains and the bows of vessels?

A friend once strongly advised us always to sleep when travelling with our heads to the engine or the bow, and gave some plausible reasons for his philosophy. "The movement of a train," he said, "tends to force your blood in the opposite direction from the way the train is going; that is to say, being liquid and under the influence in some degree of the forces of gravitation and inertia, the blood is not carried forward as fast as the solid parts of the body, and tends to collect in the end which is, for the time being, toward the rear. Now, if your feet are toward the engine, the blood will collect in your head and give you unpleasant dreams and sleeplessness. Have the blood in your feet, on the other hand, and you will sleep all the better for having it there." "But," we asked, "does not your being on a car constitute, as it were, a new centre of motion, and every part of the body being carried along as fast as any other part, prevent any collecting of the blood in the extremity which is in the 'aft'?" "The fact that you are on the train," replied the theorist, "does not prevent the force of gravitation from acting independently of the train, and the principle of inertia certainly carries the blood toward your head every time the train starts. Try it with a spirit level, and you will see the bubble hug the aftermost end of the tube."—American Analyst.

What Mrs. Bundy Says.

Old fogey maxims, like the Ten Commandments, having become rather impracticable of appreciation in these advanced days, the following revised code of contemporaneous immorals for journalistic and other uses is presented for observance:

That thou shalt devote week days to preying and the Sabbath day to praying.

That thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods on Sunday, but wait till Monday to clean him out.

That thou shalt not swear at all, unless it be during the week in matters of business, when thou canst take thy Bible oath with a mental reservation.

That thou mayest freely break thy neighbor in a stock corner till he goes all to pieces, but thou shalt not break the Sabbath.

That thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor unless thou canst make it pay, in safety, between Monday, I. A. M., and Saturday, 12 P. M.

That thou shalt remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, and save a day's expenses of thy menials, whether the laborer hunger for his hire or not.

That thou shalt have no master but Mammon for six days, and on the Sabbath day shalt wear broadcloth and aroid thy monstaches, and do honor when the contribution plate comes around, to Joblot P. Scrapeland, his name.

That thou shalt wriggle and crawl and lie and plunder on Wall street for six days, and on the seventh give praise to God for his infinite mercy and justice to all mankind.

That thou shalt misquote stock market reports and Scripture for a purpose, daily, except on Sunday, when thou shalt rest from buncoing and thimble-rigging and abuse of others who have to work for their livings.

That thou mayest be a lumbag and a hypocrite, a serpentine stock speculator and a mendacious misrepresenter of matters in the Mule in Distress, a profligate by prevarication and a sanctified spoiler of the sons of sin, so long as thou brayest boldly before the Young Men's Cheap John Association and printest a garbled text daily, Sundays excepted.—To-Day.

Baron Liebig, the German chemist, says that "as much flour as can lie on the point of a table knife contains as much nutritive constituents as eight quarts of the best and most nutritious beer that is made."

A Curious Little Box.

There is in the United States treasury vault a brown wooden box, 18 inches long, a foot wide and 8 inches deep, which contains paper money of the nominal value of several hundred thousand dollars. It is not worth a dollar. The queer thing about it is the manner in which it was collected. Every bit of it came from the dead letter office of the post-office department. Some portion of it is counterfeit, but the most of it was genuine money many years ago. The banks which issued it and the officers who signed it are gone and forgotten. It was all sent over to the treasury department several years ago, and Assistant Treasurer Whelpley undertook to trace up the various banks and get as much as possible of it redeemed. Occasionally he found descendants of some of these old bank officials, themselves bankers, who were willing to redeem some of the notes for the sake of the signatures of their fathers, and in this way he succeeded in getting several hundred dollars' worth of it redeemed. A little of it is confederate money, but most of it is of banks, State and private, that went out of existence many years ago. The oldest notes are dated back as far as 1812.—American Banker.

An undertaker in Madrid, who lived over his shop, one night gave a grand ball. At the height of the festivities a gentleman in full evening dress joined the company. He danced with the hostess and her daughter; he danced with the guests. He seemed to enjoy himself thoroughly. The undertaker thought he recognized the face, but didn't like to be rude and ask the stranger's name. By and by all the guests departed, and only the unknown was left.

"Shall I send for a cab for you?" said the host at last.

"No, thank you. I'm staying in the house."

"Staying in the house! Who are you, sir?" "Why, don't you know me? I'm the corpse that you brought in this afternoon."

The undertaker in horror rushed to the mortuary chamber, where in Spain it is usual for the dead to be removed. The coffin was empty. His wife and daughter had been dancing with a corpse!

But it turned out that the gentleman had only been in a trance and had suddenly recovered. Hearing the revelry above, and being possessed of a keen though ghastly sense of humor, he had got out of his coffin and joined the festive party. He was presentable, for in Spain the dead are generally buried in full evening dress.—New York Herald.

Prince Bismarck, whether at Wilhelmstrasse, Varzin, or Friedrichsruh, is a very plain man indeed, and is utterly careless of appearances. His servants are all ancient and indifferently dressed, and his equipages are said to be "plainer and uglier than those of a provincial gentleman never leaving his native city." The Prince has his own way of getting rid of visitors who outstay their welcome. An ambassador once asked him how he managed to end an interview. "Perfectly easy," answered Bismarck. "My wife knows pretty accurately when people prolong their visit beyond the proper time, and then she sends me a message that I am wanted." He had barely finished speaking when a footman knocked at the door, and informed his master that the Princess wished to speak to him. The diplomat, blushing and confused, beat a hasty retreat, without stopping for the ordinary formalities of leave-taking.

"The hair of the beard, in growing, raises little hills of flesh around each root," said a barber, "and in shaving a man smoothly the razor cuts these off, leaving a blood vessel exposed. Under the microscope these bleeding vessels can be distinctly seen, and the flesh is seen to be entirely without the covering of skin it should have. The natural result is that the close shaver is always troubled with colds and affections of the throat."

Matches dipped in potassic chloride, ignited by dipping into a bottle of concentrated sulphuric acid, were first manufactured and used in 1834. Friction matches were first made in 1832, with potassic chloride and antimony sulphide. Soon after phosphorus was used on the tips.

Some of the official and other unclassified dudes of Washington society are now standing on tiptoe and azog, because Secretary of Agriculture Jerry Rusk drove a hay wagon in Baltimore the other day. Their surprise is unqualified that the secretary really knows something about agricultural implements.

When Arkansas and some of the other Southern States stop killing people because they do not hold in the same political faith, perhaps we may be convinced that there is a disposition toward a true fellowship with their Northern brethren.

In ancient times peacocks' crests were among the ornaments of the Kings of England. Ernald de Aclent (Acland) "paid a fine to King John in a hundred and forty palfrics, with sackbuts, gilt spurs and peacocks' crests, such as would be for his credit."

Fatal Railroad Accident.

There was a fatal accident at Saulsbury's Station, on the Sacramento and Placerville railroad, at 7:45 o'clock yesterday morning, resulting in the instant death of one man and the serious injury of several others. The gravel train which left this city in the morning consisted of an engine and twenty-five flat cars. Upon reaching the switch at Saulsbury's, where a broken rail was struck, the engine was turned upside down, and six cars were derailed. The engineer saw the danger an instant before it was reached and shut down the air brake, else the entire train would have been wrecked. There was on the engine at the time "Dad" Allen the engineer; J. M. Wright, the conductor; Robinson, fireman; Robert Wilson, brakeman, and "Kid" Vice, another fireman who was not on duty, but en route to Placerville. When the accident occurred, Conductor Wright and Fireman Robinson were hurled through the window of the cab, and fell near the capsized engine. They were covered over with earth plowed up by the engine, or they would probably have been badly burned by the escaping steam. As soon as they could extricate themselves they set about to ascertain the fate of their comrades. Engineer Allen and Vice were found imprisoned in the wreck, and were speedily rescued. A search was then made for Brakeman Wilson. It was ascertained that he was beneath the tender, and had been crushed to death. The body could be seen, but the few men present were unable to remove the enormous weight piled upon it. Conductor Wright secured a conveyance and drove to Natoma, from whence information of the disaster was telephoned to this city. The passenger train, which leaves this city for Placerville at 7:30 A. M., reached the scene in a short time. It could not pass the wreck, and returned to this city bringing along the injured men. Engineer Allen was hurt about the back, and his legs were very badly cut, one wound penetrating to the bone. George Vice was caught between the engine and cab and severely squeezed, also receiving deep and painful cuts about his head. Fireman Robinson was struck in the side as he went flying through the cab window, and it is thought likely that some of his ribs are fractured. Conductor Wright was severely bruised about the hips, but is able to be about. All the others were taken to the Railroad Hospital. Soon after news of the accident was received, Phil Douglass and his wrecking crew started for the scene. Robert A. Wilson, the brakeman who was killed, leaves a wife, who is now at Placerville. He is a brother-in-law of Frank Smith, the stableman, of this city, and formerly resided at Sixth and I streets. Coroner Clark's assistants brought the remains of Wilson to this city last evening, and the inquest will be held to-morrow. They will be shipped to Folsom for burial.

Reflections.

Stilts are no better in conversation than in a foot-race.
Folly must hold its tongue while wearing the wig of wisdom.
It is the foolish aim of the atheist to scan infinitude with a microscope.
When poverty comes in at the cottage door, true love goes at it with an ax.
A vein of humor should be made visible without the help of a reduction mill.
The reformer becomes a fanatic when he begins to use his emotions as a substitute for his reasoning faculty.
Many an object in life must be attained by flank movements; it is the zigzag road that leads to the mountain-top.
All the paths of life lead to the grave, and the utmost that we can do is to avoid the short cuts.
The office should seek the man, but it should inspect him thoroughly before taking him.

THEMIS

Vol. I.

SACRAMENTO: SUNDAY, JUNE 23, 1889.

No. 18.

It might perhaps be considered early to speak concerning the city school election that will be held in December, and the municipal election to be held in March, but we do so because we believe that our people have in the past paid too little attention to the matter of the selection of our local officers. As it has been, very little time has been given to the consideration of the fitness of candidates for positions here. The custom has been for the political parties to nominate candidates for school directors by the city central committees, and in those committees the two representatives for each ward nominate the candidates in the respective wards. Thus it happens that two men select the candidate for a school director in a ward. It very often has happened that the members of the committee who make the selection have been men of very little education, and who in no sense were capable of appreciating the responsibility of their action. We know of instances where selections have been made with no regard for the fitness of the nominee to discharge the duties of the office of school director, but solely with regard to whether he would act in the matter of the selection of teachers, etc., in accordance with the wishes of ward politicians. It has resulted in the past in the election of men on the school board in some instances who were entirely incompetent to properly discharge the duties of their office. We believe there should be a reformation in this regard, and that instead of nominations being made by central committees, the candidates should be nominated in convention. There is nothing more important than the education of our children, and the school department should be removed from politics and sectarian influence. We suggest that if it be deemed impracticable to elect delegates to a convention by the people, that the central committees of each party appoint a convention, and that the delegates they appoint consist of men who are owners of property in the city, and who are the parents of children, and above all, that they be men of at least an average education. Such a convention would be very apt to make careful selections on the tickets, and the men whom they will select will be beyond the reach of the influence of the political bosses. Under the present system it has happened that a teacher in every way qualified has been liable to be dropped to make place for another with political backing. If there is any department in our government where the rule of civil service should be invoked, it is in that of education. If a teacher is competent and is satisfactorily discharging his or her duty, there should be no removal. It would not be a bad idea in the selection of the school board to elect some of the younger men who have passed through our schools. We need a school board that will keep abreast with the times, and men who have graduated from our schools and who now have children being educated, will, in our judgment, be valuable in assisting in the administration of the educational affairs in this city.

As regards the March election it will be of importance. There is no question but what the situation of this city is deplorable. It is confessed that we are cramped for money to properly maintain our municipal government. It simply means that when the tax levy was made an insufficient amount of money was provided. We do not believe in extravagant public expenditures, but at the same time there is no excuse for a stinting that brings revenues below what are actually required to carry on the government. We believe, as we stated in our last issue, that there has been a great deal of unnecessary alarm manufactured in regard to the condition of the old water-works building. At the same time it has been known for years that the building is not at all adapted for the purposes for which it has been used, and it has met with the condemnation of about every grand jury that has sit in this county for the last dozen years. We have no doubt that the city would be benefited by tearing it down, selling the land upon which it stands and erecting a more suitable building in some more convenient locality. Many years ago the railroad company expressed a desire to buy that site. We believe they would purchase it now. If a trade can be made with them it would result in the removal of the familiar eyesore and the erection of a building that could be made an ornament to the city.

As we have stated, we speak of these matters this early because we believe the people should begin to think about them. If we leave them go until a few days before election no one will pay attention to them except the political bosses, and the people will practically have nothing to do in the matter of the selection of candidates. It is not too early to cast for men who it will be desirable to elect to these offices. If we start in now we will have ample opportunity to inform ourselves as to the merits of those who will seek preferment at the hands of the people.

When THEMIS was started a few weeks since it was complimented by the Record-Union on the announcement that it would be a fair, truthful and decent journal. The first two or three numbers warranted the conclusion that the promise of the publishers would be kept. We wish to recall our commendation, however, since the bantling already stoops to willful misrepresentation and sneaking innuendo. We will enter into no controversy with a journal that totally ignores the truth in its columns.

We clip the above from the Daily Record-Union of the 17th inst. It reminds us of the petulant remark of a small boy who, when he gets cornered in an argument with a playmate, exclaims, "I know you; I will not play with you any more." In the case of our contemporary, it started a fight against THEMIS on matters of early history, and permitted the publication in its columns of an article by an old resident here which was rather sarcastic on the writers in THEMIS. To that we paid no attention, other than to reply by correcting the Sunday Union on matters of historical data. When we discovered that the editors of the Union had confounded the "Roger Williams" with the city prison brig, we felt that we had a right to make a correction. If we were in any particular untruthful in what we then asserted, it would seem to us that the more dignified way would be for our contemporary to establish that we were wrong, rather than to ingloriously throw up its hands and decline further controversy in regard to a matter in which it threw the first stone, and soon found itself unable to maintain its position. It happens that THEMIS is circulated in the homes of the best and most intelligent citizens of Sacramento and of other counties. They will judge if we have been untruthful, or whether the Sunday Union has been so badly beaten that it has been compelled to decline further controversy. We warned our contemporary in the beginning, that in the matter of the discussion of early California history we occupied a position of advantage, in that we were in possession of data not obtainable elsewhere, and it is not our fault that its editors have placed themselves in a position of humiliation.

Perhaps the Record-Union is not pleased that we cannot coincide with it in the ridiculous proposition that was made to change the location of the site for the new postoffice. We, however, were not disposed to put ourselves on record before the authorities at Washington as attempting to voice what was not the sentiment of the people of Sacramento. The matter was very much as we intimated, childish, and a reflection on the good sense of our people. Our contemporary ought to confine itself in matters of advertising to its columns devoted to that purpose. We do not approve of leading articles intended solely to puff the business of one citizen to the injury of competitive firms. THEMIS will carry to its readers the well digested opinions of its editors, and it will not allow its columns to be used for purposes other than the good of the people. The withdrawal of the commendation of our contemporary is a matter that we treat with indifference. We have ability enough behind THEMIS to place us in a position of entire independence. We have asked no favors.

There must be something of a taint to the morals of Denver, Colorado. We read of the indictment, for corruption in office, of the chief of police, a lieutenant and a number of the officers and detectives. It is a remarkable fact that when citizens assume the functions of peace officers of this character, that they cannot observe the deliberate and wholesale violations of some of the most important laws and regulations. It is not confined to the city of Denver, where evidently forbearance gave out and the strong arm of the law itself has been invoked against those whose duty it was to see it enforced, but there are other places we know of where there is a shameless disregard of duty, and laws upon laws, ordinances upon ordinances, are treated as dead letters upon our statute books. There are laws against disorderly houses, houses of prostitution and assignation, yet no attempt is made to enforce them. Strong inhibitions exist against gambling and the viler lottery schemes, but the officers are deaf and blind to violation of these penal provisions. The Grand Jury wrestled with these matters for several months, but nothing has come of it, yet all know that this bold and defiant disregard of the law exists, and that the perpetrators of those crimes make no secret of their arts, particularly with regard to lotteries and the sale of lottery tickets by the wholesale, and by hawking them openly on the streets. Forbearance may soon cease to be a virtue, and some of the Denver law may be invoked.

That great light of modern Democracy, the New York World, gives utterance to this sentiment: "It is never safe for a political party to defy the moral sentiments of the people." That which called forth this expression was the political situation in the State of New York, and in discussing this the World says the Democrats have held the State by a very frail tenure for the past seven years. Only once during these seven years has the Democratic plurality equalled two thirds of the Prohibition vote, and most of the elections it has been less than one-half that vote. The action of Governor Hill in his persistent vetoes of laws calculated to restrict the liquor traffic has prompted the Prohibitionists to go back to the Republican ranks, the same as they have done in New Jersey. Such a line of action would certainly verify the World's conclusions, that New York is lost to the Democracy if this defiance of the moral sentiments of the people is continued by the State administration. In other words, the State department of New York has adopted the cause of the saloon element as against the moral sentiment of the people, and this act will give the State to the Republicans at the next gubernatorial contest.

All the leading democratic papers of the nation are making an attack on our pension system, and berating what they call a waste of the public money. There are 397,000 pensioners of the United States; over 100,000 receive only from three to fourteen cents a day. The balance of the pensioners, who are justly the wards of the nation, receive from fourteen to twenty-six cents a day. What is this sum for an empty sleeve, or wooden stump, or blind eyes, or ruined health and miserable life? Our democratic statesmen have evidently forgotten the heroes of the Union, and that they are growing infirm, old and helpless, with broken health and shattered limbs. The miserable allowance bestowed upon those who breasted rebel steel and bore "Old Glory" through the land that we might boast of a stable and perpetual government, should bring the blush of shame to all patriotic citizens when censured as an "extravagance." Uncle Sam will never regret the sums awarded to the surviving heroes of the united American nation. Let the slogans howl.

It is now generally understood by judicial determination, that a fugitive can only be tried for the particular offense for which he has been extradited. An alleged fugitive from justice extradited from one State into another can be prosecuted in the State to which he has been extradited only for the offense for which he was extradited, until after he has had a reasonable time and opportunity afforded him to return to the place from which he was extradited. Thus, if a person should be extradited on the charge of grand larceny, and subsequently the prosecution should be changed into embezzlement or any other crime, he could not, under the extradition, be prosecuted until he had ample opportunity to return to the place from which he was taken by the requisition warrant.

In eight cases out of ten our greatest men were barefooted until they reached 21. All the greatest statesmen of America were poor and had but small advantages for educational advancement in their youth. We have always said genius and poverty are kindred spirits. Perhaps that's why we are poor.

When we contemplate what a family peace disturber the sealskin has been for the many years last past, and how happiness has been wrecked through the agency of the sealskin, it is not at all astonishing that Uncle Sam and John Bull should have a little bout over this provoking subject.

The late democratic administration may have been something of a political failure, but the vital question, "Is Marriage a Failure?" has been fully established in the negative. Mrs. Folsom, Miss Endicott, Miss Fuller and prospective Secretary Bayard, Mr. Justice Gray and Miss Matthews disclose that under the administration, with President Cleveland to lead off, marriage was in no sense a failure.

SOME UNWRITTEN HISTORY.

Sacramento in Embryo—How Government was Established from Chaos.

PART III.

Intimately connected with the establishment and prosperity of New Helvetia were the settlements at Bodega and Ross, and the sale of their personal effects by the Russian-American Company there established to John A. Sutter.

The Governor of California under Spanish rule in 1812 gave that company leave to erect huts at the port of Bodega to enable it to carry on a business of salting beef, etc. The Russians continued and extended their business; entered into competition with the Hudson Bay Company in trapping the sea otter, in hunting, and in the fur trade generally, connecting their operations with like establishments at Alaska. They also established two ranches north and east of Bodega, one called Chilebinkoff, and the other Tschernick, on which they raised cattle, horses, and farm produce for their own use here and at Alaska. This establishment became prosperous, and that company, under inspiration from the Russian government, intended to extend their operations and secure a firm foothold in California.

Looking towards that end, Katzeban in an exploring vessel arrived at the port of San Francisco, from Sitka, on the 25th of September, 1824. From that port he went overland to Ross, by way of San Rafael. On his return, on the 18th of October, 1824, he started up the bay of San Francisco, continuing through to San Pablo bay, Suisun bay, and up the Sacramento river. On the 21st of October he stopped in the Sacramento river and took bearings, and found himself in latitude $38^{\circ} 34' 1''$, longitude $121^{\circ} 27' 44''$. From his description of the location and the appearance of the Sierras, some forty miles distant, partially covered with snow, we infer that his observations were taken in the vicinity of Sacramento. The actual location of the parallel as made by him differs only $7' 12''$ from the true location of Sacramento located by later observations with more complete instruments. But the Russian settlement at Ross was far from its base of operations at Sitka.

The Russian-American Company had sharp competition with the Hudson Bay Company. The American trappers and hunters became numerous and entered into competition with both.

The Russian government had not fully determined to extend its American possessions, and the sharp competition and probable collision between that government and Mexico, aided in case of necessity by the British government and that of the United States, who were jealous of such encroachments, induced the Russians to abandon their claim to sovereignty over any part of California, and to withdraw its colonies from this territory. The Mexican government had steadily declined to recognize the right of the Russians to any settlement in California, and in 1840 General M. G. Vallejo, commandant-general of the department of the north, was sent with such forces as he then had to break up and destroy the Russian settlements at Bodega and Ross. The Russian-American Company was then, however, too well established, too strong, for violent expulsion, and General Vallejo concluded that discretion was the better part of valor, and made no attack.

The fact, however, that such an attempt was made indicated a settled determination on the part of Mexico to resist any further encroachments, and if persisted in this resistance must be left to the arbitrament of arms. The Russian-American Company, acting under the direction of the Czar, therefore offered its establishment in California for sale to the highest and best bidder.

In 1840, the Russian-American Company compromised with the Hudson Bay Company, and they agreed:

1. That the Hudson Bay Company should have the exclusive right to trade along the Sound south of Alaska, including the coast of California.

2. The Hudson Bay Company were to deliver at Sitka, at certain fixed prices, all the wheat, tallow, soap and maize needed for that place.

3. The Russians to abandon their place at Ross, to avoid trouble with the Mexicans.

In the meantime Sutter had established himself at New Helvetia. He had small means for such an enterprise.

The property of the Russian-American Company was just what he required to make his establishment prosperous, cattle, horses, farming implements, etc., and he determined to enter the market as a purchaser.

He had acquired a grant from the Mexican authorities of land, with boundaries indefinite, and was administrator of the affairs of the government in his department. He claimed superior power in his district, condemning, acquitting and punishing at will, as well as the right to try and determine all civil cases.

By the middle of 1841, he had succeeded in securing the good will of the Indians in his vicinity, and they were found by Lieutenant Wilkes laboring for him in building houses and the walls of his fort, intended by him more for protection against the Mexican authorities, then in power in California, than from the Indians.

In the middle of 1841, when the Russian-American Company had completed its arrangements to abandon California, it offered its effects for sale.

Two competitors were found—Jacob P. Leese and John A. Sutter. The former offered $20,000, $5,000 cash and the balance in deferred payments. Sutter offered $30,000, payments to be made in produce, except the last payment of $10,000 to be made in cash, pledging his establishment of New Helvetia for the faithful performance of his contract, made and concluded on the 12th day of December, 1841, though the negotiations had been pending several months.

Lieutenant Wilkes says in his report (Vol. V, p. 190) that on Dec. 4, 1841, he returned to Sutter's fort and found a small Russian schooner had arrived from Bodega, bringing the governor of the establishment, who was about to deliver to Captain Sutter the establishment at Ross.

Eight days later an agreement was executed in the French language before Francisco Guerrero, justice of the peace at San Francisco, in the form known to the civil law, signed—

KASTROMITINOFF,
J. A. SUTTER.

Witnesses:
J. P. LEESE,
J. J. VIOGET.

We, the undersigned, Pierre Kastromitinooff, agent of the Russian-American Company, a citizen of Upper California, being duly authorized as government agent, on the banks of the Sacramento river, and Captain John A. Sutter, in accordance with a previous understanding, have signed the following articles of agreement:

Article I.—It is agreed that the Russian-American Company in evacuating Ross, with the full consent of his majesty, the Emperor, of all the Russians cede to Mr. de Sutter all the establishments that exist on the coast of New Albion (using the name given by Sir Francis Drake to the country) at the port of Bodega, and to the northward of the said port of Ross, excepting the land according to the inventory duly signed by the two persons above mentioned.

Article II.—It is agreed that the price of all these establishments, ceded by the Russian-American Company, shall be $30,000, to be paid by Sutter within four years, reckoning or commencing from the year 1842.

Article III.—It is agreed that the payment of the said sum shall be made in country produce for the first three years, to-wit: 5,000 sacks for the first and second years, and 10,000 sacks for the third year; and for the last, that is to say the fourth year, $10,000 in cash.

Article IV.—It is agreed that Mr. Sutter shall have ready and on hand, in the time specified in Article II, during the two first years, country produce in quantities below mentioned:

1,000 fanegas of Wheat, @ $2 00,	- - -	$3,200
100 fanegas of Peas, @ $2 50,	- - -	250
25 fanegas of Beans, @ $3 00,	- - -	75
20 arrobus Soap, @ $14 00,	- - -	700
200 arrobus Lard, @ $2 00,	- - -	400
240 arrobus Tallow, @ $1 50,	- - -	375
Total,	- - -	$5,000

(A Spanish fanega is about one English bushel.)

The next year this quantity shall be doubled, to make up the sum of $10,000.

It is agreed that all these commodities shall be of the best quality. The wheat and grain shall be fresh; the soap dry; the tallow and lard shall be fresh and clear. $5\frac{1}{2}$ Spanish arrobus shall constitute one fanega.

Article V.—It is agreed that Mr. Sutter shall have the country produce in readiness for three years, commencing on the 1st day of September, 1842; this being the specified time for the arrival of the company's ships at San Francisco.

Article VI.—It is agreed that the Russian-American Company shall send their ships to the port of San Francisco to receive the provisions during the term specified in Article V, and, that upon the arrival of one of their vessels, Mr. Sutter shall take the necessary steps to ship the produce as soon as possible, on his own account, so as not to detain the vessel.

Article VII.—Sutter in this binds himself to pay, as demurrage, if he cause delay, the expenses of the voyage in cash.

Article VIII.—Sutter in this binds himself to pay custom house charges and harbor dues.

Article IX.—It is agreed that although the Russian-American Company are fully convinced of punctual payment on the part of Sutter, nevertheless, to guard against unforeseen circumstances, and insure the payment of the sum mentioned, his establishment on the Sacramento river, called New Helvetia, located with the consent and by the lawful acts of the Government of California, with all the goods moveable and immovable which thereunto belong, shall be considered as a guarantee. Also, that all the establishments that exist at the port of Bodega, and at the ranchos Chilebrickoff and Tschernick, which Sutter intends to leave intact and in his own possession, shall also be considered as a guarantee, so that in case Mr. Sutter does not fulfil his engagements, we can lawfully enter into possession of Port Bodega and Ross.

Article X.—Provides that in case of war, so that the Russian-American Company cannot send ship, payments shall be made later.

Article XI.—It is agreed that the Russian-American Company, desiring to lend every assistance to Mr. Sutter, is ready to transport to Bodega de Ross all the movable goods, the transport of which may not be too troublesome, as, for example, windows, doors, and other little things which can be carried in our hide boats and in our large launch.

The transportation will commence at once, and it will continue until the arrival of the ship from Port New Archangel at Bodega and San Francisco, and then the men who have remained here shall be shipped without delay, and Mr. Sutter will take possession of everything, and at his own expense will continue the transportation.

[To be Continued.]

"I understand you haf vailed in peesness, Mr. Levi?"
"Yes; I vas unfortunade in a brivate speculation. Dot vas not de vorst. I vas deceifed."

"How so?"
"In my assignee. He vas a scoundrel. He vormed his vay into my convideence and made me bay 96 per cent. Did you efer hear of such an outrage?"

The Newspaper of To-Day.

EDITORS THEMIS: I have just finished reading a file of THEMIS, and feel greatly refreshed. I not only feel new vigor, but my hopes have been reestablished.

In your issue of May 26th, you take brave ground on the modern newspaper question. You submit two inquiries, to wit: "Is modern journalism degenerating?" and "Is the influence of the press waning?" to both of which you return positive affirmative answers. It is not a matter of much consequence how you arrived at this conclusion, but, all the same, it is a decision in which you will be sustained by the best intellect and the best conscience of the State. The sentiment which will come to your support is much stronger, I am inclined to believe, than you think it is.

How truly you speak when you say that the daily newspaper no longer expresses the thoughts of its chief writers—that the age of the Greeleys, the Raymonds and Prentices has passed away. The writer for the daily press, no matter how brilliant, well-equipped or far-seeing he may be, no difference how extended his vision from the general point of view, or how prophetic his powers, he enjoys only such liberty of expression as his task-master may appoint. And so far as the moral convictions of the writer are concerned, they are supposed to be kept on draught, subject to the order of the overseer. This is what THEMIS tells its readers. But what other California papers of the secular order have been brave enough during the last fifteen years to tell the same story? And where did THEMIS get its courage to exploit such an important truth, except by forecasting the coming revolt against the daily press.

The deception of carrying the names of editors at the head of the column, who never write a line, is not confined to the daily newspaper. Neither Mary Anderson nor Minnie Palmer wrote a word of the articles treating upon the stage, which recently appeared in the North American Review over their names. The motive in each case is the same—a palpable fraud to draw custom. There are newspaper published in San Francisco, of large circulation, on which a capable and honest writer could not perform satisfactory work, simply because he could not work with a dog-collar on his neck. There is no room in such papers for opinions, with reason behind them. It is not because there are no Greeleys or Prentices that we never hear from them, but because there is no employment for them.

There is no doubt whatever that the daily press is fast losing its political influence. As a moral force, its power is already extinct. As a matter of course, this observation, like all general comments, is subject to exceptions. But if you could find a person with fair powers of discernment, of good education and average experience, who would admit that the entire daily press of San Francisco exercises the slightest influence upon the public conscience, you should set a guard over him, so that his organism might be explained after death. Researches as to his structure would reveal phenomena of which physiology and anatomy, in their present stage of development, give no account.

Just take an example of the San Francisco eight-page daily. I have one in my hand, of recent date. A column is devoted to the reappearance of a person who is supposed to know something about the shooting of a woman without a character. And, as no account of an event so closely connected with the moral history of the States as this one is, would be complete without a likeness of the person who has just reappeared, a wood-cut of the scamp is thrust under the nose of the reader. Then a half column is given to the grooming of slogger Sullivan by Professor Muldoon, at Belfast, New York. Another half-column is dedicated to the perpetuation of the history of a young man who forged an endorsement on a check for $4,800, and got the money. But, inasmuch as it would be out of keeping with the methods of modern journalism to leave the history of any shame untold, a narrative of a fallen girl is added to the biography of the forger. Another half column is appropriated to the details of a trial in Chicago in which the ruin of two families is rehearsed. Two columns and a half are given up to the alleged details of the killing of a young girl in one of the northern towns of the State, and, as if done with the express purpose of putting the character of the tiger-wolf to shame, it is related in long-drawn innuendo that the sister of the dead girl is leading an immoral life. Then the murder of a man in a dive is taken up, in the narration of which, the downfall of a wife is the point which receives most attention from the writer. And the whole is concluded, as they say in the play-bills, with a telegraphic account of the presolstitial drawing of the Louisiana lottery.

Does any one suppose that a newspaper of this character can exert any control over the moral sentiment of the community? It doesn't pretend to—and that is just why it possesses no influence at all. But the paper of which I have been giving a description is typical of five-sevenths of the daily press. If Horace Greeley were alive, he would beg his bread before he would touch pen to paper for such a print.

Another source of weakness of the press is its indiscriminate and brutal criticism. And it is so often wrong that the public has ceased to trust it. A person of established, good character in the community in which he lives has lost all fear of the censure of newspapers. If the occasion should arise, and the facts were the same, there is not a newspaper in San Francisco that could perform the work that the New York Times performed in the dethroning of Boss Tweed. This is a lamentable state of affairs, but it is absolutely true. The reasons why matters have reached such a pitch are as plain as anything in the world. No appeal is made to the intellect or conscience of the public.

The newspaper of to-day constantly underestimates the mental powers and moral tastes of its patrons. Of course there are special publications, which are directed to a class, which do not fall within this rule; but, in a general way, the accusation is true. Thus it is assumed that the contents of the paper which I have enumerated above, supply a popular demand. This is not true. The people who pay for newspapers for the sake of the information and pleasure they may get out of them, do not want such stuff. But the newspaper has become a household necessity—it stands fourth in the list of indispensables—food, clothing and shelter only taking precedence.

The difficulty will be bridged over, as in other cases, by the process of substitution. Some day, and the time is not far off, some one will discover that a diary of crime and immorality falls a long way below the popular demand. And then the clean, well-edited, brainy newspaper will come to the front. And the further discovery will be made that the vicious were never a paying clientele. ADAM KNOX.

A TRAVELER'S STORY.

Telling of Journeys More Wonderful Than the Wandering Jew's.

"It has been more than two hundred years since I passed along here the first time," was the astonishing statement of a stranger who had been paddling down White river, and who stopped in the shade of the old covered bridge at Washington street to gossip with a reporter for the Indianapolis News.

"There were no bridges over the stream then, and no reporters here to interview me. In fact there is little here to remind me of my first trip. This stream has drawn into its bed like a turtle into its shell since my early days. It used to swell out through all these low lands. There was no bottom to the water and you couldn't see across it when I was a boy."

"Are you sure this is the same stream?"

"There can't be any mistake about it. I never err in these matters. The course of streams do not change even if they shrink from rivers to brooks. I spent several days in this latitude before, and for a whole week was laid up against a big hill which stood out of the water north of here (now Crown hill)."

"How often do you make these tours?"

"Irregularly. I am always on the go, but I can't control my course entirely. I belong to a roving, restless, irrepressible race. One year I am in Australia; another I am up in the Andes mountains. Now I am up on the Hudson bay, anon in Yucatan. My periods of rest are few, yet I never tire. Sometimes I am cut off from many of my tribe, but if I can't reach them one way I do another. My favorite routes are down the course of rivers. I never travel overland, and if I lose my way or get off into a pond or slough that has no connection with living waters, I bide my time with the frogs and snakefeeders."

"You mean that you stay with them until a fresher comes which enables you to sail out into the waterways?"

"No. Sometimes that is the case, but if I get tired of waiting and become weary of my companions I shake the mud off my feet, put away terrestrial shape and form, fade into the invisible, and, rising high in the air, seek friends and congenial climes."

"Who are you, that you do these things?"

"I am a drop of water. Now you can understand why I am old without being gray; how it is that I travel constantly by stream or air, range over the wide creation, and, sometimes by chance, as fluid or vapor, make second and even third trips to the same place. But I must be away. I am billed to play a part in a cloudburst in Cuba on the 11th of this month."

And the shining drop ran along a drowsy fisherman's line and dropped on to a black bass's back, and was lost among a million fellow-travelers.—Chicago News.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

The distinguished actor, John Gilbert, died last week.

Mrs. Frederica Nielsen, formerly a Norwegian actress, is "evangelizing" in Salt Lake City.

Miss Mattie Vickers, with her two comedies, Jacquine and Cherub, will appear at the Metropolitan June 24th, 25th and 26th. The actress, as well as the comedies, are new to a Sacramento public.

Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., is working very hard every day and all day long, and takes lessons in acting, singing, fencing, and everything that tends to develop her qualities as a forth-coming "star."

Miss Lucy O'Brien, formerly of this city, whose stage name is Clyde Heron, is a member of Thorne's Three Guardsmen and Black Flag companies. This lady is a sterling actress and is complimented highly by the leading San Francisco journals.

An unfinished libretto, The Saracen Woman, by Wagner, has just been discovered, the widow of Herr Greith, of Munich Cathedral, having now presented it to Frau Cosima Wagner. There is no doubt about its authenticity, as it is mentioned by Wagner himself in the fourth volume of the "Gesammelte Schriften." The libretto was sketched in 1841-3.

The McNeill concert was not so well patronized as it deserved. This was on account of the absence from the city on summer outings of a majority of the music-loving portion of our people. There was a noticeable lack of enthusiasm on the part of the club members on this occasion. There will be one concert more of the series.

The Strategists and Katti were given at the Clunie on Friday and Saturday nights to good houses. The company is excellent and well balanced. Our old time friend, Tom Baker, is the treasurer and manager of the company. Since Tom Baker dumped his fortune in South America with Harry Meiggs he has devoted himself to theatrical management.

At Turner Hall on Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, with Saturday matinee, there will be a grand entertainment under the auspices of the ladies of St. Paul's Church. Sherman's wonderful Fantasma will be the attraction. It will consist of artistic tableaux, illusions, music, allegory, and a great variety of acts and dissolving views. The entertainment will be novel and interesting.

During the winter of 1875 and spring of 1876, the Hooley company, which included James O'Neil and W. H. Crane, entertained the Sacramento with a round of splendid dramas and comedies. At the close of the season several of the members were the recipients of rousing benefits. When it came to Billy Crane's turn great preparations were made and a number of artists from San Francisco volunteered. Among the volunteers was Alice Harrison and Ellie Wilton. John McCullough also came up to be present only as an auditor. The old Metropolitan never had such an audience. Billy Crane, even at that early day, while only a member of a stock company, was a prime favorite, and was not overly stocked with coin, still he would find sufficient to occasionally engage in a little sitting at the great American game of "draw." Crane and several of the leading members of the company were guests of the old Grand Hotel, which was under the management of Will Forsythe, and first class in every department. It was here that some of the most congenial spirits of the city boarded, including Henry Edgerton, Jerome A. Fillmore, "Baldy" Hamilton, and others who were given to social times. On the occasion of Crane's benefit, after the play was over, Crane, Ellie Wilton, Alice Harrison, John McCullough, Will Forsythe and the writer, started a quiet little game of "draw," "just to amuse the ladies, you know." No one ever dreamed that the two ladies named who joined in the game were adepts, and as the betting became lively all extended sympathy towards them. Presently it dawned on the others that their sympathy was wasted, as they were gathering in about all the spare change. About this point some very large hands were dealt out, and Forsythe, Alice Harrison and Ellie Wilton had stacked their piles against Crane's crowning bit. When the hands were showed down Billy had four aces and scooped in his second benefit that night. Will Forsythe is now one of the richest grape growers on the coast, and is at this time visiting Europe. Poor John McCullough's fate is known to all. Henry Edgerton sleeps his last sleep in the State plat in the City Cemetery. Crane is a distinguished "star" in the dramatic firmament. Alice Harrison and Ellie Wilton are bright stars also in the artistic world. The last is only distinguished as "the writer of this."

Book Chat.

Biography is by nature the most universally profitable, universally pleasant of all things; especially biography of distinguished individuals.—Carlyle.

In the Town Library (Stadt Bibliothek) of Nuremberg, is preserved an interesting globe, made by John Schoner, professor of mathematics in the gymnasium there A. D. 1520. It is very remarkable that the passage through the isthmus of Panama, so much sought after in later times, is on this old globe carefully delineated.

Eunapius, a Greek sophist and historian, who wrote during the latter part of the fourth century, was a kind of an Ingersoll of the time. His works were written in a spirit of bitter hostility to Christianity. His works are lost, except "The Lives of the Sophists," and a few excerpts from his history of Dexippus. Those that remain are valuable as one of the sources of the history of the philosophy of the period.

Miss Rosa Evangeline Angel, the young Cincinnati poetess, has received a complimentary letter from Oliver Wendell Holmes, in which he says: "The great difficulty a young writer in verse has to meet is the fact that writing in rhyme has become a common accomplishment, and verse that would have made a reputation in my young days attracts little attention in these times and brings small returns in either fame or profit."

Robert Louis Stevenson's new story, which has been written in collaboration with his stepson, Lloyd Osbourne, has for its title "The Wrong Box." It differs widely from Mr. Stevenson's previous productions, although the grim humor of making the adventures of a young man in his attempt to secure the proceeds of a life insurance include making a mistake in the coffin which is supposed to contain the deceased person is somewhat like that of "The Suicide Club," in the author's "New Arabian Nights."

Air cushions are supposed to be an invention of modern times, but that this luxury was anticipated as long ago as the time of Ben Jonson is evident from a passage in the "Alchemist," where Sir Epicure Mammon enumerates to Surly a list of good things to be expected. Among these indulgences is this prophetic forecast of modern inflated India-rubber beds and cushions:

"I will have all my beds blown up, not stuffed; Down is too hard."

Robert Browning goes out a great deal in society, and has an especial weakness for dinners. He is short and stout, with white hair and a glow of ruddy health. He wears his hair quite long and has a moustache and goatee. He enjoys the best of health and has an almost boyish flow of animal spirits and enthusiasm. He dines out nearly every night and loves balls and receptions. Most agreeable in conversation, of course he is well posted on every subject, and his friends number the great men of the entire world. He is a great flirt and very proud of his conquests.

Incongruities of Our Fish Laws.

The fish laws of this State seem to be in a muddle and contradictory, and in some instances ineffectual from omissions of words. We find under the amendments made to the fish laws in 1887, in Section 636 of the Penal Code, that every person is interdicted from using any set net or fixed contrivance in "the waters of this State." The next subdivision of the same Section allows any one to fish with a seine or net in any river, or slough, or stream, if it does not extend more than one-third across the width of said river, stream or slough. Here we have a direct inconsistency. Why should set nets be interdicted if seines and nets are allowed in one-third of the river, stream or slough? That is to say, no one can use a small set net, with three or four feet dimensions, but can use a seine or net two hundred feet in length. There is no sense or reason in such distinctions. Again, what is meant by "The Waters of the State?" In all the other Sections and Acts relating to fishing the words "public waters of the State and navigable waters are used." For instance, in the Act authorizing a fishing license, the terms are: "Every person engaged in the vocation of fishing in the public waters of this State, who shall use a boat and net must obtain a license * * *." Now, why should a license be given to use a net when it is interdicted by the law? Again, the Act of 1887, which authorizes the State to pay the expenses of all trials for the violation of the fish laws, limits these prosecutions to those who fish in any of the navigable waters of this State—thus precluding any prosecutions for fishing in any private waters. The legislature, in using the term "waters of the State," has caused the Fish Commissioners to place an interpretation on those words that includes any pond or lake wholly upon private domain. Indeed, a conviction was secured in Sutter county, where the fisherman had leased a certain slough from the gentleman who had the absolute proprietary right to the slough, and which was wholly upon his private property, and who had annually leased the premises for fishing purposes for over thirty years, it being claimed that under the law this private water-way was included as one of the waters of this State. The second subdivision of Section 636 of the Penal Code is rendered inoperative by the omission of the word "fish," leaving the sentence incomplete and meaningless. This construction is apparent, because Section 1858 of the Code of Civil Procedure prohibits a Court from inserting what is omitted, or from omitting anything that has been inserted; in other words, the Court cannot legislate. There has been some bungling work with regard to the passage of these fish laws, and, from statements made to us, there has been some pretty high-handed action on the part of those who are intrusted with the duties of enforcing the laws. We have been informed that licenses have been issued to some who were known to have unlawful contrivances for catching fish. It has been stated that the patrolmen are in the habit of taking arbitrary possession of the property of these fishermen, and keeping it at their pleasure. If these men know anything, they must know that they have no power or authority to confiscate private property.

Fish Matters.

The run of salmon in the river has been larger this season than for the last four years. In 1863 there was a marked scarcity of salmon, and during that year the lowest price was five cents per pound. At that time the first salmon cannery ever established was built at Washington by Haines and Hapgood. The latter was the originator of the process for canning salmon. The season proving unprofitable owing to the scarcity of fish, they abandoned operations here and established business on the Columbia river. Haines is still in business there. Hapgood is dead. Before and after 1863 salmon have been sold as low as 15 cents apiece wholesale, and even lower. In former years perch abounded in the river, but since the planting of carp and catfish the perch have become almost extinct, and it is doubtful if they will come back. People who have made a study of fish matters inform us that the carp and catfish will deplete the salmon, in that they eat the spawn in the upper waters of the Sacramento, and they suggest that the Fish Commissioners stint not in the matter of the planting of young salmon, as it is a matter of public concern. This is the first season that salmon have been seen in the Feather, Yuba and American rivers for perhaps twenty years. This demonstrates that restriction on hydraulic mining is accomplishing good. Shad are numerous in the river, but are rarely taken here on account of the legal size of the meshes in nets. In the tide water and the bays they are caught in abundance, and have been offered for sale as low as two cents a pound wholesale.

A correspondent, writing from Trinidad, Bolivia, reports that the Beni has flooded the whole country.

That Old City Hall.

There has been a suggestion, which emanates from our morning contemporary, that the city purchase the present County Court House for municipal purposes. We know that a very large amount was expended by the county in remodeling this building—we think it was $94,000—when a new and much more suitable building could have been erected for a less sum, and which latter course was urged by the more thoughtful portion of our community. This was, however, in the days of big jobs, and the remodeling scheme was adopted, at the cost above named. Thus Sacramento county secured a very poor apology for a County Court House, and it soon developed that an addition would have to be built. This was done, and the present Hall of Records is the result, at an additional cost of over $65,000. With the County Court House experience fresh in mind, the Board of Trustees about 8 years ago followed in the same line of action, and proposed the remodeling of the Old City Hall, or Waterworks Building. When the proposition was first advanced, the writer, who was at that time the law officer of the city, tried to dissuade the Trustees from taking this action. But the Board proceeded to have the building remodeled, by cutting off about 40 feet of the west end, and removing the Trustees' office, and other city offices, excepting the Police Court, City Attorney and Chief of Police into the new Waterworks Building, where they now are. This work cost over $10,000, and we never had a decent building after all. At that time a few thousand more added to the $10,000 would have secured a suitable building in a more desirable locality. That perverse spirit which seems to have seized upon our municipal authorities during all stages of our local history, with regard to our fiscal affairs, was manifest in this matter, and we find ourselves to-day almost helpless as far as means are concerned. There is a way, however, that can be utilized under our Charter. Section 2, Subdivision ten of the Charter says that the Board of Trustees shall have power to provide for all necessary public buildings for the use of the city. By virtue of Sections 20, 21 and 22 of the Charter, the authorities can submit the proposition of incurring a debt for this purpose, to a vote of the people, and if two-thirds of the qualified voters cast their ballots in favor, then the Trustees are authorized to levy a tax sufficient to meet the obligation. This may be in one or more levies. If this should be deemed insufficient authority, then the legislature would have to be appealed to for authority to issue bonds to secure a site and construct a proper building. Somehow, Sacramento, in her financial matters, will not learn wisdom from experience.

Architect Cuthbert, of San Francisco, maintains that the Old Waterworks building can be rendered perfectly safe by making proper repairs, and distributing the weight of the water in the tank so as to rest on cross walls.

The Weather.

The highest and lowest signal service temperature during the past week was 94° on Wednesday and 53° on Saturday. There were two slight shocks of earthquake on Wednesday evening between 10 and 11 o'clock; vibration, north to south. There was no precipitation during the week nor during the present month. The highest and lowest temperature for the same time last year was 96° and 52°. There was also precipitation on two days, amounting to .01 of an inch. The highest and lowest temperature yesterday was 84° and 53°, while for the same date last year it was 96° and 61°. The weather yesterday was delightfully pleasant, and agreeable, with fresh breezes from the even temperature of the grand Pacific ocean.

A Pioneer Dead.

R. L. Baampton, an old pioneer citizen of this State, died at his residence in Washington, Yolo county, about 12 o'clock last night. He was 88 years of age and remarkably vigorous during the latter part of his life for one so aged. He had many warm friends, and was one of the late James McClatchy's most devoted adherents. He leaves no family.

TWO IN SUCCESSION.

Oakland Drops One Peg in the League Contest.

The usual Saturday attendance witnessed yesterday's game in this city, and was rewarded by a very hard-hitting and interesting contest. The Sacramento climbers found nothing bewildering in Aldrich's delivery, and touched up the left-handed importation for thirteen hits, many of them being long drives for doubles and triples. Newbert's great work at short and at the bat was one of the features of the game.

Sacramento commenced the run-getting in the second. Burke was safe on Cahill's error of an easy grounder, and scored on Newbert's long drive to center field for the entire circuit. Goodenough was given a base on balls, stole second and third, and on Cahill's second error scored. Cahill's error gave Roberts a life on first; he stole second. Cahill's third error on O'Day's easy grounder gave him third, and on McSorley's single he scored. O'Day, safe on Cahill's error, purloined second, and McSorley's hit scored him. McSorley reached first on his single to left, a stolen base placed him on second, and Veach's long drive over the left fielder's head scored him. The inning was ended, but Sacramento had scored six runs, due to Cahill's error and some heavy hitting by the Sacramentos. In the fourth inning Long, in sliding to third, spiked McSorley so badly that he was compelled to retire from the game, and from the extent of his injuries it may be a long time before he will be able to appear on the diamond. Two of the Sacramentos again cross the plate on the fifth. Veach and Burke both hit for three cushions and on Newbert's double they scored. In Oakland's half of the fifth, they relieved the monotony of scoring goose eggs by sending two men across the plate. Sylvester reached first on balls, stole to second, and on Burke's wide throw to second scored. O'Neill drove the ball to the right field fence for three cushions and scored on Dailey's single to center.

Oakland scored again on their half of the eighth. Long hit for a triple and scored on Cahill's sacrifice to second.

Sacramento increases her lead in the ninth by sending two more base runners across the plate. Burke struck the sphere for two bases and scored on Newbert's single. Newbert reached first, Goodenough's base on balls advanced him to second, and he scored on Krehmeyer's hit to left field. This ended the run-getting, and Sacramento landed victorious.

NOTES.

The game was a brilliant affair; all the Sacramentos vied with each other in playing good ball. Newbert played the game of his life at short, and his brilliant stops and catches won the admiration of the audience.

Veach distinguished himself at the bat yesterday, his two three-baggers being good long drives to the fence.

Burke pitched a fine, steady game of ball. He kept the hits well scattered, and allowed very few men bases on balls. He was given excellent support behind the bat by Roxburg, and both did some heavy and timely hitting at the bat.

O'Day holds his end up at second, and is playing the steadiest game of any of the league's second basemen.

O'Neill played excellent ball at short for the Oakeands, as also did McDonald on second.

The Sacramentos go to San Francisco to-day to meet the Bay City boys, and we hope they will continue climbing the championship ladder until they reach the topmost rung.

The First Threshing Machine.

It will be perhaps a curious piece of information to know when the first threshing machine was brought into this valley. It was in 1848, when California was under military rule, and Col. R. B. Mason acted as Governor. The following is a copy of an official letter, dated at Monterey, February 22, 1848, and written by Governor Mason to Capt. J. L. Folsom, the Assistant Quartermaster of the U. S. Army, who was then stationed at San Francisco:

"On the next page you will find the copy of a letter of the 12th inst. from E. and H. Grimes, citizens of the United States, asking to import, free of duty, a threshing machine, to be used on their rancho, up the Sacramento. From the last paragraph of the Secretary of War's letter to General Scott, of the 3d of April, 1836 (a misprint, it should be 1847), and the second paragraph of the one to General Taylor of September 22d, 1846 (see both in the printed tariff regulations from Washington), I think this a case that comes within the discretion therein given; and, besides, the more wheat there is grown in California, and the more facilities that can be given to prepare it for the mill, the cheaper we can get flour for the troops. You are therefore authorized to allow the Messrs. Grimes the threshing machine free of duty."

He will leave for Santa Cruz county in about a week, where he will spend the summer.

Robert Steen, the Sheriff of Mohave county, A. T., is reported to be missing, and his friends are anxious to learn of his whereabouts. At Albuquerque, N. M., Friday night, in Block & Bibb's store, at Grant's, on the Atlantic and Pacific road, ninety miles west of here, a row occurred between the proprietors and some cowboys, in which Erel Hudson was killed, and E. H. Brazil dangerously shot through the shoulder. Hudson was 28 years old and from Ohio, and Brazil is 25 and from Austin, Texas.

Details were received at Kansas City yesterday morning of a destructive cyclone in Gentry county. The village of Lone Star was almost totally destroyed Thursday last, three persons being killed and a number injured. The cyclone moved in two funnel-shaped clouds, traveling very swiftly and very low down, and in its progress destroyed everything. The cyclone passed off to the southeast, badly damaging all the growing crops, orchards and forests in its path.

The Lament of the Rose.

To-night I recline, debonair,
On the breast of a ball-room's fair queen,
And my fragrance enriches the air
As she moves in the dances serene;
And I drink in her lover's soft words,
As encircling her Hebe-like waist
He avers that of all the fair flowers
The Jacque rose is most to his taste.

But, alas! far too brief is my joy,
For to-morrow my reign will be o'er,
And the sweet lips that sounded my praise
In the morning will court me no more:
But instead I'll be torn all apart
And be thrown in a bric-a-brac vase,
Where, forgotten 'mid spices and salt,
I'll sigh for my halcyon days.

—Arthur S. Kimball.

A Wonderful Cow.

The farmers of the township of Tecumseh, in South Simcoe, are greatly interested at present in a strange freak of nature, which had taken place in their midst, being nothing less than a cow giving birth to two lambs and a calf, says the Toronto Globe:

The interesting event occurred on the farm of John Henry Carter, lot 4, eighth concession line, Sunday, April 14th, and when the news spread abroad so many people wanted to see the curiosities that Mr. Carter finally decided to get rid of them, and disposed of the cow and her progeny to Isaac M. Cross, an enterprising young farmer of Bondhead. The animals were removed to Tottenham, and a few days ago the Toronto Globe was invited to send up a man to see the stock and investigate, independently, the correctness of the story.

At a first glance the reporter was rather disappointed in the lambs, having entertained some vague ideas on the subject, and hoping to see a fully developed calf with the face of a lamb, or vice versa. But they appeared to his uneducated eye to be ordinary lambs and nothing more. This was at a first glance.

A subsequent careful examination and comparison with other lambs of the same age showed a marked difference. Those of the unnatural parentage are larger and coarser, the wool is darker, and in toward the pelt it is like the hair on a maltese cat. There is a tuft of hair on the breast between the fore legs, similar to that of a calf. The legs are hairy and the wool is slightly streaked with hair. The mouth is dark inside, and larger and firmer looking than that of a lamb, and the tail is frequently thrown over the back after the manner of a calf.

They are both ewe lambs. These indications, to an experienced breeder, are of themselves sufficient to prove the authenticity of the story regarding their strange birth. There is a strong likelihood of their growing to a large size, and on both their heads there are dark spots, indicating a possibility of horns. They are at present as large as ordinary year-old lambs.

The cow is an ordinary, common-grade red cow, without any presumptions to pedigree. She is kept in the next stall to the lambs and munches away quite contentedly.

The calf, which was born shortly after the lambs, is also in the group, but it has not the slightest claim to distinction, further than the fact that it is brother to the lambs. All four are healthy and vigorous looking.

A story is told of the famous English Admiral, Sir Sydney Smith, whose ship, the "Antelope," in a terrible storm in the North Sea, was driven among the rocks. Sir Sydney summoned his officers to the cabin.

"Gentlemen, you know our condition. We are driving on the breakers. I acknowledge that I can do nothing more. If any of you can make a suggestion, now is the time."

There was unbroken silence.

"Then there is nothing to be done but to await our fate." He touched the bell. "Pirrae, bring up the coffee."

A story came from Switzerland a year ago of a mountain guide, whose name was not preserved. He, with two others, was leading a party over one of the most precipitous passes of the higher Alps. The men, as usual, were tied to each other by a long rope.

As they scaled the wall of ice they slipped on the edge of a frightful chasm. This man was at the end of the rope. Without his weight there was a chance for the others to regain their footing; with it there was none.

He cast a glance down at the dark abyss, filled with fathomless snows, then drew his knife from his belt, saying quietly to the man next him:

"Tell mother how it was, Jose."

He cut the rope and fell, never to be seen by mortal man again.—Chicago Times.

Speak well of your town. If the residents of a place, those having vital interests in its prosperity, cannot say a good word for it, what must be the impression of strangers? Sitting around and grumbling never made a living for anybody, nor will it add to the prosperity of the community in which he lives. A town is just what its inhabitants make it. A power cannot rise higher than its source. If each does what he can and encourages his neighbor to do the same, there is no doubt but that it will prosper.—Woodland Herald.

The Oriental Woman.

It is rather a curious reflection that in those countries where women's rights are most completely non-existent, there the specially womanly duties of women are the most grossly neglected. Travelers in Egypt, for instance, tell us that when the bells call the hour of prayer every man stops whatever work he is engaged in and prostrates himself to Allah. No woman takes any notice of the sound. She is too low in the scale of humanity to make her tribute to the Almighty worthy of acceptance. She ranks in this respect almost with the brute creation. She is not withdrawn from her domestic duties by the claims of religion upon her time and thoughts. And yet the same travelers tell us that one of the horrors of Egyptian life is the fearful neglect from which the children suffer. Ophthalmia and various kinds of blindness are, of course, very prevalent, although death relieves an enormously large proportion of the children from their sufferings. Three out of every five children who are born die during infancy, and of those who survive one in every twenty is blind. This is being "thoroughly masculine" with a vengeance, and points an instructive moral to the consequences upon the character of women of the denial of liberty, education and responsibility. The harem life of Oriental ladies of high rank is dull and vacuous to the last degree. They play with their jewels, eat sweetmeats and smoke pipes, and thus their day passes. If their children are ill they are hopelessly bewildered and utterly unable to take care of them. They cling with touching reverence to any average English or American woman who may happen to visit them, and implore her aid in doing the simplest kind of nursing and mothering for the ailing children. Nothing astonishes Oriental women more than the position of women in England. A Chinese mandarin has lately published his views on this subject. Women, he says, are even helped at meals before men; in his own country the men are helped first, and when they have quite finished, if anything is left the women are allowed to have it. Another Eastern, Seyd Ahmed Kalin, was amazed to find that the servant girl who waited upon him in his lodgings in London, could read and write; and he recorded his deliberate opinion that the little scrub in a London lodging, "compelled to work as a maid servant for her living," was in reality superior in nearly all respects to Indian ladies of the highest rank. "Such," he adds solemnly, "is the effect of education."—The Fortnightly Review.

"It is a noticeable fact," said a famous linguist "that with the exception of the Russians, Americans have greater facility for learning and speaking foreign languages with correctness and fluency than any other nation. An Englishman seldom, if ever, learns to speak any other language than his own. Educated Germans usually speak English well, but French never. Frenchmen seldom accomplish either German or English. Italians and Spaniards always speak French well, English rarely and German never. I have often heard American girls who spoke French charmingly and murdered their own language, and I have met Americans to whom all foreign languages remained forever a sealed book. Greek would be as easy for them to speak as French. A specimen of this class recently translated 'Ris de vern a la Financiere'—a very good dish by the way—as 'smiles of veal at the house of the female banker'; and another, wishing to be very French, said of Mr. Dion Boucicault that 'he traveled a la prince, and always took his cunesier (pronounced as spelled) with him.'"

In Stanford, Conn., two children attended service at the church of which the Rev. Mr. Vail is pastor. Mr. Vail repeated the words: "There is nowhere, no place that God is not." In an audible whisper Pauline said to her brother: "He don't know about it, does he? but I'll tell him after church." Just as the preacher descended the pulpit steps a breathless little figure caught hold of him and said pantingly, "You don't know about God, Mr. Vail, an' I must tell you. He isn't everywhere like you think he is, 'cause the bible says: 'God is not in the thoughts of the wicked.' That is why he don't always get into me, but I'm going to try to be very good this week so he'll come." And as Mr. Vail took the bright-eyed little one into his arms she added naively: "You don't know everything, do you, Mr. Vail?"

The first bridges were of wood, and the earliest of which we have any account was built in Rome 500 B. C. The next was erected by Julius Caesar for the passage of his army across the Rhine. Trajan's great bridge over the Danube, 4,770 feet long, was made of timber, with stone piers. The Romans also built the first stone bridge, which crossed the Tiber. A Chinese one mentioned by Kirchen was made of chains, supporting a roadway 830 feet in length, was built A. D. 65, and is still to be seen. The first large iron bridge was erected over the Severn in 1877. The age of railways has brought a remarkable development in this branch of engineering, especially in the construction of bridges of iron and steel.

A Tough Baby.

The only pair of lungs that didn't make a noise when the train from Providence pulled out of the handsome depot at Brayton's Point yesterday morning belonged to a baby. The mother placed the child on a seat and while she was arranging her bonnet the offspring took occasion to disappear through a window. Everybody bewailed the fate of that infant. Its parent lay down on the floor in a faint, passengers groaned, and a brakeman with admirable presence of mind gave the bell cord a yank. The engine came to a standstill, and one of the hands walked back a couple of blocks. He found the baby sitting contentedly in a mud-puddle, taking in the scenery and playing with its feet. The mother was so overcome that she could not continue her journey.—Providence Journal.

Few shall miss thee, friend, when thou,
For a month in dust hath lain;
Skillful hand and anxious brow,
Tongue of wisdom, busy brain—
All thou wert shall be forgot,
And thy place shall know thee not.

Eugene Moore, of Waukegan, Fla., killed 500 alligators this season.

There were 14,900 divorces in the United States during the last twenty-five years caused by drunkenness.

This is said to be Dr. William Hammond's recipe for a good complexion: Never stand when you can sit; never sit when you can lie down, and never think except from necessity.

An Austrian physician says that nine times out of ten headache can be instantly cured by swallowing a spoonful of salt dissolved in a quantity of water sufficient to enable the sufferer to drink it. It is said to be both quick and effectual.

It is not generally known that the custom of keeping birthdays is many thousand years old. It is recorded in the fortieth chapter of Genesis, twentieth verse; "And it came to pass the third day, which was Pharaoh's birthday, that he made a feast unto all his servants."

The bamboo tree does not blossom until it attains its thirtieth year, when it produces seed profusely and then dies. It is said that a famine was prevented in India in 1812 by a sudden flowering of the bamboo trees, where 50,000 people resorted to the jungles to gather the seed for food.

Judge Borden, of New Bedford, Mass., has refused naturalization to a saloon-keeper, who was known to have knowingly sold liquor to an intemperate man, contrary to law. On this ground he claims that the man is not a person of good moral character, and consequently unfit for citizenship.

"Lost time," said the teacher, solemnly, "is lost forever." "So is anything else that you lose," said the new boy. "Oh, no," said the teacher; "you may lose anything else and find it again!" "Then 'tain't lost," said the new boy; and somehow the teacher did not know how to go on with the conversation. And yet he had been warned against that very boy.

The ambassadors to Germany from the Sultan of Mandara have had a lively time in Berlin. Bismarck gave them a pleasant reception at Wilhelmstrasse Palace. He presented the dusky diplomats with bracelets, and in turn they gave him a magnificent spear sent to him by their Sultan. After indulging in wine and beer the negroes executed a war dance in the Prince's parlor. They broke several pieces of furniture, but were readily forgiven. They were much impressed by the stature of Bismarck, who towered above their tallest representative.

The Duke of Portland is the luckiest man in England. When he was born the chances against his ever holding his present title were very great. But he became a peer very early in life, and his income is sufficient to keep a whole multitude of wolves from the door. His racing stable consists of only sixteen horses, but he has won the Derby two years in succession, and this season he will probably carry off the leading three and four year old events. He is as fortunate in love as in other ways, and is madly devoted to six feet of handsome English girlhood.

Somerville Journal: When a girl holds her breath a moment and then says sweetly, "Oh, no, smoking is not at all disagreeable to me, Mr. Price," you may be sure Mr. Price is not at all disagreeable to her, whether smoking is or not.

Disastrous Fires.

Vancouver, W. T., applied to Portland for assistance yesterday morning to subdue a fire. The firemen returned and reported that four blocks of wooden structures were destroyed, the loss being about $75,000.

There were two fires during the night, believed to be of incendiary origin. At 11 o'clock a watchman near the old Catholic church, about half a mile from the business center of the town, discovered flames in the rains. According to his statement, flames burst up like wildfire, amid smoke heavy with the odor of burning petroleum. The old and historic structure, built in the regime of the Hudson Bay Company, had been abandoned for about three years. By 1:30 nothing was left of the old Mission, and the firemen returned to their quarters and the citizens to their homes. Shortly after, the same watchman saw other flames bursting in the rear of the bakery of Myers & Stros, on the east side of Main street, near High. Later the people were aroused by the severe fire which swept through the business center. The property destroyed consisted of stables, saloons, butcher-shops, barber-shops, restaurants, etc.

The loss, amounting to about $80,000, will fall mainly upon the poorer classes of shopkeepers, a number of whom have lost their all. One large family escaped without even shoes or stockings. There will be some suffering, but outside help will hardly be required.

A Baseball Trust.

A syndicate of the wealthy men of Sacramento has been formed, having for its object the advancement of our national game. They have leased the grounds on the southeast corner of Tenth and H streets, where they are to be seen every evening in practice. Opposing teams are made up from this syndicate of wealth and culture, and more real, solid enjoyment is to be had in witnessing one of their exciting contests than could be obtained in a dozen league games. Flint and Cox, Hickman and McFadden constitute the respective batteries. Lorenz, Wachhorst, John Funston, L. C. Chandler, Emy Dual, Eli Mayo, Major Ormsby and Editor Larkin make up a strong infield. The short-stop work of Chandler and Mayo is the feature of the games. The positions of the outfield are ably filled by some of the wealthiest members of the syndicate. The cry of the "glass pud in" man is growing too numerous, though, on the block. Official scorer, Major W. A. Anderson; umpire, Master Hassett; official crank, Tom Clark.

The pottery works at Lincoln employ 125 men.

A committee from the First Regiment is inspecting locations for a summer camp.

A rich strike at Red Point, Placer county, is reported to the Argus. From a candle box of gravel 18 ounces of gold were washed. This was taken from the ground two feet above the bedrock.

At Stockton yesterday afternoon another fire started in the grain fields of Roberts' Island. Judging by the flame and smoke as seen from that city it threatens to be very destructive.

Nicholas Foley, who murdered Mrs. Pomeroy Clark, at Elgin, Nebraska, was yesterday morning taken from the Deputy Sheriff who captured him, and hanged to a bridge near the scene of his crime.

Seventy miners are entombed in a pit at Newcastle, England, and rescue is doubtful. The disaster was caused by carelessness. A miner entered the shaft with an unprotected lamp and the fire-damp exploded.

The following appointments were announced to-day. John L. Stevens, of Maine; Minister to the Hawaiian Islands; George Money, of Tennessee, Minister to Paraguay and Uruguay; John Martin, of Crawford, O., Consul-General at St. Petersburg.

The first step taken by the Catholic church of this country toward elevating colored men to the priesthood for missionary work among their own race was the admission yesterday of Charles Randolph Uncles to the lower ecclesiastical orders, preparatory to entering the priesthood.

At Fort Bragg a fire originated in the White House Hotel yesterday morning, and for a time it looked as if the town were doomed to destruction again, as it was two years ago. However, as there was no wind, the flames were subdued with a loss of only a few hundred dollars.

At Rockton, S. C., Andy Caldwell, a negro, on Friday, overpowered a white woman in a forest and committed an outrageous assault. A young girl who witnessed the crime, fired upon Caldwell, dangerously wounding him. Caldwell was arrested, but lynchers took him from the Sheriff and shot him to death.

The large manufacturers of queensware and china, including those of New Jersey, West Virginia and Ohio, are endeavoring to form a trust. The leading pottery operators of the country have been in consultation in this city for a number of days. All that is lacking now is a plan which will secure the cooperation of all concerns in the line of trade affected.

Occasionally our courts have strict and severe rules concerning the granting of divorces, and will not grant a decree to either party except on the strongest of grounds. The sanctity of the marital relation might be urged in justification of such stringent requirements. It is well known that in the Catholic faith divorces are not tolerated, but a more liberal, and, indeed, humane idea, pervades the Protestant doctrines.

It is a cruel exaction that would compel the continuance of the marital relation, when it is apparent that the parties can no longer live happily or in peace together, no matter what may be the cause of their differences. Their life, under such circumstances, is one of perpetual discord, jarring and quarreling, which sets a bad example to their children and to the world. Better far in such cases that the chancellor should enter his decree of separation. We often hear it stated that our divorce laws are too lax, and that the courts grant decrees upon very slight showings. This is not true. The laws are strict and designate the causes, and, as a matter of fact, the majority of the courts are rather inclined to exact very conclusive proofs of the grounds enumerated in the code before they will grant a decree. On several occasions in this city divorces have been denied, when the court has been satisfied that the parties would have been much better off if they could have been separated by the judgment of the court. Judge McFarland used to have a sensible as well as happy manner of disposing of such cases. When he satisfied himself, from the evidence, that there was no longer any chance for the reconciliation of the parties, he would, in his particularly emphatic way, dissolve the irksome bonds and let the parties go free. There are divorce proceedings that serve to debauch the morals of a community by dragging before the public, through the courts, vile depravity, and bitter and revengeful acts. It is such as these that pollute the moral atmosphere. The division of property and custody of children are the causes that underlie most of these cases. What viler exhibition could be imagined than the recent divorce proceedings where a United States Senator was forced to appeal to the courts to cleanse his household? Courts should use a very large amount of common sense mixed in with the law in dealing with all divorce proceedings.

One of the strange commentaries on the condition in the Southern States is the fact that no man who was loyal to the Union can become a public officer of any importance. All the States have governors who either fought for or aided the rebellion. The following have rebel governors: Arkansas, James P. Eagle; Alabama, Thomas Seay; Virginia, Fitzhugh Lee; North Carolina, D. G. Fowle; South Carolina, John P. Richardson; Georgia, John B. Gordon; Florida, Frank P. Flemming; Tennessee, Robert L. Taylor; Mississippi, Robert Lowry; Louisiana, Francis T. Nicholls; Texas, Lawrence S. Ross. There are several other States which tried very hard to enlist themselves under the Confederate cause, and which rendered all the aid and comfort possible in that direction, but were prevented from joining the Confederacy, and in these States three have governors who fought against the nation. These are Delaware, Benjamin T. Biggs; Maryland, Elihu E. Jackson; Kentucky, Simon B. Buckner. You will find each and all of these governors very active members of the Democratic organization, and with never a good word for the Union cause, or for those who fought to preserve the Union. They have the same hatred now towards the "Northern hirelings" that they had during the rebellion. There is no genuine patriotism there, if we are to take lessons from their manner of conducting affairs. The professions of adherence to the Union is only on the surface. We had a little illustration of their patriotism from old Jubal Early—he of the famed lottery schemes—and it discloses the impossibility for these people, under their present feelings, to be patriotic, for on every important occasion there are mutterings of abuse of those north of Mason and Dixon's line. You do not find these men making campaigns in the South under the patriotic fervor of "Old Glory." But appeals are made to the Southern heart on the lost Confederate cause. It is said that Fitzhugh Lee rode through Virginia firing the Southern heart in a Confederate uniform and making red hot rebel speeches. Such a feeling as this so deeply engendered in the hearts of the past generation will make it impossible to have a genuine patriotic spirit there until the rising generation takes their place with a more sensible feeling toward their Northern brethren.

To-morrow will be the anniversary of one of the greatest battles of modern times—the famous battle of Gettysburg. July 1st, 1863, the great battle commenced between the advance of General Lee's army, about 20,000, against General Reynolds, who was in command of about 8,000. This struggle lasted all day, when relief came through Generals Barlow and Schurz. The battle was renewed on the 2d, and continued all day the 3d of July. General Reynolds, the real hero of the battle, was killed during the first day in his memorable defense, and before General Howard could afford him relief from the terrific charges against his brave little army. General Meade was the commanding general of the Union forces, and has generally been accredited with the victory. The rebel forces were under command of General Lee, and amounted to 90,000, and the Union army about 60,000. The rebel losses were estimated at 5,500 killed, 21,000 wounded, 9,000 prisoners, and 4,000 stragglers and deserters. The Union loss was 4,000 killed, over 13,000 wounded, and 4,000 prisoners. Two hundred and fifty pieces of artillery on the rebel side, and two hundred on the Union side were in use during the battle. On the Union side, Generals Reynolds, Weed and Zook were killed, and Barlow, Barnes, Butterfield, Doubleday, Gibbon, Graham, Hancock, Sickles and Warren wounded. The rebel loss was more severe. Generals Armistead, Barkdale, Garnett, Pender, Pettigrew and Semmes were killed, and Heath, Hood, Johnson, Kemper and Tremble wounded. In this battle were engaged Generals Longstreet, Hill, Early, Ewell, Stuart, Slocum, Howard, Hayes, Smith, Buford, Schurz, Barlow, Kilpatrick, Wright, Perry, Wilcox, Wolford, Pickett, Wadsworth, Robinson, Steinwehr, Webb and Williams, including those mentioned as killed and wounded. Colonel E. D. Baker's "California Brigade," attached to Hancock's corps, took part in the three days' battles, meeting and repulsing the terrible charge made by Pickett's rebel division on Cemetery Ridge. It was not in the decree of the Fates that Baker should take part, as he was killed at Ball's Bluff early in the war. The words of President Lincoln in dedicating this ground are fresh in the minds and hearts of all Americans: "We cannot consecrate nor hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will but little note, nor long remember, what we say here; but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated to the unfinished work, which they have thus far nobly carried on."

In the great labor contest that is always going on, woman enters at a disadvantage, and that disadvantage continues throughout. The avenues of employment are closed against her merely because she is a woman, and when she does find employment it is sometimes at beggarly wages. The man who cleans the gutters can command better wages than many women of intelligence and ability can obtain. There are hundreds of women and girls in our cities who are forced to work for a living. Very frequently they are of more than ordinary education and intelligence, yet they can rarely make it avail them. It is not, after all, to be greatly wondered at that so many young women fall by the wayside. Their position is one of great danger, and only the possession of sound moral principles can carry them through with safety. They have to fight single-handed against a host of foes. There is prejudice against employing them in positions for which they are best fitted. They are paid much less wages than men, but their board bills are just as high. They must dress at least decently; that cannot be done without money. They are compelled to live in more expensive places than men, because a man can live anywhere without affecting his reputation, whilst a woman has to exercise the greatest discretion in this respect. So of employment; a man can do anything on a push without hurting his future, but for a woman to do certain work, though it be honorable and honestly done, would injure her entire future prospects. At every step she is surrounded by temptations to exchange her life of weary work and worry for one the dazzle of which in the present perhaps hides the certain misery that lies in the future. When to all this is added the fact that masculine labor is organizing in some quarters to elbow women out of the labor field entirely, and that a large class of women, less intelligent and refined than the working women themselves, regard contemptuously the young woman who "works for her living," the way of the girl who seeks to maintain herself by the labor of her hands or brain, rather than eat the bread of dependence or shame, is sufficiently hard.

There has been much attention paid in late years to the subject of the employment of women, and much has been done to dignify labor in that respect. The people of California are fast coming to the conclusion that the girl or woman who works for her living, either to make herself independent or to assist in the support of her family, is entitled to commendation. The great difficulty has been, and is, that the avenues for the employment of women are few, yet it would seem that there are many vocations for which they are peculiarly adapted. Of late years, in the cities, many have been employed as shorthand amanuenses and type-writer operatives. In that line of business they are successful. Experience has taught employers that in that business women are more accurate and tasty in their work than men or boys. It is an avocation for which a woman of an average education can fit herself in a very short time, and the demands for this class of labor are constantly increasing.

There is perhaps no subject upon which there is so much popular misconception as that of shorthand. It is generally understood to be a very difficult art to acquire. It is if one designs to adopt it as a profession, for then he must be able to write at least 150 words a minute, be conversant with law, and have such varied general information as will enable him to understand what a witness or a speaker is talking about instantly. He has no time to inform himself when at work. However, to acquire a knowledge of shorthand sufficient to enable one to take dictation of letters and work incident to an office or business house, is a very small matter, and one easy of accomplishment. Ordinarily the requirement is not more than 80 words a minute. The great difficulty, however, in learning shorthand is that as a rule, the text-books contain too much matter, and a character of matter that confuses rather than enlightens the pupil. It is to be hoped that some practical shorthand reporter will write a treatise on that art designed for those who propose to use it for dictation purposes. Such a book could be prepared, from which a thorough knowledge of the principles of the art could be acquired in a very few months, and then the question of the speed of writing would depend on the application of the student. So far as typewriting is concerned, all the knowledge necessary can be acquired in a month.

The indications are that the anniversary celebration next Thursday, in this city, will be the most perfect in its details of any that has occurred heretofore. Credit is justly due to the public-spirited gentlemen who performed the labor in the matter; particularly are they entitled to commendation that they have been successful in the face of apparently insurmountable barriers. We venture the assertion that within the last year there have been raised for charitable and patriotic objects in the city and county of Sacramento no less than $64,000. The appalling disaster at Johnstown justly called for a heavy contribution from us; the conflagration at Seattle followed; local charities demanded and received attention. Undertaking and carrying to successful accomplishment the celebration of the Fourth of July on the heels of these heavy drains, and under these adverse circumstances, should be recognized as meritorious.

The death of General Simon Cameron, which occurred on the 26th instant, at Lancaster, Pennsylvania, removes from earth the last member of the original cabinet of President Lincoln. When Lincoln commenced his administration he appointed William H. Seward, Secretary of State; Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury; Simon Cameron, Secretary of War; Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy; Caleb B. Smith, Secretary of the Interior; Montgomery Blair, Postmaster-General; Edward Bates, Attorney-General. Seward died at Auburn, N. Y., October 10, 1872, at the age of 71; Chase at New York, May 7, 1873, at the age of 64; Welles at Hartford, Conn., February, 11, 1878, at the age of 76; Smith at Indianapolis, January 7, 1864, at the age of 56; Blair at Silver Springs, Md., July 27, 1883, at the age of 70; and Bates at St. Louis, March 25, 1869, at the age of 76. General Cameron had passed his 90th year. The only person who was connected with the administration of President Lincoln at the beginning of his first term who lives is Vice President Hannibal Hamlin, who is now at the age of 80. Edwin M. Stanton, who succeeded Cameron as Secretary of War, died at Washington, December 24, 1869, at the age of 55.

Since the advent of this journal many kindly notices have been made of it by the press. Because of their number and the space required to properly acknowledge them, we have been compelled to give them only our silent appreciation. The following, from the Georgetown Gazette, comes at a later day—as if judgment had been reserved—and is more in the line of an indorsement than of professional courtesy, therefore we reprint it:

THEMIS, published at Sacramento, is now eighteen weeks old, and bids fair to become an influential veteran in the journalistic field. It is a paper which will win the esteem of the better class of society who are opposed to the debauching influence of the sensational press. THEMIS possesses much merit.

Georgia has a hen-egg that seems to be magnetized. It will not lie on the side or on the large end, but when it is put down it immediately turns up on the small end. It makes no difference in what position it is placed, it will turn until it stands on the small end.

The following is from the pen of Mrs. Katherine Verner, nee Katherine Welch, the actress and poetess, and published for the first time in To-Day:

SLANDER.

Like the serpent, it enters both garden and hall;
From the peasant to ruler its slime is o'er all;
The bravest of hearts from its presence will cower,
As from winter's bleak frost shrinks the fresh, blooming flower;
Youth, sex, age, and station, it visits the same,
Leaving only the wreck of the fairest of fame.
No matter how noble, how true, or how pure,
It strikes all alike, and its aim is as sure
As the sharp pointed sword, or the bullet's dread mark.
Like the thief and assassin, it works in the dark;
But the thief can be traced, and the blood-reeking hand
Will sooner or later be brought to the stand
Where stern justice sits with her unerring scales,
In the broad light of truth, whose might never fails;
But what justice can trace the slanderer's tongue
Round which friendship's garb is but too often flung?
That in armor of love and hypocrisy's shield
Its dark wand of ruin more surely can wield.
Yet of all the black crimes of which mortals can boast—
This surely of all deserves punishment most—
'Tis more cruel than death, although no power can save
The fairest and best from the mouldering grave—
For oblivion's wings softly wave o'er the sod,
While the heart is at rest and the soul with its God.

EARLY AMERICAN VISITORS.

The first Americans who visited California, coming from the north or east, were Jedediah S. Smith, of New York, and men under his leadership, in the interests of the Rocky Mountain Fur Company. That company had its headquarters in the Rocky Mountains, receiving their supplies from St. Louis, Gen. Ashley, manager, directing its affairs from St. Louis.

In the spring of 1826, Mr. Smith, with about twenty-five men employed by his company, left their winter quarters to make a spring and fall hunt. He traveled westerly to the sources of Green river, following its course to its junction with Grand river, forming the Colorado. He traveled thence westerly to the Sierra Nevada mountains, which mountains he crossed, descending into the great valley of the San Joaquin and Sacramento, at or near its southeastern extremity. He devoted the balance of the season to exploring the sources of the San Joaquin, wintering in that valley, but at what point he made his permanent camp is not known. He, however, prosecuted his business with success, catching large quantities of beaver on the streams flowing into Tulare lake and on the Calaveras and Mokelumne rivers.

At the close of his spring hunt, at the beginning of summer, Mr. Smith, with his assistants, started to return to his headquarters in the Rocky Mountains. The road chosen by him was by the way of the American river, following that river high into the Sierras. But the obstacles he encountered, were so great that he retraced his steps and fixed his camp at or near the present town of Brighton, then a wilderness with deer and antelopes, herds of elk, and never before trod by the foot of civilized man. Here he fixed the summer quarters for his company, in which he left all his men but three.

Mr. Smith, selecting favorite trusty horses and mules, with these picked men started for the summer camp of his company on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains. After incredible hardships he reached the camp, organized a party, and, taking such supplies as were needed for his men, started on a return trip to California. He traveled south and west and reached the Colorado river in the district inhabited by the Mohave Indians. That tribe professed friendship and offered to assist him in crossing the Colorado.

The Indians proved treacherous, and whilst the party were crossing managed to kill all except Mr. Smith and two other men, who escaped, and after great toil and suffering arrived at the Mission San Gabriel, in California. Having no passports they were there arrested by Mexican military authorities.

After some delay Mr. Smith and his two companions were allowed to proceed to Monterey to appear before General Echandia, then governor. Here Mr. Smith found a friend at court in the person of Captain John Cooper, an American, then resident at the capital, and through his influence Mr. Smith and companions were permitted to procure supplies. These supplies he obtained partly on credit and partly for furs to be forwarded from his camp on the American river, and hiring a few men he proceeded to his camp in the valley of the Sacramento.

Here he found all well. Mr. Smith forwarded the furs to Monterey, as agreed, and broke camp. He traveled up the Sacramento river, making a successful hunt, passed Mount Shasta and turned west to the coast, which he followed to the Umpqua river. The Indians in that quarter pretended friendship. Mr. Smith procured a canoe to explore that river for a crossing, and, while away from his camp with two or three men in the canoe, the camp was attacked by Indians and all but one man killed. Mr. Smith and but three men escaped. They made for fort Vancouver, traveled by night and lay hid by day, finally reaching that fort in the summer of 1829.

Tragedians and Peanuts.

"That's so," sorrowfully said Nat Goodwin to a friend on Broadway Sunday afternoon, "I got the coldest kind of indifferent recognition from Lawrence Barrett recently because of a story that appeared in The World, wherein I was described, with Charles Reed, as personating an interview which Charlie had with Mr. Barrett while the latter was in company with Edwin Booth. We met in San Francisco on the street in the usual way, and Lawrence recognized me coldly—nothing more. Then I knew that confounded story had done its work. No more stories for me," concluded Nat, with a sad smile.

"You don't mean that novelette in which you made Mr. Barrett say that he thought 'Brass Monkeys were scarce,' do you?" asked Francis Wilson.

"That's the romance I refer to," calmly replied Nat.

"Well," continued Wilson, "I read that story and roared with laughter over it. It was worth the slight you received." And Francis broke out into a Persian laugh.

Nat looked at him for a moment quietly, and then remarked: "That may be, Frank; but you are only a comedian. Now, if you were a tragedian you couldn't see a bit of fun in it. Ah!" continued Nat, thoughtfully, "I'm beginning to entertain different views of things of late."

"Oh, I wouldn't take a little thing like that to heart," remarked Mr. Wilson, consolingly. "Tragedians are much the same as other men."

"I'm not so sure of that," was the reply.

"But I know it," emphasized Wilson, "and I'll prove it to you. A few nights ago, when Booth and Barrett were in town, they came up to the Broadway Theater to see 'The Oolah.' Well, they got there late. No boxes and no seats down stairs, so they had to go up to the balcony."

"Merciful powers! Booth and Barrett in the balcony looking at comic opera. That's not legitimate. Impossible!"

"Season your admiration, Nathaniel," continued Wilson, with an Oriental wave of his hand. "Up they went to the balcony, and there they sat the performance through!"

"You amaze me."

"Hold on! Next day the Irish lady, who does the sweeping in the theater, made her appearance in the business office and said: 'Begor! This is the quarest theayter I ever wurked in. I thought it was a first-class house until now, and the people who eat paynuts were sint to the gallery. Why, there's paynut shells enough up there in the first balcony to throw the Bowery theayter pit in the ould days into the shade.' And where do you think those peanut shells were, Nat?" asked Frank Wilson.

"Where?"

"Just under the seats Booth and Barret occupied."

"That settles it! Frank, if that story ever gets in print, mind it's yours. I want no part of it. Count me out. Good evening!"—N. Y. World.

Old Egyptian Encaustic Process.

In the older Egyptian mummies the face of the outer casing is usually modeled in relief, in a purely conventional way, but in this latest form of burial under the Roman empire a portrait of the deceased was painted on a very thin piece of wood and then fixed over the dead face. It is very remarkable to find such fine coloring and skillful drawing in the work of this late date, which must have been turned out of an ordinary undertaker's workshop. The portraits, both male and female, are most vivid and lifelike; the ladies are mostly dressed in a purple garment, and the men in white, with a red orphrey. The modeling of the flesh is very skillful, and in some cases the coloring reminds one of the Venetian school from its rich depth of tone.

A special point of interest about these paintings is their technical execution in the hot wax, or encaustic process, as it was called. The pigments were mixed with melted wax, and then fixed in their place by holding a charcoal brazier near the surface of the painting, as is described by Vitruvius. The somewhat lumpy impasto of the surface is due to the hardening of the melted wax when the brush touched the cold surface of the panel, and, owing to the non-absorbent nature of the wood, the subsequent application of heat was not able to drive the wax below the surface, as was the case with encaustic painting upon stucco. One of these portraits is noticeable from its ornamental framing with a flowing pattern, formed by pressing wooden stamps upon soft stucco, which was afterward gilt, a process exactly like that which was so often used to decorate mediæval pictures on panel, especially retables, or ancone, as the Venetians called them.—Saturday Review.

The Stage.

[Under this caption will appear a fair and impartial criticism of the drama, actors, music, and all noteworthy matters pertaining to the stage.]

Jed Prouty will be presented here July 8 and 9, at the Metropolitan.

The Wife will shortly be presented here by the Lyceum Theater Company.

Thatcher, Primrose and West Minstrels will occupy the boards July 26 and 27.

At an early date we will have the great spectacular drama, The Twelve Temptations.

Etelka Gerster, the once famous prima donna, now lives secluded from the world in a villa situated on the summit of a mountain near the city of Bologna.

Mattie Earle declined Lewis Morrison's offer for leading business with him this season in San Francisco. She needs a vacation and prefers to take it now.

Mrs. M. L. Berrell has been re-engaged for next season for Margaret Mather's tour. She is now enjoying her summer rest in her cottage at Rockaway Beach.

Marie Wainwright is in London and has been entertained by Henry Irving and Wilson Barrett. It is said she has been asked to play Twelfth Night in London in 1890.

The Fairy's Well, an Irish drama, by Con. T. Murphy, will be given at the Clunie Opera House on Monday and Tuesday evenings, July 1 and 2, by W. H. Power's company.

A living man with three legs, a living man with two months, and a living man turning into stone are among the many curiosities announced at the Grand Museum, New York City.

Ex-Basso—The singers of to-day have no strength, I assure you, children. I sang once in Vienna so hard that a gentleman in the parquet became deaf, and he never was sorry for it.—Fliegende Blätter.

"Ray Templeton seems to be making a reputation." The inference might be that the gay actress can manufacture a reputation to replace the one she has lost. But it seems to be the same old reputation.

Frederick Warde will be his own manager next season. His repertoire will include The Mountebank, Virginius, Gaston Cadol, Damon and Pythias, and Richard III. L. F. Rand, a well-known heavy man, will join Mr. Warde's forces next season.

Mrs. Charles Doremus, author of The Circus Rider, has written a play for Jessie Bonstelle, who will tempt fortune next season in a starring tour. The title of the play is The Little General, and is said to be on a par with The Circus Rider and other clever works by the same author.

The success of those creations of fancy like the Tin Soldier, Brass Monkey and Parlor Match has prompted an army of play writers to produce similar literary monstrosities, which will be inflicted on the public next season. They are arranged just to make people laugh, and of the variety order, made up of acts suitable for some specialty artist. It is likely these new farce comedies, so called, will have a brief run.

Playwright to Manager—My judgment is that this play will go. Nine men are killed in the first act, there are three elopements in the second, and in the third the heroine wears a costume that would do credit to a Hottentot on a midsummer day. Manager (cynically)—All old, sir; all old. Playwright (triumphantly)—Exactly what I said. So in the fourth act I made the hero propose exactly as men propose in real life. Nothing like it on any stage.

Crates, the Athenian actor, was the first to introduce drunken scenes and drunkards on the stage. This was in the fifth century before the Christian era. Crates was the author of a number of comedies. He acted in the comedies of Cratinus. His pieces are distinguished by the fact that they did not depend on political reference, and that he introduced drunkards on the stage, a class of characters which never appeared before, but common at a later period.

The senseless custom that has grown upon the management of our local theaters in not raising the curtain until 8:30—sometimes later—should at once be abrogated. On Friday night, at the Clunie Opera House, the curtain did not rise until nearly 9 o'clock. The performance was Peck's Bad Boy, and strange to relate the house was packed from "pit to dome" to witness a foolish mass of rubbish. The orchestra consisted of a lone pianist. The audience of the gallery was disgustingly noisy—even brutal—in its demonstrations; youths were engaged in smoking cigarettes in various parts of the gallery and parquet, and nothing was done by the management or police to preserve order and afford protection to the respectable element in the audience. In no well-regulated theater under proper management would such practices be tolerated.

A delicious story, for the accuracy of which we can vouch (writes one of our correspondents), is "going around," anent Mr. Irving's and Miss Ellen Terry's visit to Sandringham. It appears that all was going beautifully with the Merchant of Venice—Her Majesty seated in front, stick in hand and all attention—until Mrs. Terry's time came as "Portia" to deliver her great speech about "Mercy." We all know how she does it, advancing toward the Jew and making a marked and peculiar pause before delivering her oration. The kind queen—who was all attention, and had probably been carefully instructed in her own youth by the Duchess of Kent or her good governess in Shakespeare's "tit-bits"—was eagerly following the gifted actress, but quite mistook the pause for some sudden failure of memory. Fancy Ellen being overawed by Her Majesty into forgetting her part! So the queen began prompting her quite low. "The quality of mercy," etc., but Miss Terry did not take the cue, and Her Majesty then repeated rather more loudly and encouraging, "The quality of mercy is not strained." This was almost too much for Miss Terry, but, with a violent effort to suppress her twinkling merriment, she controlled herself and gracefully accepted her cue from our gracious sovereign. Good Queen Bess, we know, used to shout at the preachers and correct them openly in theology when they preached before her, but this is probably the first time that an actress has ever been honored by having a queen and empress as stage prompter.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Mattie Vickers, who is an excellent actress in her line, and, it may be added, has few superiors, if any, in soubrette, has failed to draw even moderate audiences. When a good actress does not enlist the favor of the public, we must look for a reason. It has become very common for artists to draw around them in their plays very poor support, thus to allow the "star" to shine brighter. This is one of the mistakes and one of the causes for a lack of public patronage and appreciation. It is possible, and indeed probable, that the critical public has wearied of the very diaphanous farce-comedy which has been the rage for several years, and the appetite calls for something more substantial than this mass of absurd situations, created only to develop some particular specialty feature or features. Two years ago Jacquine, or Cherub, or Kathy, would have filled the theaters, because at that time this line of farce-comedy was eagerly devoured by the theater-going public. It seems now that their course is about run, and that something new must be invented, or return to the legitimate drama. There is yet another reason for a lack of patronage in this city to migratory combinations. While it is claimed by the so-called "show" people that Sacramento is a very poor "show town," the fact remains that Sacramento people are about the most critical and best judges of genuine art that can be found in the United States. Our people are quick to discern real merit and true genius, and are as prompt to realize the want of talent or an imposition as any community. For years past there has been great imposition upon the public by the management of our theaters, and a trace of this remains with us. What is meant is, that when some company that has received public recognition in New York or elsewhere appears here, the management at once runs the prices up to double the ordinary rates. The theater-going people submit to this because they desire to witness a first-class performance. Now, when another company is advertised at 25 and 50 cents or 50 and 75 cents admission, the critical public assumes—as it has a right to assume—that the entertainment is not in any sense a good one. This conclusion is evolved from the fact that the management exacts double for all such entertainments. There are first-class artists on the road, such as Phoebe Davis and Jos. R. Grismer, Mattie Vickers, and many others, that do not receive a proper recognition, because they play for popular and reasonable prices of admission, while some dramatic abortion like Little Lord Fauntleroy fills the house at extortionate rates. It seems that managers could remedy this disproportionate public opinion and patronage if a due regard for the public is considered.

This is the season when Emerson and Thoreau used to take their long walks around Walden Lake, the latter taking a small piece of cake in his side pocket, from which he took a pinch for lunch, while Emerson took a piece of pie in his tail pocket, which he ate after frequently sitting down on it. As a pie-eater Emerson's record has probably never yet been beaten.

"Edgar Saltus, the author, is getting fat and stocky. He is going to spend the summer at Narragansett Pier, where Edgar Fawcett will keep him company." In the next column appeared the assertion that "Edgar Saltus, the novelist, will soon set out for Italy." John Fiske, the historian, who now turns the scales at 248, was very slender as a youth, and at the time of his mar-

The Ariel, an annual college publication of the University of Vermont, at the commencement exercises this year, was dedicated to the Hon. Frederick Billings, a liberal friend and patron of the University. Frederick Billings was one of the California argonauts and resided in San Francisco. He was a member of the law firm of Halleck, Peachy & Billings, and had large property interests in this city. H. W. Halleck was military secretary of this territory, and afterward, during the early part of the rebellion, in command of the United States army. A. C. Peachy was a member of the last constitutional convention, and has since deceased.

Alexander Pope, the poet, writing of Prior's Chloe, says: "Everybody knew what a wretch this woman was;" and adds on another occasion, "Prior was not a right good man; he used to bury himself for whole days and nights together with this poor, mean creature, and often drank hard." "As drunk as Chloe" has since become proverbial. It is said of Prior, the poet, that after having spent the evening with Oxford, Bolingbroke, Pope and Swift, he would go and smoke a pipe and drink a bottle of ale with a common soldier and his wife in Long Acre before he went to bed. This woman, the soldier's wife—some say a cobbler's wife—was the beauty whom he celebrated under the name of Chloe.

James Gillray was, in the early part of this century, the greatest caricaturist of that age. Gillray's character affords a sad example of the reckless imprudence that too frequently accompanies talent and genius. For many years he resided in the house of his publisher, Mrs. Humphrey, by whom he was liberally supplied with every indulgence. During this time he produced nearly all of his most celebrated works, which were bought up with unparalleled eagerness over all parts of Europe. Though under an engagement not to work for any other publisher, yet so great was his insatiable desire for strong liquors, that he often etched plates for unscrupulous persons, cleverly disguising his style and handling. The last of his works is dated 1811. In that year he sank into a state in which imbecility was only enlivened by delirium, and which continued till his death.

The editor of the Burlington Hawkeye says Shakespeare was familiar with baseball. He says the game was certainly "quite en vogue" in the times of Shakespeare. There are numerous allusions to it in his plays. In the fourth act of "Hamlet," first scene, the king, for example, makes allusion to a trying curve by saying: "And hit the woundless air." Again, King Henry V., evidently proud of a piece of good fielding, joyously exclaims (act i, scene ii), "And so I catch the fly." And who cannot, that knows anything about the importance of the final run, comprehend the anguish in this exclamation of Guiderius in Cybeline: "Is he at home?" There is some proof, also, that the language used then was even more choice than the technical terms used to-day. The umpire, for instance, did not utter the trivial "play ball," but started the game with the more classic, "To the field, to the field; get ye hence." It is strange, however, that the matter has not been discovered ere this.

Samuel M. Peck belongs to the younger school of American poets. We find the following little gem which was recently published:

MIGNON.

Across the gloom the gray moth speeds
To taste the midnight brew,
The drowsy lilies tell their beads
On rosaries of dew.

The stars seem kind,
And e'en the wind
Hath pity for my woes.
Ah, must I sue in vain, ma belle?
Say no, Mignon, say no!

Ere long the dawn will come to break
The web of darkness through;
Let not my heart unanswered ache
That beats alone for you.
Your casement ope
And bid me hope;
Give me one smile to bless,
A word will ease my pain, ma belle;
Say yes, Mignon, say yes!

There is something exquisitely delicate in these lines, and if Mignon did not give an approval to both questions she must have been possessed of an adamant heart.

Professional Chat.

The following anecdote is said to have occurred in Missouri, but it will have a perfect application to some of our local cases: It is very well to desire the good opinion of our fellow men, but it is dangerous to angle for compliments. A very conceited attorney made a "spread eagle" speech in Court, and meeting the Judge next day, he said to him: "Good morning, Judge; good morning, sir!" What did you think of my effort yesterday?" "Ah," said the Judge, "you are the young gentleman who addressed the jury in my Court. Yes, yes! Well, sir; your speech reminded me of a little yellow dog I have at home. When he wants to lie down he starts and makes a circle, and round and round he goes, half a dozen times or more, and then lies down at the very place he started from."

Some of the decrees of Zeleneus, though wise, were mild, not to say jocose. He was a close student of human nature, and he certainly had unexpected ways of carrying out his ideas. His citizens—the ladies especially—were becoming too luxurious. He was urged to follow the example of neighboring States, and enact penalties for excessive show. These, he saw, had not always answered their end. Fines and confiscations might be defied, because they carried with them no element of shame. He adopted a different course: He enacted that no woman of condition should appear in public with more than one attendant, unless she were drunk. That she should not quit the city at night, unless for the purpose of keeping a secret assignation. That she should wear no gold spangles nor embroidery on her garments, unless it were her intention to lead an abandoned life. It is needless to say that these edicts had an effect that fines and penalties failed to accomplish. Following this principle, Henry IV, of France, issued an edict limiting the use of hair nets to shameless women, "such," it was added, "being below our legislative care."

THE NEW CATHEDRAL.

Dedication Exercises To-Day--History of the Church in Sacramento.

To-day will be one marked in the history of the city of Sacramento. The imposing Cathedral of the Blessed Sacrament will be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. There will be mass in the temporary church at 5, 5:30, 6, 6:30, 7, 7:30, 8 and 9 o'clock this morning. The dedication services in the new cathedral will commence at 10 A. M., and will be followed by a pontifical high mass. The Celebrant will be Right Rev. Bishop Manogue; Deacon, Father Grace; sub-Deacon, Father Haupts; Assistant Priest, Very Rev. Father Lynch; Master of Ceremonies, Father Hynes, of Woodland. The sermon will be delivered by Rev. Father Bouchard, the eloquent priest who preached the sermon on the occasion of the laying of the corner-stone on June 12, 1887. The Young Men's Institute of this city, Marysville and Nevada will attend, and also the Italian Military Company. The latter organization will be headed by the Artillery Band, and will fire a salute of guns at the "Gloria" and at the "Elevation." At 7 P. M. there will be pontifical vespers, when the dome will be illuminated. The music has been carefully arranged, and W. H. Kinross will officiate as Choir Master and Musical Director. Rehearsals have been going on for some time past, and the choir will number about thirty voices. At the morning service "Farmer's Mass" in B flat will be rendered in its entirety, and for the Offertory an "Ave Maria" for soprano and tenor solos, with a chorus composed expressly for this occasion and dedicated to the Bishop by Mr. Kinross. The vesper service for the evening is an exceedingly pretty one, by Generali, and the Offertory will be "O, Salutaris Hostia," an arrangement of Holden's bass solo, "Resurrection." The soloists at both services will be: Mrs. Coppersmith and Mrs. Kinross, sopranos; Misses Pullman, Sheehan, Scaulker, altos; Messrs. R. Cohn and H. Blair, tenors, and Mr. Genshlea and Mr. Kinross, bass.

The following ladies and gentlemen will constitute the choir on this occasion, and it is expected that the music will exceed in grandeur and beauty anything ever heard on the Pacific Coast:

Sopranos—Mrs. Coppersmith, Mrs. Kinross, Misses Kaibel, Day, Harrigan, Phipps, and Desmond.

Altos—Misses Sheehan, Pullman, Platt, Scaniker, Nesmith, and Mrs. Renfro.

Tenors—H. Blair, R. Cohn, J. Cook, J. Desmond, C. C. Morse, W. Crowe, M. R. Beard, H. Bodefelt, and J. Garzoli.

Basses—J. Genshlea, H. Crocker, V. S. McClatchey, W. E. Osborn, M. Hageman, W. E. Lovdal, and R. Dunster.

Organist, Mrs. Brand; Musical Director, W. H. Kinross.

In relation to the history of the establishment of the Catholic church in this city we quote the following from a publication entitled "Sacramento Illustrated," and issued by Barber & Baker in 1855. We believe it to be the most authentic that has been published:

"August 7th, 1850, Rev. Augustine P. Anderson, O. S. D., a native of New Jersey, and for several years on the Missions in Ohio, arrived in this city and commenced the organization of the Catholics. A building was procured on L street between Fifth and Sixth, which answered as a temporary chapel until the church, corner of K and Seventh street, was built. During the memorable season of cholera, Father Anderson labored unceasingly. He visited the cholera hospital several times daily, sought out the poor and afflicted in their uncomfortable tents, administered all the consolation and relief within his power, and procured medical aid for such as had no one to care for them. Overcome and exhausted by excessive labors, he contracted typhoid fever and fell a victim to his self-sacrificing charity and zeal. He died November 26th, 1850. At this time the frame of the new church had been raised and the roof partially completed, but during a severe gale the building was blown down and many of the timbers broken into fragments. Rev. John Ingoldsby succeeded Rev. A. P. Anderson in the pastoral charge of Sacramento, and completed the church, which was burnt in the great fire of November 2, 1852. This church was 25 feet front by seventy-five feet deep and neatly lined and papered inside. After the fire, the frame building now standing on the corner of Seventh street and Oak avenue was built and used as a place of worship, until the completion of the basement story of the present brick church. Rev. John Quinn succeeded Rev. J. Ingoldsby in April 1853. The corner stone of the brick church was laid by Archbishop Alemany, October 18, 1854, and service was performed in the basement, on the Christmas following. The dimensions are sixty feet front by one hundred feet deep. The basement is nine and one half feet in the clear, and cost $10,500. The building will probably be completed during the coming year, at an estimated cost of $50,000. At present, Rev. John Quinn is pastor, and Rev. Dr. Slattery assistant. The number of Catholics in this city is estimated at from two to three thousand."

We are unable to ascertain where the first meeting was held for the organization of the church, but the building, referred to on L street stood on the north side and about the middle of the block between Fifth and Sixth. The church, however, never owned any real estate in that block, and doubtless the building was on leased land. On October 28, 1850, a deed was executed by ex-Governor Peter H. Burnett to Anthony Langlois, in trust for the use of the Roman Catholic Bishop of California, for lot 8, between J and K, and Seventh and Eighth streets, and on August 17th, 1867, Governor Burnett deeded lot 7 in the same block to Archbishop Alemany. The wooden church referred to on Seventh street stood in the rear of the lot where the brick church was erected, and at the corner of the alley. When the brick church was completed the wooden structure was removed to the block that has since been occupied by the Sisters, and it is still standing there. The bell used in the brick church at Seventh and K, and which is now in the new cathedral, arrived here July 13, 1859; it weighs 2,079 pounds. Beside Father Anderson, two others of the officiating priests have died here: Rev. Thomas Crimmin and Rev. James S. Cotter. Father Crimmin was stricken with paralysis at the parsonage adjoining St. Rose Church January 20, 1867, and died within a few hours. Father Cotter died June 18, 1868. Speaking of Father Cotter, the Union of the 19th said that "he was a man of ability, loved and respected for his many virtues by all who knew him, whether of his own religious faith or otherwise, and that the announcement of his death fell upon his friends with suddenness, he having been on the street the day before, and was generally considered to be in the enjoyment of vigorous health." He was a native of Doneraile, County Cork, Ireland, and was educated at All Hallows College, Dublin. He was appointed pastor of St. Rose's Church in 1865, and at the time of his death was in his thirty-fourth year. His funeral took place on the 20th, and was one of the largest that has occurred in this city. The pall-bearers were N. Greene Curtis, John S. Barrett, W. A. McWilliams and G. P. Cummings, of Sacramento, and other gentlemen from San Francisco and Virginia City.

Judge Curtis is still a citizen of Sacramento whom everybody knows. Barrett held several official positions here. McWilliams was County Auditor and Clerk of the Board of Supervisors. Cummings was the architect of the K and Seventh street church, and for a time was architect of the State Capitol.

The Grass Valley Tidings says: "Over sixty persons have signified their intention to join Saturday night's excursion to Sacramento under the auspices of the local branch of the Young Men's Institute. Sunday morning at 10 o'clock the magnificent new cathedral will be dedicated. Delegations from all over the State will be present. The Nevada City Institute will be represented. The Grass Valleyans expect to number one hundred, and contemplate taking the Independent Band with them."

A Sad Occurrence.

Yesterday afternoon about half past 1 or 2 o'clock Thanie Jefford, aged about 13, son of T. Jefford; Herbert Cook, aged about 10, son of T. H. Cook; and a son of John Miller went out on a dirt team to the point where the earth is being excavated for the filling in of East Capitol Park, north of the north levee. Jefford and Cook went in swimming in a pond formed by an excavation, about thirty feet square. The marginal depths were shallow, but in the middle was a hole about fifteen feet deep. Both the lads were drowned. Miller returned to the city, but the families of the poor boys were not notified of their drowning until about half past 5 o'clock. William Cook, a brother of one of the unfortunate lads, and Bing C. Brier, accompanied by young Miller, drove to the scene. They found the clothes of the boys on the margin of the pond. Brier succeeded, after several dives, in recovering the body of young Jefford, and a colored youth named Vassels recovered the body of young Cook. The bodies were taken to the Coroner's office, and an inquest will be held to-morrow morning. This is indeed a sad occurrence.

We are in receipt of a copy of the annual weather review of this State, as prepared by Sergeant Barwick for the State Agricultural Society. The pamphlet is for free distribution, and any one desiring a copy can get one by applying to the Signal Service Observer in this city. The book is filled with weather items from all portions of the State, and gives the general climatological condition of the Pacific Slope from San Diego to Redding. The Sergeant is enthusiastic in favor of a State Weather Service. Certainly California ought to be in favor of such a service.

Dr. F. F. Tebbetts' valuable roadster died yesterday. The animal was attacked by some unknown complaint, and moaned all Friday night just like a human being.

Banner and Flag for the Pioneers.

Friday night the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers was presented by the wives and daughters of its members with a magnificent banner, and by the wives of the honorary members with a beautiful national flag—one of the first, perhaps, that has been manufactured that carries stars emblematical of the new States to be admitted. The original banner of the society was presented by Miss Virginia Bigler, on behalf of the ladies many years ago. Miss Bigler was the daughter of ex-Governor John Bigler, and with her father has been dead for several years. The banner was presented Friday night by Mrs. David S. Ross, and the flag by Mrs. R. J. Merkley. On one side of the banner is an emblem of the society, with a bird's-eye view of the Sacramento valley, and the inscription: "Instituted January 27, 1854." On the reverse side is a picture of the original Sutter's Fort, with an immigrant wagon in the foreground. Remarks were made by Hon. N. Greene Curtis, George W. Chesley and Hon. H. M. LaRue. Miss Hattie Sims read an original poem, and Prof. Hand rendered vocal selections. After all present had partaken of refreshments, dancing was inaugurated and kept up for several hours.

At a meeting of the Pioneers held last night the following resolution, offered by W. H. Luther, was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, We, the Sacramento Society of California Pioneers were last evening (June 28th) presented by the pioneer wives and daughters with a beautiful and costly banner, and by the wives of our honorary members with a beautiful flag, therefore be it

Resolved, That the thanks of this society be returned to Mesdames Dr. H. W. Nelson, E. D. Shirland, R. J. Merkley and W. H. Luther, who acted as a committee for the ladies in getting up these beautiful presents and fine collation; and also to all those who so kindly aided them in their efforts, thereby adding to the reputation of the Pioneers in having the happiest reunion on the Pacific coast.

The Catholic Ladies.

The Catholic Ladies' Relief Society of this Diocese held its first meeting after the annual election, at Y. M. I. Hall last evening. There was a large attendance, and many visiting members and invited guests were present from the surrounding cities. The occasion was a pleasant one, and the programme of song, music, and recitation such as only ladies could arrange.

The past officers submitted their reports; and the report of Miss Emma A. Hughes, the Past President, was exhaustive.

The following ladies were present from Marysville: Miss Lizzie Kertchum, Miss M. Lowery, Miss M. Tyrrell, Miss T. Tyrrell, Miss M. McGrath, and Miss Weber; and Miss Mary Burns of Verona, Sutter county; also many gentlemen of the Y. M. I.

The following are the present officers of the Society: Past President, Emma A. Hughes; President, Mrs. Nettie L. Leake; Senior Vice-President, Miss Eliza Wittenbrock; Junior Vice-President, Mrs. Rosa Moore; Recording Secretary, Miss May F. Talbot; Financial Secretary, Miss Addie L. Hughes; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Nellie Ogden; Treasurer, Miss Nettie Hopley; Board of Directors, Mrs. Ella Ryan, Mrs. Thos. Fox, Mrs. Graham, Misses Snuddy, Fitzgerald, E. Ryan, E. Gorman, C. Cadogan, and Fogarty.

Following all were refreshments of ice cream, cake and lemonade, passed by the ladies, when all enjoyed an impromptu dance, and then came the finale, "Good Night, Lady," in chorus, to end the happy occasion.

State Board of Health.

The case of the People ex rel Dr. J. R. Laine vs. Dr. G. G. Tyrrell was argued yesterday before Judge Van Fleet, on a demurrer to the complaint. It is a case of interest. A. L. Hart appeared for Dr. Laine, and Clinton L. White for Dr. Tyrrell. The action is brought to determine the right of the respective parties to hold the office of member of the State Board of Health. Dr. Tyrrell was appointed in November, 1884, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Dr. F. W. Hatch. It is conceded that Dr. Tyrrell was appointed during the recess of the Legislature, and has not since been reappointed. Governor Waterman, believing that a vacancy existed, appointed Dr. Laine to the office. Section 1003 of the Political Code provides that an appointee to fill a vacancy shall only hold the office until the expiration of the succeeding session of the Legislature; and it is contended by the plaintiff that the appointment of Dr. Tyrrell expired at the termination of the session of the Legislature of 1885, and that it was the duty of the Governor to appoint. The defendant contends that, under Section 878 of the same code, Dr. Tyrrell is required to exercise the duties of the office until his successor be appointed and qualified, and that to appoint it requires the joint action of the Executive and the Senate. The matter was taken under advisement by the Court.

BACKWARD, STILL BACKWARD.

Sacramento the Target Bearers Once Again.

The usual Saturday crowd attended the game, at Haight-street Park yesterday afternoon between the Sacramentos and Oakland. Oakland went first to the bat when Umpire Sheridan called game at three o'clock, and O'Neill their first batter, hit for three cushions, although given credit for a three-bagger it was really an error of Goodenoughs who clearly misjudged the ball. Dailey's single scored O'Neill. Hardie went to first on balls, stole second and also scored on Dailey's hit. Dailey scored on two passed balls by Roxburg, and Long's single, netting three runs for the Oakland in their half of the first.

Sacramento did not score until the second, when Roxburg scored on his single, a passed ball, and Newbert's safe drive over second. Oakland added two more runs in the second. Wilson's base on balls, Coughlin's hit, O'Neill's single, and Hardie's fly out to Goodenough.

Sacramento also scored two runs in their half of the third, hits by McSorley and Veach, an error of Coughlin's, and a wild pitch. Oakland piled up six runs in the third, on two errors by Newbert, a double, two singles, a missed third strike, and Hardie's terrific drive over second for a single. Again in the fourth, a safe hit by McDonald, errors by Krehmeyer and Veach, and Hardie's and Dailey's singles gave the Oakland three more runs.

Sacramento scored two runs in the fifth, Goodenough's base on balls, a missed third strike, an error of Dailey's gave them the runs. These were all the runs scored by Sacramento throughout the game, while the Oakland kept continually running up their score until it came to double figures. In the sixth, six singles, a triple by Long, Dailey's fly out to the outfield, and a base on balls netted them six runs. Long's double, Dooley's single, two stolen bases, and McDonald's long fly to right in the seventh, sent two more runners across the plate. In the eighth, singles by O'Neill, Hardie and Dailey, a double, and stolen base by Long, gave the Oakland three more runs. This concluded the run-getting of the Oakland, and the Colonel's heavy hitting aggregation walked away with an easy victory.

The game, though in no way interesting, kept the audience together until the last man was out. They seemed pleased with the heavy slugging, and the contending teams were often greeted with rounds of applause for a difficult stop or catch.

NOTES.

Roxburg had his finger hurt early in the game, and retired to the bench. His back-stop work was below the average, being credited with five passed balls.

McSorley's injured leg is much to his disadvantage.

Burke complained of his arm before yesterday's game, which probably accounts for the many hits of the Oakland.

The Stocktons defeated the San Franciscoes at Stockton yesterday, by a score of seven to one.

Considerable interest was taken by machinists in a car-load of lap-welded, steel, corrugated boiler furnaces of very fine workmanship that leave this city to-day by the steamer Apache for the Navy Yard at Mare Island. The tubes are five in number, each 9 feet long, 4 feet in diameter, and $\frac{5}{8}$ of an inch in thickness. The circular depressions in the sheets are 2 inches deep and 6 apart. By the use of this style of furnaces stay bolts in furnaces are largely dispensed with. They are from Brooklyn, N. Y.

There was another "lay off" of employees in the Southern Pacific Railroad Shops in this city last night. It is stated that about three hundred men were discharged for want of work.

Faith in the Future.

During the past two years over $1,000,000 have been expended by the Southern Pacific Company, on improvements in the railroad shops in Sacramento. Yesterday two more bloom furnaces that have been in course of construction for the past few months were fired up for the first time. They will be used for the purpose of making car-wheel axles. The surplus heat, after leaving the furnaces, passes under and through two return-flue horizontal boilers, twelve feet long, and four feet in diameter. These boilers generate steam for working a two-ton drop hammer, and other machinery. The blast from the fires is supplied from a No. 8 Sturtevant centrifugal fan, which, together with the lifting cranes, boilers and other attachments, are all entirely new plant.

Chinaman Robbed.

A Chinese peddler was robbed yesterday at 10th and P streets by two men of a silver watch and $10 in silver dollars. The watch was given back to him, but the men left with the money. He thought he could recognize the men who robbed him, and the officer accompanied him to the scene of the robbery and while passing down the street in the vicinity, the officer encountered "Butch" Van Tine and another man. The Chinaman claimed that they were the parties who stopped him, as he could recognize Van Tine by a scar upon his face. He said that a dollar piece, smooth on one side and blacked upon the other, had been taken from him, and he could easily prove that Van Tine was the man if he had the money on his person. Both men were brought to the police station, and there a search of Van Tine's pockets revealed the tell tale coin. Van Tine appeared in Court this morning, but the case was continued. The other man was discharged, the evidence against him being insufficient to detain him.
